TWO MEN ROB J. E. PLUNKETT AND EMPLOYER

Peterborough Man Working in Ottawa Held Up Last Night.

THIEVES GET $300.

Enter Drug Store at Closing Time and Drive Occupants Into Dispensary.

OTTAWA, Aug. 17 (Special to The Examiner).—John Elmer Plunkett of Peterborough, a medical student of Queen's niversity, employed in the A. F. Astley drug store here, together with Mr. Astley, was robbed at the point of a revolver by two daring bandits who entered the dispensary just before closing time last night.

At about 11.15 o'clock last night, just as Mr. Astley and Mr. Plunkett were about to close the store, the two men, about 30 years old, boldly entered, and without even ordering the two men to hold up their hands, backed them into the dispensary and robbed them of about $300 in cash Ordering them to lie down on the floor, face down, the two bandits went through their pockets, relieving Mr. Astley of $75 and Mr. Plunkett of $45. They then demanded that Mr. Astley open the safe, from which they extracted the rest of their booty. They also made off with an eighth of an ounce of cocaine and an eighth of an ounce of morphine.

Like Ordinary Customers

Both Mr. Astley and Mr. Plunkett declared that the two men walked into the shop like ordinary customers. "Without even ordering us to put up our hands they covered both of us with revolvers and herded us into the dispensary at the rear of the store," Mr. Plunkett said, adding that Mr. Astley was about to go outside the door and he himself was behind the counter when the bandits walked in.

"One of them was about half way across the shop when I noticed that he carried a gun," he continued. "He covered me first while the other man covered Mr. Astley. Holding the revolver against my stomach and holding his left hand over his face, he shouted, 'Get into the back, you,' and he pushed me in, ordering me to lie face downwards. The other bandit forced Mr. Astley into the dispensary in a like manner and ordered him to lie down also. They then went through our pockets. From Mr. Astley they took about $75 and from me about $45."

Mr. Astley declared that the men next ordered him to open the safe. "As I was still covered by a gun, there was nothing for me to do but comply with their demand," he said. "I was then ordered to show them where the narcotics were kept and it was there that they found the cocaine and morphine."

According to Mr. Plunkett while the bandit who was covering him was engaged in searching his pockets he was forced to uncover his face. At this time Mr. Plunkett made a quick turn in order to get a look at the man. "He struck me a blow on the side of the face, snarling, 'Don't look at me, you'."

While Mr. Astley was ordered to show one of the bandits around the store, the other kept guard over Mr. Plunkett, who was still lying face down on the floor of the dispensary. Mr. Plunkett declared, however, that he got a good look at the man and would be able to recognize him again in a thousand. The two bandits, after obtaining their loot, ordered their victims to remain lying down on the floor for twenty minutes while they made their getaway. They declared that they had a man standing in front of the shop watching every move they made. The two then calmly walked out of the store and made their escape.

Escaped in Car

"I am almost certain that they had a car," declared Mr. Plunkett, "for I heard an auto starting off just after the two hold-up men left the store."

Neither Mr. Astley nor Mr. Plunkett complied with the robbers' command to remain lying down for the prescribed twenty minues. Both sprang to their feet as soon as the two men left. They tried in vain on three different telephones in the store to get in touch with the police, but could not raise the operator. They then came to the conclusion that the men had cut the wires and hurried out by the rear door and went to a nearby telephone from where they informed the police of the holdup.

A squad of constables was rushed to the scene of the holdup, but were unable to find any trace of the bandits although a search was kept up all night. An early arrest is expected as a good description of the bandits was given to the police, who suspect that the men may be dope fiends who pillaged the store in order to get drugs.

The two bandits were extraordinarily lucky in making their escape as the store is situated in the middle of a busy residential section of the city. Throughout the entire ten minutes the bandits were in the shop no customers made their appearance and this is very unusual around that time of night.

Radio Stations Make Peace With Board

WASHINGTON, D.C., Aug. 17.—(Canadian Press). — Radio broadcasting stations which have been in danger of losing their licenses by reason of failure to stay on prescribed wave lengths were successful yesterday in making peace at least temporarily with the federal radio commission. Chairman Bullard announced that a 30 day period of grace had been granted all the offending stations, whose operators in most cases, declared that the failure was entirely due to mechanical errors or the difficulty in tuning their transmitters to the proper scale.

27 WITNESSES IN BEETON CASE

HEARING ON FRIDAY.

BARRIE, Aug. 17 (Canadian Press).—Police officers to-day were out in the surrounding countryside serving subponaes on the witnesses required for the preliminary hearings of the ten men arrested in this district, which open on Friday in police court here. Twenty-seven or more witnesses will be heard in connection with scores of charges of theft, receiving and perjury.

It was indicated to-day that if necessary a sitting would be held on Saturday to clear up the cases but that the Crown would vigorously oppose any motion by defence counsel to adjourn the cases.

Another Burglary.

BEETON, August 17 (Canadian Press).—Another burglary in the long list of depredations in this district was reported to-day when Miss M. Smart reported to the town constable that $2,200 in bonds are missing from her home near here. She had not looked at the bonds since July 1 and only to-day discovered their loss. The Provincial Police were notified and took over the case. Of the bonds, $1,700 were registered and $500 were bearer bonds.

CANADIAN LAWS ARE CRITICIZED

U. S. Senator Says Corporation Rules Good for Swindlers

EASILY BEATEN

NEW YORK, Aug. 17. — Former Senator Atlee Pomerene of Cleveland, special counsel for the Government in the prosecution of oil-fraud offenders, last night sharply criticized the corporation laws of Canada. Mr. Pomerene, who was at the Waldorf last night on his way to Europe with Mrs. Pomerene, said:

"If I wanted to put across a crooked deal and stand a good chance of covering my tracks, I would take out a corporation charter in Canada. My experience as a Government investigator inclines me to the view that any one operating under such a charter stands a fair chance of beating the law. For instance, under a Canadan charter, a concern need not issue traceable stock certificates, but may issue so-called stock warrants, without serial numbers, and with no means of identifying the ownership of such paper. Such warrants can be negotiated with little fear of detection.

"I am speaking after a somewhat extended experience with the Continental Trading Company, Limited, of Canada, used by Harry M. Blackmer and Harry Sinclair and Henry Smith Osler in their dealings with ex-Secretary Fall in connection with oil leases."

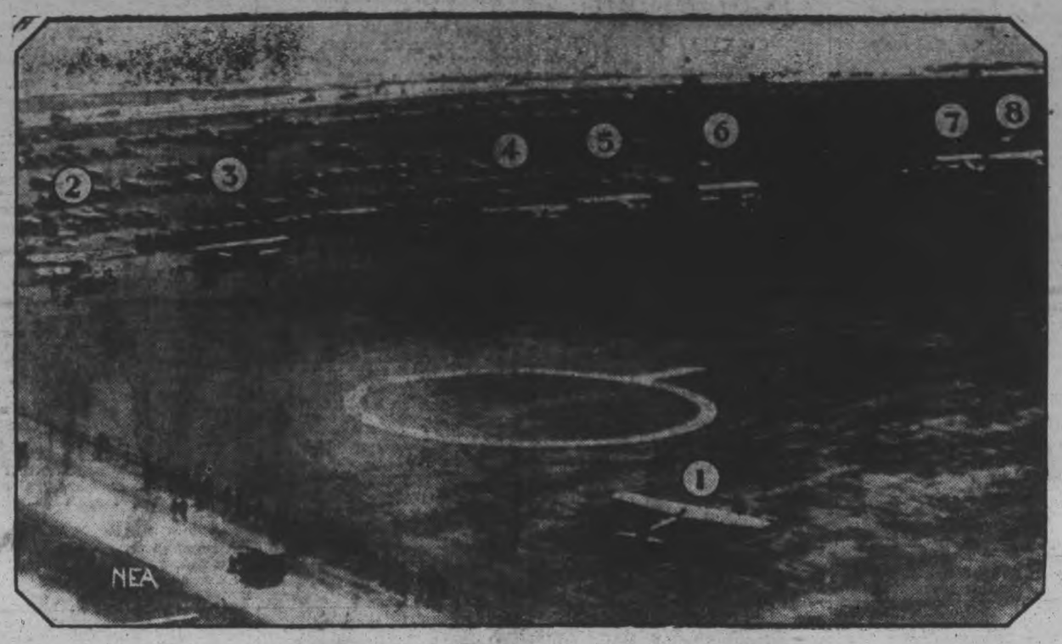
FULFORD ESTATE GIVEN TO CHILDREN

Mrs. Fulford Gives Homestead To Municipality. Playground.

BROCKVILLE, Ont., Aug. 17. — (Canadian Press). — The Fulford homestead on King Street West, the boyhood home of the late Hon. George T. Fulford, Senator, with the grounds surrounding it, has been presented to the municipality as a children's playground by Mrs. Fulford and has been accepted. Mrs. Fulford has also provided the sum of $2,500 with which to equip the premises as a playground.

Few women in the world follow a more unusual occupation than that of one woman in England who earns her living by tearing and twisting the fringes of the tartan plaids which are worn by certain Highland regiments of the British army.

WAITING FOR THE GUN IN THE PACIFIC DERBY



Here are eight entries in the San Francisco-Honolulu air derby, lined up on the field at Oakland, Calif., ready for the start. Number 1, in the foreground by the starting circle, is the plane flown by Jack Frost. The other planes are: No. 2, Art Goebel; No. 3, Auggie Pedlar; No. 4, Major Livingstone Irving; No. 5, Martin Jensen; No. 6, Lieutenant N. A. Goddard; No. 7, Charles W. Parkhurst; No. 8, Bennett Griffin. Planes 1, 2, 3 and 5 actually started on the flight.

Two Convicts Drop From Sight At Sing-Sing; Flood Lights Aid Guards In All-Night Watch

NEW YORK, August 17. — A grim game of hide-and-seek was being played on Monday evening between two prisoners and the entire staff of guards of Sing-Sing Prison. The two men had disappeared during the afternoon as completely as if they had been swallowed up. Acting Warden John Sheehy, in charge during the absence of Warden Lewis E. Lawes, was convinced that the men had not left the prison enclosure.

But a painstaking search covering every inch of the prison yards and the prison buildings failed to reveal any trace of the men or anything to show how they had hidden themselves. All guards were recalled from leaves and the prison staff settled down to the monotonous task of guarding the walls and exits so that the men could not get out.

Floodlights mounted on the walls made the prison yard a stage on which long black shadows danced whenever any one crossed. No even a cat could elude that searching glare. Guards, rifles in hand, paced the walls, and planned to continue to do so during the dreary dog-watch, from 10.30 p.m. until 6.30 a.m., when the prisones are all locked in cells and no watch is ordinarily maintained over the walls. This will continue until the men are found within the prison or until the officials are convinced that they have got outside.

The disappearance of the men indicated a leak which as yet is undiscovered. Three months ago Joseph Pioli, who was sentenced to life for shooting Bill Brennan, the pugilist, and George Walmale, a gunman, dropped out of sight. A watch over the walls and gates was maintained 24 hours a day for three weeks, but no trace of the men was found.

"WHERE WAS JOHN JINKS?" QUESTION OF HOUR IN IRELAND

National League Deputy Was in Dail Hour Before Vote Was Taken

ABSENCE SAVED COSGRAVE

Voted in Party Caucus to Uphold Labor Lack of Confidence Motion

LONDON, Aug. 17 (United Press).—John Jinks, a heavily-built, red-faced, happy-go-lucky west country Irishman, has leaped to fame through an act of abstention; he yesterday saved President Cosgrave of the Irish Free State from defeat by not turning up to vote with Capt. William Redmond, head of the National League group, after the latter had been assured of the unanimous support of all his followers.

To-day, Jinks' name fills the newspapers in Ireland, earning commendation or execration. The reason for his disappearance is not yet clear, but at any rate, he gave an element of comedy to the tense Irish situation.

Kidnapping Suggested.

In connection with Jinks' non-appearance at the time the vote was taken, Captain Redmond suggests that he may have been spirited away, declaring: "I sincerely hope he was not overcome by illness, but if he wasn't he must have been spirited away, as he voted an hour before the Dail met in favor of opposing the Government. It is certainly singular that when the test came he was absent. On such strange occurrences does the fate of Ireland depend."

Jinks keeps a public house in Sligo, where he was formerly Mayor. It is also reported that he has been kidnapped.

In Dail Before Vote.

LONDON, Aug. 17 (Canadian Press) —The Dublin correspondent of the Evening Star to-day makes a mystery of the failure of Deputy John Jinks to vote in yesterday's division in the Dail Eireann.

"Was Mr. John Jinks kidnapped?" is the caption over the Star's article. The correspondent says that Jinks, who is a member of Captain Redmond's National League party, supported the resolution to vote against the Government which was passed at the party caucus yesterday afternoon and was in his place in the Dail Eireann an hour before the vote was taken. After that, no one can recall seeing him.

Changed His Mind.

DUBLIN, Aug. 17 (Canadian Press) —Deputy John Jinks, of Sligo, who shot into fame through his unexpected failure to vote in yesterday's division in the Dail Eireann, with the result that the Cosgrave Government was retained in power, was declared by a Government informant to-day to have left the Chamber in consequence of a last moment change of mind.

Memorial Styles Change, Say Makers

WASHINGTON, Aug. 17. — (United Press. — It is no longer "tombstone." To be correct one must say "memorial," according to the National Memorial Craftsmen's Association in convention here. And like clothes, the Association declares, styles change also in graveyard markers. While doves, carved lambs, and clasped hands are quite passe, it is said because of the high price of stone carving, the appropriate moniker for 1927, is plain, simple and unostentatious.

BUSH FIRES ARE RAGING NEAR SUDBURY

Five Hundred Acres of Timber Totally Destroyed by Fires

SOME UNDER CONTROL

Careless Berry-Pickers Are Thought to Have Caused Indian Reserve Blaze

SUDBURY, Aug. 17.—Two bush fires of major proportions are raging in the vicinity of Walford and Webbwood, close to the western boundary of the Sudbury forest district. One, in Township 129, is out of control, with hundreds of acres of good second-growth timber burning. The other is in the Spanish River Indian Reserve, and is now being brought under control after a gang of thirty men have fought to exhaustion for four days.

Five hundred acres of timber have been totally or partially destroyed by this and smaller fires. A serious fire is still raging on East Rousse Island, Georgian Bay.

The fires follow a period of unprecedented hazard. Forty men have been engaged fighting the fire in Township 129, which broke out last Friday. It is believed to have been started by lightning during the heavy electrical storm of last Thursday evening. Careless berry-pickers are thought to have caused the Indian Reserve blaze.

Prof. Boltwood, Yale Scientist, a Suicide; Ionium Discoverer Despondent Over Illness

HANCOCK POINT, Me., August 17. — Professor Bertram B. Boltwood, discoverer of ionium radio activity, who has occupied the chair of Radio Chemistry at Yale University for seventeen years, shot himself to death with a rifle yesterday at the cottage of Professor William Hammond of Mount Holyoke College, where he has been a guest for a month and a half.

Professor Boltwood's body was found by a servant sent to arouse him for breakfast. A bullet in the head and an army rifle beside the bed told the story. Despondency over ill-health is assigned as the cause. Dr. T. J. Knowlton, Medical Examiner, gave an official verdict of suicide.

Early in the summer Professor Boltwood suffered a nervous collapse, and for some time was a patient at Dr. Driggs' Sanitarium. He came to Hancock Point on July 1. He told the Hammond family that he felt much better than usual.

Professor Boltwood, who was 57 years old last month, was born in Amherst, Mass. He was graduated from Sheffield Scientific School of Yale in 1890. In 1897 he obtained the degree of Doctor of Philosophy. He studied for several years in the University of Leipzic and Munich. He first joined the Yale Faculty in 1891, and after returning from abroad, became Assistant Professor of Physics in 1906, and in 1910 Professor of Radio Chemistry. From 1918 to 1924, he was also Acting Professor of Chemistry.

Professor Boltwood has translated several German scientific works and has been a contributor of many scientific journals. He was unmarried.

FOUR PLANES WELL ON WAY TO FINISH OF GREAT DERBY

Gobel Reports His Progress By Wireless—Others Seen From Ships.

DUE THIS AFTERNOON.

Crowds From Honolulu Theatres Go Straight To Field For Arrival at 7.30 a.m. There.

SAN FRANCISCO, Calif., August 17 (Canadian Press). — The trans-Pacific air racers soared on through the clouds to-day in the first great aviation Derby over the 2,400-mile course between the mainland and Honolulu. Less than a thousand miles of the journey was in front of at least one of the pilots, Art Goebel, early to-day. Two other contestants were sighted beyond the half-way mark by steamers. They were thought to be the planes Aloha, piloted by Martin Jensen and Golden Eagle, driven by Jack Frost.

Official observers believed the fourth racer, Miss Doran, in which Miss Mildred Doran is a passenger, was following Goebel's trail. Miss Doran followed the pace setters after losing an hour and a half through a forced landing after the take-off yesterday.

GOEBEL REPORTS PROGRESS.

HONOLULU, August 17 (Canadian Press). — The Radio Club at 4.21 a.m. intercepted a message from Art Goebel inn the Woolaroc, giving the monoplane's position as 200 miles from Honolulu. "All well aboard," the message said.

Honolulu time is two and a half hours earlier than San Francisco time. The four planes, if they make the 2,400-mile course in the 22 hours the aviators said they expected, would arrive about 7.30 a.m., Honolulu time, or 10 a.m. San Francisco time (1 p.m. eastern standard time).

A later message picked up from Goebel gave his position as approximately 620 miles from Honolulu. The

Bankrupt's Law Suit Is Sold At Auction

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa, Aug. 17 (United Press).—An $1,870 law suit was publicly auctioned Tuesday and sold for $52.50—the first time here that a man has paid real money to embroil himself in a court action. The suit was that of a bankrupt. He had claimed $1,870 from an insurance company for damages to his automobile in an accident.

The bankrupt's interest in the suit was auctioned for the benefit of his creditors, as he did not have money enough to fight it.

H. COLMER IS BETTER TO-DAY

ESCAPE MIRACULOUS.

OTTAWA, Aug. 17.—(Special.) — Although still suffering intense pain as a result of his 90-foot fall from a cliff at Rockcliff Park on Monday night, Herbert Colmer, of Peterborough, is somewhat improved, officials at the Ottawa General Hospital stated this afternoon. An X-ray examination taken yesterday reveals that his injuries are not as serious as at first thought, although he will be confined to bed for some time.

Physicians are astonished that he did not receive terrible wounds, if not death, as a result of his fall. His escape is almost miraculous as at one point he struck a stone ledge which, instead of tearing him as would be expected, broke his descent. No one as yet knows what Colmer was doing at the summit of the cliff.

Congress Condemns Soviet Propaganda

STOCKHOLM, Sweden, Aug. 17 (Canadian Press).—The Co-operative Congress yesterday adopted a resolution condemning methods of propaganda employed by Soviets, as being entirely opposed to the rules of International Co-operative Alliance, in twelfth annual session with thirty-five nations represented.

Another resolution adopted affirmed adherence of the Congress to principles approved at the International Economic Conference, notably suppression of customs barriers.

A Russian proposal for co-operation with the Amsterdam and Moscow International was rejected, gaining support only from Russian, Czecho-Slovakian and Belgian delegates. Russian motion to make Russian the fourth official language of the Alliance was also rejected. Russian delegates complained bitterly that the Congress had rejected all of their proposals.

Monoplane Oklahoma, Piloted by Ben Griffen, is First to Start

"AIR KING" DISQUALIFIED

Miss Mildred Doran Forced to Return, Makes Second Start

Municipal Airport, Oakland, Calif., Aug. 17 (AP).—The dream of the aerial world since its beginning, a transoceanic race, was on at noon yesterday when Bennett Griffin, flying the monoplane, Oklahoma, hopped off from the Oakland airport at 12 o'clock on a non-stop flight to Honolulu in the Dole flight for $35,000 in prize money.

Norman Goddard's monoplane, El Encanto, crashed as it was attempting to get off the runway, approximately 4,800 feet from the start, and smashed one hundred feet to the right. Neither of the occupants of the plane was injured.

Both Goddard and his navigator climbed out of the cockpit and smilingly waved their hands to the tremendous throngs gathered around. Their plane was completely turned around after its disastrous smash-up, facing northwest and turned partly on one side. The left wing was demolished and the motor partly buried in the ground.

Lieutenant K. C. Hawkins, the navigator, said the plane crashed because they could not get the rudder into action.

The "Air King," formerly the City of Peoria, was ruled out of the Dole flight to Honolulu by the starting committee at 11.15 a.m. yesterday, Captain O. W. Saunders, chairman of the flight committee, announced. Charles Parkhurst is the pilot.

"The plane is not equipped to carry sufficient gasoline, and cannot pass our requirements," he stated.

"The "Oklahoma" passed through the Golden Gate at 12.20 p.m. A rumor that the Oklahoma later crashed in the Bay is being investigated.

Captain Livingston Irving made a run for the take-off place at 12.09 in Pabco Flier. He went into the air, but was forced down at the end of the take-off. He successfully brought his machine to a halt at almost the end of the mile and a quarter stretch where it ends in marshland and water.

Apparently his load, over a ton of gasoline, was too much for his engine. He waited by his plane for a tug to be towed back to the starting point to take last place in the take-off order by agreement of the starting committee.

Five of the nine entries in the air derby to Honolulu were winging their way out across the Pacific shortly afterwards.

The "Miss Doran," with Miss Mildred Doran as passenger, turned back after developing motor trouble. Those in the air were: Oklahoma, piloted by Bennett Griffin; Oklahoma City; Golden Eagle, piloted by Jack Frost, New York; Aloha, piloted by Arthur C. Goebel, Hollywood; Dallas Spirit, piloted by Captain W. P. Erwin, Dallas.

FORCED TO RETURN.

Municipal Airport, Oakland, Calif., Aug. 17 (C. P.).—Four aeroplanes, one carrying a woman, were racing out over the Pacific Ocean toward Honolulu late yesterday in quest of fame and $35,000 in prize money offered by James D. Dole, of Honolulu, for the first trans-oceanic air derby in the history of aviation.

Miss Mildred Doran, the "flying school teacher" of Flint, Mich., in the biplane named for her, braved the 2,400 mile ocean stretch as a late starter after her plane had been forced to return to the airport due to engine trouble.

Replacement of spark-plugs and other hasty repairs delayed the plane more than an hour, but the school teacher, her pilot, J. "Auggy" Pedlar, and navigator, Vilas R. Knope, climbed into their seats and took the air safely on the second attempt.

The other three planes in the air, with a lead of about an hour and a half, were blessed with the good luck of beautiful take-offs. They were the Golden Eagle, piloted by Jack Frost of New York and navigated by Gordon Scott, Santa Monica; The Aloha, piloted by Martin Jensen, the only Honolulu entrant, navigated by Paul Schluter of San Francisco, and the Woolaroc, with Art Goebel of Hollywood, Calif., at the stick and William Davis, San Diego, naval air officer, navigating.

Two Planes Crash.

Two planes were sent crashing to earth because their wings would not lift the heavy cargo of gasoline on the take-off. They were the El Canto, the home-built monoplane of Lieut. Norman A. Goddard of San Diego, navigated by Lieut. K. C. Hawkins of San Diego, and the Pabco flier, the little orange and

HIGH STANDARD OF PAST YEARS IS MAINTAINED

88% Pass at Middle School Examinations at Campbellford

STAFF RETAINED

Principal and Teachers Look Forward to Coming Session

Campbellford High School has again maintained its high standard of former years. Eighty-eight per cent. of the papers tried were passed. This is very gratifying to the board, staff and pupils of the school.

The school is very fortunate in having the same staff for the coming year.

Judging from the splendid results achieved by the principal, E. H. Greig, B.A., and his capable staff, all students intending to attend Campbellford High School this fall may rest assured that they will receive all possible attention.

Second class honors: (66-74) II.
Third class honors (60-65) III.

Many Are Killed In Turkestan 'Quake

KOLAND, Turkestan, Aug 17 (Canadian Press). — Following nearly one hundred earth shocks in the region of Ferghana in which 34 persons are reported to have been killed and 72 injured, together with widespread property damage, looters seized the opportunity offered by the resulting panic and increased the terror of the people.

An anti-Soviet uprising, which was attributed to reactionaries who took advantage of the 'quake was supressed by Soviet troops, who placed the whole area under martial law.

CLOVER GROWS OVER NINE FEET

Fine Stocks on Exhibition at Warsaw—Harvesting Proceeding

DISTRICT CROP NEWS

WARSAW, Aug. 17.—There is on exhibition in Warsaw a stalk of sweet clover which measures nine feet, seven inches. It was grown by Allan McCracken.

Oats and barley are being rapidly harvested. Trees and shrubs are beginning to have a matured appearance, and birds are seen in groups on the telephone wires, usually one of the first signs of fall.

Good Harvesting.

KING'S WHARF, Aug. 17.—This last week has been a very good one for harvesting. The fall wheat, alsike and pea harvest is now in. The fall wheat in general is good, but those living near the lake report that the black birds have taken some of it, also the peas. The farmers here will have to quit growing peas on account of the black birds. The alsike is fair, but not so good as last year.

Rush of Work.

CAVAN, Aug. 17.—The harvest is coming in very fast. Much of the wheat is harvested. Peas and barley and some fields of oats are cut. Farmers are feeling the rush of work as help is not plentiful. Threshing machines are at work, many needing to thresh wheat or alsike or both to make room for the later grain.

Threshers Busy.

BAILIEBORO, Aug. 17.—The splendid weather this week has allowed farmers in this district to get most of the wheat and alsike under cover. The threshers have been busy all week threshing alsike. With the exception of a few crops, the yield in alsike is very poor, averaging from three to six bushels per acre.

Oats and barley are being cut and should yield well. Oats in some cases are exceptionally good.

There is a large acreage of peas in the district, and although the crop looks thin in some fields, it is expected that the yield will be at par with other years.

There is an abundance of pasture this year, due no doubt to the heavy rainfall throughout the summer. The second crop of alfalfa is growing rapidly and should be ready to cut around the last of the month. Farmers are realizing the value of this clover both for summer pasture and hay, and almost every farm can boast a field of alfalfa.

CHICAGO PACKER DIES IN LONDON

J. Ogden Armour, Wealthy Chicago Financier, Succumbs After Lingering Illness

LONDON, August 17. — Canadian Press. — Weakened by a siege of illness, the crisis of which he had passed safely, J. Ogden Armour, the wealthy Chicago packer, died at the Carlton Hotel late yesterday.

Mrs. Armour, Mrs. John J. Mitchell, Jr., (former Lolita Armour and her husband were at the bedside when Mr. Armour died.

Mr. Armour, whose illness developed only a week after he arrived in London on his usual summer holiday trip to England early in July, was too ill throughout to be told of his mother's death, which occurred some weeks ago.

No medical bulletin had been issued throughout his illness, but it is understood that he first suffered from an attack of typhoid fever, the crisis of which he passed safely. His system, greatly weakened by the fever, never really gained strength sufficiently to permit him to be moved out of London to a more favorable locality. Then apparently pneumonia developed and his heart was too weakened to stand the strain.

Although Mr. Armour's death was at 4.30 o'clock yesterday afternoon, it was not until 8 o'clock last night that the announcement was made.

Mourning is very general among all classes in Mexico, and black is put on for the most distant relatives and even for friends. It is, however, worn only a short time, but the occasions for mourning dresses are so frequent that every woman has her mourning suit in her wardrobe.

GERMANS WILL GIVE UP FLIGHT

Despatch Says Possibility of New Flight Depends Upon Prospective Conversations

INSURANCE LOST

PARIS, Aug. 17 (Canadian Press).—A Havas despatch from Dessau, Germany, says that the directors of the Junkers Aeroplane Company and the pilots of the "Bremen" and "Europa" yesterday decided not to renew the trans-Atlantic flight now, even if weather conditions were favorable.

The despatch says that the possibility of a new flight before autumn depends upon prospective conversations.

Repair "Europa."

DESSAU, Germany, Aug. 17 (Canadian Press).—At a conference between the board of directors of the Junkers works and insurance underwriters of the unsuccessful trans-Atlantic hop of the "Europa" and "Bremen," the Junkers works took the stand that the premium of 220,000 marks (about $50,000) paid for insuring the planes and pilots is lost, inasmuch as the trans-Atlantic flight actually was started. Thus far the insurance companies are prepared only to pay for the necessary repairs to the "Europa."

The negotiations will be resumed to-day, and on the outcome of these will largely depend the possibility of Junkers making another attempt to fly to the United States. Junkers, it was stated, is unable to pay another premium of 220,000 marks.

Start Negotiations.

Meanwhile, however, Junkers has started negotiations with a German publishing concern for financing a new trans-oceanic flight.

The Junkers officials in any event consider that the agreement with the Hearst publication is concluded as the plane actually started for the United States and no guarantee to reach the United States was given.

One of the directors of the Junkers works yesterday said that the prospects of another attempt at a trans-Atlantic flight were extremely slight because of the advanced season.

At the present time the experience gained by the 22-hour flight of the "Bremen" which carried her to Ireland, are being investigated by the Junkers technical board, and the decision to make another attempt will depend largely on these findings.

WINNIPEG WHEAT.

WINNIPEG, Man., Aug. 17 (Canadian Press).—Under selling pressure, the wheat market, after an active session closed 1 1-8 to 1 3-8c lower yesterday, October registering the heaviest loss with final figures at $1.51 3-8, December closed at $1.48 1-8 and May at $1.52 3-8.

Sentiment was more inclined to the bear side and selling was quite heavy, Monday's active buyers being the chief sellers. Early in the session there was fair trade reported with seaboard houses.

The coarse grains were featureless, though some trade was reported in rye, following reports of overseas sales.

The demand for cash wheat was confined to millers and the amount of business transacted was limited to the scarcity of offerings. Holders of cash wheat were not eager to sell. Cash rye and barley met a good demand.

GOODRICH COMPANY PLANNING ADDITION

Will Spend About $150,000 on New Buildings at Kitchener

Immediate steps are to be taken to erect a large addition to the present factory buildings of the Canadian Goodrich Company of Kitchener, according to a statement made by T. B. Tomkinson, vice-president and general manager of the company. The approximate cost of the addition will be $150,000 or more. While Mr. Tomkinson did not give any definite date when operations will begin, he stated that building will commence as soon as plans and tenders are completed, so that the new structure will be ready for occupancy before cold weather sets in.

"No definite figure can be given as to the number of additional employees that will be required through the increased facilities," declared Mr. Tomkinson, "but it is a fact that operations of the company since January 1, of this year have made necessary over 50 per cent. more employees in the mills than there were a year ago. Future prospects of the company's business indicate that more employees will be needed as soon as the additional floor space is made available. At present the Canadian Goodrich Company employs close to 900 people in its offices and plant in Kitchener."

The new building will displace the temporary structures which were erected in the past year to provide necessary space until a suitable and permanent addition would be built.

Canadian Goodrich Company is part of a world wide organization. In addition to the Kitchener plant, the company has large factories in England, France and Germany and is now planning the construction of a large unit in Los Angeles, California. Its head offices are at Akron, Ohio.

BRITISH MINES LOSING MONEY

Coal Operators Sell at Less Than Cost to Regain Markets

MANY OUT OF WORK

LONDON, Aug. 17 (United Press). —British collieries have lost 5,000,000 pounds since the beginning of the year until the end of June, it was revealed to-day, and the loss is growing monthly.

The losses are due to the glut of coal on the continent and fierce competition. In an effort to regain markets lost during the coal stoppage, colliery owners are selling their output below market price.

The registered number of unemployed miners in Great Britain is now a quarter of a million.

Philadelphia police will use blood tests to determine intoxication if experiments now under way prove successful.

BOY DROWNED IN TORONTO BAY

BODY RECOVERED

TORONTO, Aug. 17. — Yet another victim was added to the growing list of drownings this season when ten-year-old John Owens, 53 Eastern Avenue, lost his life by falling from a log at the foot of Princess street. The lad was drowned about two o'clock, but the tragedy was not reported until after six o'clock. The body was recovered in deep water by Officers Hughes, Strong and Poole of the life-saving service after 15 minutes' dragging. An inquest is not likely.

Young Owens with Rene Lepine, Tony Lecicero and Jimmy Lecicero, all of 5 Eastern Avenue, went down to the water to swim shortly after noon. The lads played about until two o'clock when Owens essayed to climb upon a log which was floating close by. As he tried to top the timber the latter gave away under him, causing him in his unpreparedness, to loose his hold. He sank from the sight of his companions.

For some time the other lads attempted to locate their missing companion, then, this proving vain, they returned to their home. Too frightened to admit that they had been in swimming it was not until the drowned lad's parents missed their son and began inquiries for him that the other boys told what had happened.

The police of East Dundas Station were notified by a resident, Sergt. Rainey and a constable set out for the bay. Meanwhile the life savers had been informed. They were soon on the spot and after a few minutes' dragging recovered the body. The remains of the lad were picked up not far from a sewer outlet. Bathing is forbidden in that portion of the bay.

DOGS TO RACE IN BIG STADIUM

Syndicate Buys Wembley for Popular Greyhound Races

WILL FLOAT LOAN

LONDON, Aug. 17. — Canadian Press Cable. — A syndicate has purchased the Wembley Stadium for use in connection with greyhound racing which has become very popular in England.

The stadium was built for the British Empire Exhibition, 1924-25 It seats 125,000 people and it is here the final for the English Football Association Cup which is played annually.

The new owners, it is expected, will float a loan publicly in connection with the financing of the Stadium.

After the affairs of the British Empire Exhibition at Wembley were placed in the hands of liquidators, following the usual custom when a big exhibition closes, the stadium was brought from the liquidators by a trust company and now the company had sold it to a syndicate.

Mrs. M. H. Halpin, accompanied by Mrs. J. J. Callaghan, spent the past week in Rochester, N.Y., where they were guests of Mrs. C. M. Lofink, 20 Werner Park.

The engagement is announced of Vera Evelyn, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Finlay, Norwood, to Mr. Armar Maclachlan Weir, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Weir of Norwood, the marriage to take place quietly during the latter part of August.

A pleasant outing was enjoyed recently at Inverlea Park by the Female Voice Choir, when members of the Women's Friendly Bible Class were also present. A pleasing feature of the day was the presentation to their leader, Mrs. R. Bugg, of a substantial sum of money from the Choir, prior to her trip to Western Canada. An address was read by Mrs. A. McKinley, and Mrs. Bugg acknowledged the gift in a suitable manner, thanking the ladies for their thoughtfulness and speaking of the resumption of Choir activities on her return. Community singing followed. Arrangements for the outing were capably carried out by Mesdames S. P. Jackson and A. Pink.

P. C. Hooper, Supreme Clerk, of the Woodmen of the World, was in the city yesterday.

Mr. and Mrs. Dixon and family, of Rochester, N.Y., are leaving for home, after spending ten days with Mrs. Dixon's parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Bestard of North Monaghan.

Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Brunton announce the engagement of their eldest daughter Anna M., to Mr. R. A. Jardine, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. Jardine, Winnipeg, Manitoba. The marriage to take place the latter part of August.

In practically all of the industrial cities of England there are boat clubs composed of working girls, many of whom are experts with the oars. In summer keen sport is afforded by races between the rival clubs.

Mrs. Florence E. Carlyle, who has been appointed assistant sheriff of Peace River, Alberta, is believed to be the first woman in Canada to hold such office.

SAINT and SINNER

By ANNE AUSTIN

At dinner that evening Faith Hathaway was a different woman than the one who had lain all night in an agony of jealousy and fear. She sat at the head of her table erect and proud, gracious and beautiful, consciously playing the role of the beloved mistress of a well regulated home, and the wife of a man who loved her.

Faith talked cheerfully, pretending not to notice the fact that her remarks went almost unanswered by Cherry and Bob. As if he sensed her fight and wanted to help her, Jim Lane, her stoop-shouldered, prematurely old father, took an unwonted part in the conversation.

"Yes, sir, things are sure looking up," he assured the family emphatically. "I run into Thompson—you know, the big hardware man, Faith—and he said he looked for a big year next year. The old town's booming; there ain't no doubt about that. Am I right, Hathaway?" he turned to his son-in-law.

"Far as I'm concerned, there's no reason for me to kick up my heels with joy," Bob retorted glumly. "The Benjamins—those new-rich oil people—have kept me dangling for months on plans for their new home and have at last sent to New York for an architect. But I hope you're right, sir," he added more courteously, as Jim Lane's lined old face grew sadder. He pushed back his plate abruptly, saying to Faith, without looking into her eyes: "Will you excuse me now, Faith? I've brought home some work to do."

"If you want to know the truth," Cherry burst out, "Bob and I have been quarreling off and on all day. He's forbidden me to see any more of Glenn Andrews and I refuse to be dictated to. Glenn——"

"Glenn!" Bob exploded. "Calling him by his first name already! I've told her, Faith," he turned to his wife, his voice hard and cold, "that she's not to lead this Andrews chap on and create a fresh scandal for the town to lick its chops over. Churchill has warned her that if she wants a divorce from Caris Wiley, one that will give her absolute custody of the baby, she'll have to walk a chalk line. Chris is not above framing her for compromising evidence to air in the courtroom and she knows it. Well, I've said my say——"

"I'll say you have!" Cherry interrupted bitterly. "You've been saying it all day long! And I've said mine—I'm not going to be cooped up in this house every night of the week, and Glenn Andrews is a gentleman. You ought to be glad he's willing to show me a good time!" she cried, her voice growing shrill on threatened tears.

"I suppose I ought to be glad that you vamped him away from Selma Pruitt, right under our eyes," Bob retorted angrily. "Almost the only friends who've remained loyal through all your trouble, and then you take pains to alienate them! I wish you'd talk to her, Faith. I'm through! If she loses the baby by her headstrong foolishness, it will not be our fault. I'm going to get to work," he concluded angrily, as he flung away from the table.

"And I," Cherry laughed defiantly, "am going to get ready for my date with Glenn. And oh, Faith, would you mind dressing the baby up real sweet? Glenn has asked especially to see the midget. Doesn't that look as if he's serious already? 'I want to be happy!' " she hummed loudly, as she rose from the table, her golden eyes mocking Bob, who had stopped in the arched doorway between living room and dining room.

FASHION NOTES.

ABOUT PRINTS

By HEDDA HOYT

(United Press Fashion Editor)

Yvonne is a social bud
Who offers us a hint
"By wearing printed coats and gowns
You're sure to get in print."

The one-toned frock this season is as dead as a doornail when compared to the more colorful and fantastic printed models. Even when one wears the popular monotone effect from bonnet to shoes one is surpassed in smartness by the woman who wears geometrical prints.

Printed silks have never had the preference that they are having at present. Small patterns, either floral or geometrical, are favorites; the average pattern being not over an inch and a half in diameter. Two colors only are used this year, the darker color being the background. As a rule the printed frock has a flat crepe background when it's to be used for street wear. Frocks made on straight lines with ruffles, pleated tiers or drapery giving a flowing skirt movement are those considered smartest.

For dressy afternoon or evening wear printed chiffons are also popular and the patterns are somewhat larger than on crepes, although the two-color effects still prevail. Curious to say, the printed dinner gown has been almost as popular as the plain colored georgette or chiffon this season.

Printed linens are growing more popular each day, and dresses, jackets and long coats of these cotton prints are noted everywhere. It is not unusual to see a printed linen coat trimmed with white fur. For instance, a white linen coat printed in navy blue scroll pattern is lined in white crepe de chene and has white ermine collar and cuffs. The fur is detachable for laundering purposes.

The summer tourist knows the value of the printed frock or wrap. The tiniest spot on a plain material demands the cleaning of the whole garment, whereas a printed material does not show spots or slight soiling. Also, one finds that a printed material may act for sports, afternoon or informal dinner occasions and thus one lessens the amount of clothing one travels with.

DRESS

By MARY MARSHALL

Figured navy blue and white silk is cleverly combined with plain silk of navy blue in this summer frock.

Frocks of figured materials are smart—but those of figured material plus some plain material are even smarter, and I have been surprised to see how uninterruptedly the fashion for these figured frocks continues with the best dressed women. Not only at resorts but for wear in town you will see them—and the addition of the panel or drape or flounce of the dark plain material seems to give even the thinnest of figured crepes an air of substantiality that makes them entirely appropriate for street wear.

Don't imagine, because it is the twelfth day of August and because winter furs are to be bought and milliners are showing autumn hats, that summer has any intention of making a speedy farewell. I think that one of the mistakes most of us make with our summer clothes is in not realizing how long warm weather really lasts.

Toward mid-August we let our summer wardrobes run down. We stop sending things to the cleaner's—we begin to hack them a bit with a feeling that we will soon have autumn clothes to take their places. But there are days of early autumn and days of Indian summer after that when light-weight summer frocks are entirely appropriate. Though we do want some of the new things we ought to keep our stock of light-weight things well replenished.

And speaking of replenishing summer frocks—if you have a printed crepe or georgette frock that is beginning to look a bit fagged, why not freshen it up with a touch of plain colored material in harmonizing color?

"There are few women who could not make a hundred per cent more of themselves if they tried," said a prominent dressmaker the other day. And then added: "And no woman is hopeless."

"Chic today," said this observer, "lies in looking unstudied and easy. The smart woman today looks easily dressed and gives the idea that her clothes are not in her thoughts."

You cannot help but like the pattern I have for you this week. With it you can make the most effective bit of trimming for an overblouse I have seen in ever so long—lovely roses made from a bit of shaded ribbon, held in position with easy one-two-three stitch and a few glistening beads. If you want to see it just send a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

HOROSCOPE

The Stars Incline, but do not Compel.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 18, 1927

(Copyright, 1927, McClure Syndicate.)

Except in the early morning hours this is likely to be a day unfavorable to many activities on the planet Earth. According to astrology malefic aspects are strong.

It is a day in which women should be quiescent and inactive, for a sinister sway is supposed to affect them.

While this rule prevails it is easy to start a scandal and for this reason girls should be especially circumspect.

Feminine efforts in business or public affairs are subject to a sinister direction of the stars, it is said, while this rule prevails. It will be lucky to defer negotiations until later.

Actresses may be peculiarly temperamental and difficult to deal with today, which is not an auspicious time for signing contracts.

A new sensation in the newspaper will be looked for and it will reveal scandals in which women are involved, astrologers forecast.

In politics as well as business women should be especially cautious at this time, for they are near to success of an unexpected sort that will arouse envy and jealousy, the seers prophesy.

Battles of wit and opinions, of creeds and political faiths will be especially bitter in the autumn, if the stars are rightly read.

Great storms, accompanied by winds, may be expected as the month draws to a close and for this reason yachtsmen should be careful.

Again and again astrologers have prognosticated exciting speculation in food stuffs. Chicago and New York are to have wild days on 'change, it is foretold.

The wheat market may manifest vagaries of a surprising sort and wise men and women will be slow to speculate.

There is a sign promising profit in steel and rails, while coal interests are to realize much, owing to world conditions.

Persons whose birthdate it is have the best augury for their financial affairs, but the stars are not so promising where love is involved.

Children born on this day may be determined and definite in character, difficult to direct, but able to win success. Their besetting weakness is to be found in desire for romance.

A quaint vagary of fashion, which is proving very popular with women who like unusual notes in their dress, is that of big detachable gauntlet cuffs for evening wear.

HINTS ON ETIQUETTE.

1. Is it permissible to state, in your invitation to week-end guests, just what train they are to come and leave on?
2. Is it imperative to go by the train mentioned?
3. If you have a guest visiting you, can you take her with you for a week-end party without first asking your hostess' permission?

The Answers.

1. Yes.
2. Yes, unless unforeseen accident prevents.
3. Certainly not.

The latest addition to the ever increasing list of titled women explorers is the Baroness Lamia, who is financing and leading an expedition into Upper Senegal, in search of rare butterflies and plants.

An amusing little dress custom which many women in London are following at the moment is the wearing of a bracelet with a fair-size bell attached to it.

Gives Crunchiness and Flavour

Puffed Rice makes other foods taste good

Many ways suggest themselves for using Puffed Rice to make other foods more delightful. They add to the taste and attractiveness of many dishes.

Mothers know these whole-grains are good for children because all the starch cells have been broken down by the puffing process.

In taffy, barley sugar and fudge, Puffed Rice gives crunchiness and nutlike flavour which children love.

And on ice cream or fruit, fresh or cooked, they give their flavour and receive the mastication which all foods need, but so many don't get from little people.

NEWPORT CHIC BECKONS TO STYLE

Mrs. Ogden Mills.

Marjorie Oelrichs.

Countess Alfonso P. Villa

BY BETSY SCHUYLER
NEA Service Writer.

NEWPORT, R.I., Aug. 17.—The opening of the usual August competitive sports events here gets me in a predicting frame of mind.

It is not the events that I feel like predicting about, however. It is the way in which the clothes I am seeing presage fall styles.

For of course everyone interested knows how aptly that old election gag, "As goes Maine so goes the nation," can be paraphrased to read "As goes the sports frock, so goes Fashion."

Newport's Import.

And Newport sports frocks, being what they are, are sure to have a weighty influence on everything from lingerie to evening gowns this fall.

Looking at the various colored frocks, with yellow and pink predominating, I predict several trends in fall styles:

1. Straighter lines but roomier ones and longer frocks and coats. Many of the summer's fluttering panels will disappear.

2. The jumper influencing daytime and evening creations, not to mention top-coats. Along with the jumper influence, a tendency towards tight hip-lines and yokes.

3. Solid colors instead of prints or flowers.

4. Bigger and better pleats and more use of tiny tucks to circle and trace out intricate designs on fine fabrics.

The one-piece frock is positively passe. I saw dozens of intriguing jumper frocks, many of them afternoon models. Mrs. Morris de Peyster wore a golden yellow satin jumper frock with square neck and square designs outlined with one-inch self-material bandings.

Tucks, Tucks, Tucks.

Mrs. Ogden Mills sponsored a rose flat crepe jumper frock that featured the use of three kinds of tucks on one costume. Inch tucks running crosswise made the front panel, accordion pleating gave the skirt fullness and tiny pin-tucks trimmed the collar and cuffs.

Under a roomy sports coat of white Rodier cloth, edged with a hand-stitch in black and white wool, Marjorie Oelrichs wore a soft orchid crepe jumper frock that had four pleats at the left side of the front of the skirt and four at the right side of the rear. Its jumper ended in the swathed hip line which will inevitably lead to pronounced hip yokes before fall is over.

Lemon yellow, silk jersey fashions Mrs. George Brokaw's most charming jumper dress to date. It had a new neckline achieved by set-backs of embroidery and the same motif edged the straight long jumper.

Mrs. J. Theus Mund wore a two-piece frock of flesh crepe, the banded blouse tucked daintily from the left shoulder to the right hip. Mrs. William Whitehouse had an entirely novel trimming on her flesh flat crepe two-piece frock—a triangular motif made of pin-tucks instead of pockets at the front sides of the jumper and the neck straight across the back and V in front making a perfect triangle to match.

Coats Roomy, Too.

The roominess extends to coats as well as frocks. The new tweed top coats have deep double front panels, if they haven't inverted box-pleats in the back, and while they are still held tightly around their wearers in some cases, they afford vastly more room for moving than did last year's.

The Countess Alfonso Villa has a charming new top-coat, with the new fullness but the straight line. It is wish-bone tweed, with its nutria collar cut verticle across the front, giving it a youthful square look.

THE FAIR BOARD'S EXAMPLE.

Summer athletics will be more strongly than ever attracted to the Exhibition Park since the directors have decided to provide dressing rooms and showers under the grandstand.

This action is primarily an economy, reducing the annual expense for tents required by the vaudeville performers at the Exhibition.

The Board has been gradually rolling out a broad playing field which is quite generally used. None of the local parks was equipped with showers, and this accomodation at the Exhibition Grounds will be much appreciated by the athletic teams using it.

In this respect the Exhibition Board has overtaken the City Council, which purchased a ready-made baseball park but for years has been content to make only necessary repairs without thought for the comfort of the young men taking part in the games played there.

Meanwhile, the Exhibition Board has transformed a rough and broken field into a very satisfactory athletic grounds. The Directors were really sincere in their promises to furnish adequate facilities for sports. It has taken a few years to accomplish the results that were resolutely set up as an incidental ambition in the development of the old Bertie Morrow park to the present trim and efficient plant it is today. They knew definitely where they were going, and they are not losing much time in getting there.

HOME GARDEN CONTESTS.

In the home garden contests promoted by the Ontario Department of Agriculture, through the Agricultural Representatives, with the object of stimulating interest among boys and girls between the ages of 12 and 15 who have left the Public School and have returned to the farm, the Ministry is making a real and valuable contribution towards the solution of the problem of keeping the youth of the rural districts on the land.

Many of these boys and girls have been engaged in School Fair work for some time, and have acquired experience of great practical value in the growing of crops on a larger scale.

Brought up in an environment in which the growing of crops at all times holds a predominant place, children of the farm are enabled to benefit to a greater extent than city-reared children, from the expert advice issued by the Representatives and contained in the booklets specially printed for the youthful competitors in the contests. The tuition given in the choice of location, preparation of soil, in cultivation and watering ought to go a long way towards the developing of a generation of efficient, scientific farmers.

Too much commendation cannot be given to the awarding of prizes to the competitors who head the list. It is a demonstration to the children that practical knowledge suitable to the farm receives recognition from the same authorities who dispense prizes and medals for scholastic attainments in the juvenile world of effort.

MORE WARDENS NEEDED.

From time to time complaints are heard from tourists and fishermen of a scarcity of fish on the Kawartha Lakes. Most of the criticism has been directed against the Department of Game and Fisheries of the Ontario Government, the executive officers of the Trent Canal have not been immune from censure, and even the Fish and Game Association which has labored manfully in season and out of season to have the lakes restocked with fish has not entirely escaped the salt spray of ridicule; but evidence has been accumulating to prove that some at least of the responsibility lies in other quarters.

Proof of a method of fishing not recognized by the laws of this Province was recently brought to light by a tourist who discovered a 65-foot net in Pigeon River.

Not only did the users of such apparatus break the laws, but they also violated every canon of good sportsmanship and common consideration for others.

Discoveries like this bring us back to the outstanding cause of depletion—illicit fishing. Men who fish out of season and who use illegal methods of obtaining their catches; men who exceed the limit laid down by the law and approach the fishing grounds in a spirit akin to that of the hunters whose never-silent guns all but exterminated the bison from North America are all equally culpable, and equally responsible for the spoiling of the greatest asset which this community possesses.

The time appears ripe for the appointment of additional wardens to patrol the waters of the Kawarthas.

EXPLORERS PASS THIS WAY.

Along the roads that radiate from Peterborough to summer resorts in this district wide-eyed city children are discovering a new world as they motor with parents holiday bound.

You, who know the concession lines so well that their landmarks ceased to interest you long ago, may be surprised to learn that young folk are seeing for the first time berries growing on bushes. They saw them in boxes in the stores of the big cities where they live, but here up the Burleigh road, or on the way to Keene or Lakefield, they discover them bending the bushes with their mellow weight.

And here is a fence of stumps with their guarled and twisted roots turned to the road, a utilitarian monument to the settlers who cleared the land of all the trees that supplied so many stumps, uprooted them and dragged them to the position they have occupied for several generations.

Youth is ever exploring in the footpaths of explorers, however well worn those paths may be. And none of the young questers are so eager and avid as the metropolitan boy or girl to whom the Kawartha country looms up as a strange, uncharted land of romance.

Quite a few of these brave hearts have passed this way of late, along a route Champlain followed three hundred years ago. Perhaps three centuries hence there will be young explorers along the same trail with its vestigial, primitive life and its enthralling unspoiled natural beauty.

A WORTH-WHILE SUGGESTION.

The proposal made by readers of a Toronto paper that a fund be raised for the benefit of Alexander Hodge is well worth consideration by all friends of law and order.

Not even Hodge himself realized what far-reaching consequences would result from his fight to the death with his mysterious assailant in the darkness of that Beeton shack.

Through the courageous struggle of the plucky Scot who balked at parting with his hard-earned money at the bidding of a midnight thug, a desperado who was a menace to all honest, hard-working citizens of the community was removed and a long period of terrorism was effectually brought to a close. Had Hodge been intimidated into compliance with the demand of the bandit, cattle raiding and thieving on quite an extensive scale might still have been the normal state of affairs in Beeton unknown to other parts of the Province.

Hodge's deed has a real cash value which ought to be adequately recompensed.

The dignity and modesty of the man since his triumphant emergence from his terrible ordeal add force to the arguments of those who call for a monetary reward. Although a poor man, he turned down a tempting offer of a vaudeville contract and raised his standing in the eyes of all right-thinking people.

Canadians who helped to swell the huge purses that went to the gladiators who fommelled each other at the Yankee Stadium will not grudge contributing to a fund for a plain, hard-working, untrained farmer who put up a fight that makes the Dempsey-Sharkey bout look like a committee meeting of pacifists.

TO BOMB OLD MEN AND WOMEN.

Eleven U. S. army airplanes flew over Peterborough on Saturday, July 2nd, accompanying Colonel Chas. A. Lindbergh from Detroit to Ottawa. Their speed, the skill of their pilots, the exactness of their squadron formation, will not soon be forgotten by the citizens who saw them.

By 1932 the United States army will have 1,800 first-class airplanes. The different types in this construction and organization program have already been decided, pursuit, observation and bombing planes. They represent the last word in military aviation efficiency.

Of special interest is the Curtiss Condor bomber, designed for both day and night raids. This battleship of the air is capable of carrying one ton and a quarter, 2,500 pounds, of the deadliest high explosive. Its capacity may be realized from the fact that the eighteen British machines which bombed the German hangars at Lens in April, 1917, dropped only a little more than one ton of missiles. But the Condor, that is one of the new U. S. type of bomber, carried as much, if not slightly more, high explosives than that British squadron of eighteen planes in 1917.

One of the Condor's 600-pound "eggs," writes Waldemar Kaempffert in The New York Times, is able to do nearly as much damage as six sixteen-inch shells fired from a battleship, and a 2,000-pound aerial bomb is more frightful in its effect than any torpedo ever launched from a submarine or battleship.

The Condor is driven by two engines, carries a crew of five, mounts three pairs of machine guns, can climb to 15,000 feet, and has a speed of 128 miles an hour.

This bomber is regarded as a flying cannon, "evolved because the war introduced the new principle that old men and women working in factories far behind the lines are as essential a part of a modern fighting force as are troops in fortresses and dugouts."

The war may have evolved that principle, but it was inspired in hell. Military science in this so-called civilization concentrates its genius on the destruction of unprotected towns and the slaughter of old men and women. If this was done in the necessity and passion of the European war, are the nations in the calm reflection of these peace years to unite in approving a form of warfare so barbarous as the singling out of old men and women hundreds of miles from the battle front but regarded on a parity with the active combatants?

However, as far as the U. S. army's Condor bombers are concerned they will probably never be used. For they have a range of 350 miles, 700 miles altogether, and as United States sentiment is said to exclude any thought of aggression against her near neighbours, Canada and Mexico, it is unlikely that the squadrons of Condors will ever find prey.

Nor is there evident in the United States any desire ever again to engage in European troubles, in spite of the success which Americans admit they achieved in the few months of their concentrated effort.

It is doubtful whether civilians generally are aware of and subscribe to the new military principle that old men and women working in factories behind the war zones are fair targets for raiding bombing planes.

Or have we decided to debunk war, strip it of its old glamour, and confront it as the evil thing it is, that spares neither young or old, women or children, protected or unprotected?

MONTREAL GRAIN AND PRODUCE.

MONTREAL, Que., August 17 (Canadian Press). — The demand from the Continent and the United Kingdom for Canadian grain continued good on the Montreal market yesterday, and a moderate amount of business was worked.

The domestic trade was dull, but the undertone was steady and prices were unchanged.

A fair trade was done in spring and winter wheat grades of flour, and values were firm.

Prices for all lines of millfeed were well maintained under a quiet demand. The trade in standard grades of rolled oats was extremely dull.

An easier feeling developed in the cheese market, and values were reduced ½c to ¾c per pound. The trade was quiet. The receipts were 9,637 boxes.

The feature of the butter trade was further strength that developed and prices were marked up a fraction. The receipts were 524 packages.

CHICAGO GRAIN

CHICAGO, August 17 (Canadian Press). — Selling of corn in the late trading yesterday brought about a sharp reaction from top prices in all grains on the Board of Trade, with closing prices at or near the low point for the day, with wheat ¾c to 1c down, corn off 1¼c to 1½c; oats unchanged to ¾c down; and provisions 7½c to 30c higher.

Bull news, especially on wheat, was plentiful at the outset, but when some brisk selling set in, the market fluctuated rapidly and became decidedly unsettled. This selling was credited to Winnipeg, and offset the frost reports to a great extent. Failure of Winnipeg to get excited over the crop outlook in the Canadian North-West baffled the friends of higher prices here. Several crop experts pointed out there would be a downward revision of 40,000 bushels of wheat in Saskatchewan as a result of the frost of a week ago, while another said there was about one-third of the grain in the section visited by the frost was almost worthless.

FROM "SPECTATOR."

To Editor of Examiner:

Sir,—The refusal of Toronto authorities to allow the use of public parks to religious bodies on Sundays is following the example of other cities in other countries. But it is not due to disorders or unseemly conduct. That charge is not warranted. It is said that the rapidly-growing tendency of religion to introduce the old trouble of church and state by making religious bodies into political groups is at the bottom of it. Strange to say, there has not been an increase of auto accidents due to liquor, but there has been an increase all the same. Does it point to an increase in foolishness?

SPECTATOR.

A Thought For To-day

LIFE IS ALL RIGHT.

There are trying days and often disagreeable situations, but we would bear false witness against life should we fail to pronounce life a pleasant voyage.

Life is all right. It is the way we work it that discloses our disappointments.

The next time that you feel that life is dealing you a poor hand, step out and spread a few anonymous favors upon some hopeless or helpless human—a favor that may never be known, save to yourself, and then there will come that inward feeling of being a silent benefactor and this will stimulate and increase your interest in life.

At times it is necessary that we step out of our own small circle and see the sorrow and the misery that surround us. Then we are more awake to our own advantages.

We are all happier or all more miserable by comparison, and how true it is that the ones we envy often envy us, for we see only the surface of their apparent success. If we could dig down deep and find the facts, the probabilities are that we would not change places with them.

We enlarge our own troubles and minimize our own pleasures. Our envy makes us miserable and then our misery makes us envy more.

ONTARIO

The Weed Scourge

Is it fair to your neighbor if your weed-infested fields, fence rows and idle places are scattering weed seeds over his land?

Is it fair to yourself if your own weeds are scattering their seeds all over your land?

The weed scourge is costing Ontario $5,000,000 a year. A share of this money should be in your pocket! Instead, this money is wasted. And the waste is increasing!

The time has come for united action! The weed scourge should not be merely "fought"—it should be exterminated! Weeds can be exterminated, but only by determined and united action! The help of every man, woman, boy and girl is needed.

WARNING

Under the provisions of The Weed Control Act 1927, now in force, the destruction of noxious weeds is no longer optional. The destruction of noxious weeds is now compulsory.

Every occupant of land and every owner of unoccupied land is required to destroy all noxious weeds before their seeds ripen. Municipal councils are required to destroy all noxious weeds growing upon the highways. Let everyone co-operate to end the weed nuisance.

C. Francis Jenkins and a sketch of the device he has invented for launchingairplanes without a long runway.

BY RODNEY DUTCHER
NEA Service Writer.

(Copyright, 1927, NEA Service, Inc.)

WASHINGTON, Aug. 17.—"So I took the $5,500 and went out with my girl and we had a whale of a good time."

Thus ends the story of the birth of the motion picture industry as told by its acknowledged father, who sold the infant for less than the weekly salary now received by some movie stars.

This man is C. Francis Jenkins, the Washington inventor who, after learning to fly at the impossible age of 50, has recently announced a series of inventions which threaten to make operation of airplanes safer than automobiling.

Chief among them, for instance, is a launching device which Jenkins asserts will do away with the need for long runways at landing fields, and will enable planes to leave the ground in very restricted space.

Like Roller Coaster.

It consists in a short runway that looks like a section of a roller coaster. The upper end is 32 feet high; the plane to be launched is pulled to the top by cable and waits there, its landing wheels in guard rail channels and its tail skid in another channel. Its motors are started and it is let go; the force of gravity, plus the pull of the propellors, sends it down the runway at a terrific speed.

At the bottom of the runway the guard rails pull the tail skid down abruptly, heading the ship up into the air. The plane's speed, Jenkins says, is now twice the required lifting speed, and it shoots aloft quickly and easily. This runway, he predicts, will obviate the need for big airports and long runways and will enable cities building airports to save thousands of dollars.

But to get back to moving pictures—about which Jenkins loves to reminisce.

Jenkins invented the motion picture projector and so became the first man to throw movies onto a screen. Being a pioneer, he had to invent the first movie camera and other equipment at the same time. Today his first projector, very similar to all those now used in theatres, is displayed at the National Museum in a case devoted to his early work. Others have contested his claims to priority, but museums, institutes and historians have upheld him.

Handkerchief Was Screen.

How the first movie was shown on a silk handkerchief, how no one could be persuaded to see the first public exhibition, how the future of movies was unanimously regarded as no future at all and how Jenkins finally sold his patents for $5,500 was told to this writer by Jenkins himself in a reminiscent interview.

"I doubt if any pioneer inventor knows just how his big ides first struck him," said the stubby little genius who turns out inventions much as Henry Ford turns out flivvers. "It just sneaks up on him. The first thing you know you've got a crazy idea and begin to play with it.

"It was between 1890 and 1893 that I began to play with the movie idea. I got the idea of making a rapid succession of exposures of the same object, speeding it up in a magic lantern. For want of anything else, I called the result a 'device for recording and reproducing motion'."

At about this time, Jenkins explains, Edison was working on his "kinetoscope," in which one could see movies by gazing down into a box. The Jenkins invention was called a "phantoscope."

"Every motion picture machine is a magic lantern equipped to change pictures fast," continued Jenkins. "What I produced was the little mechanism which changed the pictures.

"I had to make a new little camera to make my own film by splitting regular kodak film into three strips and sticking them together with collodion to make a long strip which I turned with a crank as movie photographers do today. I even had to invent a new developing device for such a long strip of film.

Made His Own Camera.

"The first pictures I ever projected were made on a silk handkerchief, stuck against the wall, in 1892.

"It was long about this time that Edison had said that his kinetoscope was an interesting novelty which would never amount to much because one couldn't project the pictures. The whole key to successful motion pictures lies in the achievement of making a projector which would show separate and distinct pictures on the screen.

"After I had made my projecting machine—the one now in the museum—I began giving private exhibitions to my boss (I was then secretary to Sumner T. Kimball, head of the Life Saving Service), my girl and her relatives.

"The pictures were mostly of athletes and dancing girls in action. Later I made the waves at Atlantic City, and Niagara Falls—it nearly broke me getting to Niagara Falls.

"Then someone introduced me to a young man who had some money and I made three copies of my projecting machine and took it to Atlanta.

"This was the first time anyone ever charged admission to the things. We charged 25 cents, but we couldn't get anyone to come in. It was impossible to explain to people just what we had.

"Finally, more or less in desperation, we opened the doors and invited everyone to come in and rest. Many were tired after reaching the end of the midway and they came. With a fairly good crowd inside, we closed the door and ran a show.

Began to Make Money.

"Some of our feature pictures were as much as 100 feet long!

"When the show was over, our spieler came out and made a speech, the burden of which was:

"'Ladies and gentlemen, these gentlemen who have brought to you these wonderful pictures did not come here for their health. It cost them money to come here. If anyone has received a quarter's worth of entertainment, they may leave the quarter at the door.'

"People actually left quarters and we began to make money.

"Then one night the place burned down.

"The other fellow got all the money and I got the experience."

GOOD SIGNING IS IMPORTANT

Next to Good Surface, in Opinion of Most Tourists.

TO BE CONSIDERED

MONTREAL, Aug. 17.—Next to a good road surface, no feature of travel by highway is more important to the tourist than the signs giving information as to distances, directions and destinations, or due warning of conditions ahead which are possible sources of danger or which require extra caution in driving. This matter of import to all users of the highway will receive due attention at the forthcoming fourteenth annual convention of the Canadian Good Roads Association, to be held at the Clifton, Niagara Falls, Ont.; in September, when government engineers and departmental officials, municipal councillors, representative motorists and other good roads advocates will gather for the interchange of experiences and ideas.

One of the most thoughtful and original treatments of this subject of highway signs was that contributed to the programme of the thirteenth convention, held last year at Edmonton, when William Findlay of Toronto, a director and member of the executive committee of the association, read his paper on "Signing the Highways." The extracts given below coincide with the general viewpoint of the association on this important matter and indicate to motorists how well their interests are kept in mind by this organization:

"Signing of the highways lags behind the building of highways. For years we have been spending our money on good roads, and only now are learning the necessity and advantage of pointing out where the good road leads to, warning the motorist of physical features of the road which make it necessary for him to take extra care and giving him information as to where he is.

"I would advance the proposition that the road sign should go up as soon as traffic is invited on the road; that the road sign is an integral part of the highway, and should be put up when the highway is built. In all other channels of transportation the direction and danger signs are treated in this way. What railroad company would think of building a railway without signing it for the information of the locomotive driver and the safety of the public? What railroad company would be allowed to operate a railway without an efficient system of traffic and safety signals? Governments erect lighthouses and buoys at sea and on the Great Lakes. The signing of our waterways is not left to voluntary associations of ship owners. Why should the signing of the highway be left to voluntary associations of motorists?

"What is the use of making the highways capable of fast moving traffic if; by the absence of signs, the motorist can lose his way and thus waste time? Will the highways not be more attractive to the tourist who is driving merely for pleasure if he can look about him and find out where he is and the distance to the next important place?

"I submit that the answer to these questions lies in the admission of the proposition first stated, that the sign should go up the moment the highway is completed. Some study of the matter and an experience of a hundred thousand miles on the roads of both Canada and the United States lead me to set down the requisites of good road signing briefly as follows: (a) Simplicity; (b) Uniformity; (c) Location.

"The touring motorist wants to know where he is. He likes to be shown the names of villages and towns, and he carries away with him a recollection of their physical characteristics if he is able to see the name. The answer to the question, 'Where are we at?' is almost as important as the answer to that other question of the motoring tourist, 'Where do we go from here?' At the boundary of each village, city or town should be a uniform sign containing the name.

"All motorists want a safe highway. Most of them are willing to help to make the highways safe. Road-signing along the lines suggested will make for safety and will arouse more of the spirit of reasonableness and co-operation on the part of the motorist."

A request addressed to the secretary-treasurer, Canadian Good Roads Association, New Birks Building, Montreal, will bring the tentative programme and other information regarding the approaching convention.

The use of nitrous oxide, "laughing gas," as an anesthetic, was first attempted by Horace Wells in 1841.

Red tape, an expression signifying formality and delay, had its origin in the red tape once used in tying up official documents.

Manufacturers and wholesale firms in the United States pay $1000 a minute during each business day for frauds, theft and misrepresentations, it has been estimated.

SIX DAYS LEFT FOR TWO MEN

Massachusetts Supreme Court is to Decide on Further Action

TO STUDY MOTIONS

BOSTON, Mass., Aug. 17 (Canadian Press).—Six days from the time set for their execution, Nicola Sacco and Bartolemeo Vanzetti today awaited the deliberation of the full bench of the Massachusetts Supreme Court, which will decide whether there remains any action in the state courts open to their counsel. There has been no indication how soon the decision of the court will be given, but in view of the shortness of the respite which remains, it was expected that the justices would brook no delay in the study of the affidavits and motions before them.

Lyrics Of Life

(By Douglas Malloch.)

WHEN COMPANY COMES

When company comes I'm always glad,
For Mother cooks things that we haven't had
For ages, and brings all the silver out
And all of the things she is choice about.
And people always speak pleasantly
To one another, and even me,
For nobody says that I'm all thumbs,
So I'm always glad when company comes.

We have our dinner, and when we're through,
They help with the dishes, the company do,
And Mother tells me to go and play,
So I won't hear what they want to say
And nobody says, "What's that youngster at?"
But something always goes wrong, at that,
I know I shall never love Auntie Kate
Again, for she broke my best blue plate.

And someone sits in my littlest chair,
And someone says they should cut my hair,
And someone pinches me on the cheek,
And Mother's scared ev'ry time I speak,
And people kiss me because I'm small,
Yes, people that I hardly know at all.
Well, it isn't polite, I don't suppose,
But I'm always glad when company goes.

TWO PRESENTATIONS TO MILLBROOK BOY

Nelles Rowland Has Been Transferred to Trenton by Bank

MILLBROOK, Aug. 17.—Nelles Rowland, who has been on the local Bank of Toronto staff for the past three or four years, was moved this week, leaving for his new position in the Trenton branch where he will be relieving for the next two weeks, on Monday morning.

Mr. Rowland has been connected with the C.S.E.T. movement here for several years, and recently has been recognized as a leader among the senior boys; he represented Durham East in the Sixth Older Boys' Parliament at Queen's Park last December.

On Sunday morning, following the church service, a number of the boys from the Tuxis Square and the Senior Trail Rangers, with other workers, gathered for a farewell to their comrade, when F. P. Stinson on behalf of those present, presented Nelles with a handsome solid leather club bag, expressing the general regret felt at his removal from the community, and the hope that he would continue his connection with the boys' work movement, the Sunday School, and the church, and would have every success wherever his business location should be.

W. Fred Fallis, superintendent of the Sunday School, and C. C. Garside, teacher of the Trail Rangers' class, also spoke briefly but appreciatively of the influence which Mr. Rowland had exerted among his associates, and the latter, who was deeply touched by the gift and the kindly words which were its accompaniment, replied in a few well-chosen words. Rev. Joseph Wilks, after a few remraks, led in prayer.

The singing of "Blest Be the Tie That Binds" was an appropriate conclusion to the gathering.

On Saturday evening a very happy social affair was arranged at the home of Mrs. H. J. Armstrong in honor of Nelles Rowland before his departure for his new position in the bank at Trenton, quite a number of the young folk being present for the farewell gathering.

During the evening, on behalf of his friends, L. Ingran presented Nelles with a pure wool cardinal sweater as a slight token of the esteem in which he is held. J. Larmer making a few remarks expressive of the regret felt because of his removal to a new business location, the fact that he would be greatly missed in local social gatherings, and in connection with clean sport in the community.

Nelles replied briefly, and the remainder of the evening passed pleasantly with music, dancing, and other entertainment, concluding with the service of dainty refreshments.

Miss Alice Needler, of Toronto, is holidaying with her uncle and aunt, Mr. A. A. and Miss Etta Needler.

McClary's HERMETITE

—the master baking oven of the Age

GONE the uncertainty from kitchen cooking. Gone the drudgery of fussing with a hot range. Now, with McClary's Hermetite, you just heat the oven, put in your roasts and vegetables, shut off the current and go about your other duties. When you return the whole meal will be cooked.

The secret of such remarkable performance is "stored heat". The oven walls of McClary's Hermetite are DOUBLY INSULATED—packed with insulating material and surrounded by dead air space—the best insulation known to science. The heat is thus retained inside the oven. By closing the door you make the oven practically hermetically tight—providing such baking economy and satisfaction as you have never before experienced.

What would you give to have such a range in your kitchen? An all-white, porcelain enameled range—a range that cleans as easily as a china dish—that leads all others in beauty and utility—that bakes only as a range with a Hermetite oven can.

Such a range awaits your inspection at your electrical supply dealer's—in the very style and size you require, at a price you can afford.

STEAMER RAMS WINDSOR FERRY

Coolness of Crew Prevents Panic in Midstream Last Night

VESSEL REACHES DOCK

WINDSOR, Ont., Aug. 17.—Coolness on the part of the crew prevented a possible panic last night, when the big ferry steamer, Brittania, of the Detroit and Windsor Ferry Company, plying between the two cities, was rammed by a downbound freighter, the James E. Ferris, in the middle of the river. The ferry had a hole punched in her starboard side abaft the engine room, the steel prow cutting its way fully six inches into the iron hull.

There were between 200 and 300 passengers on the ferry, but none was injured. The Brittania did not take in any water and was able to proceed to the Windsor side, where she docked and unloaded her cargo of automobile passengers. The foot passengers were taken off by the fire boat, James E. Battle, and other ferry boats which rushed to the scene. A number also were taken aboard the Ferris, when it seemed at first as though the Brittania might founder.

First news of the accident came when the crew of the fire boat, stationed at the foot of Randolph Street, heard a succession of short whistle blasts, followed a few seconds later by a resounding crash. The Battle at once put out and reached the side of the Brittania less than five minutes after the collision. Fifty-six passengers were taken off by the fire boat and taken to Windsor.

Detroit police reserves were ordered out when a mad rush of people filled lower Woodward Avenue and hampered traffic.

It was the first accident in the long history of the Ferry Company. While responsibility for the crash has not yet been fixed, it is generally believed that a mix-up in signals was to blame.

Two Planes Half-Way.

HONOLULU, Aug. 17 (Canadian Press).—Two planes of the four dashing westward in the $35,000 dole flight passed over the steamer City of Los Angeles just before midnight, Honolulu time (2.30 a.m. Pacific standard time).

The Los Angeles at 8 p.m. was 1,251 miles from Los Angeles, and the message, received at Fort Shafter here, was taken by army officers to mean that two, at least, of the planes had passed the half-way mark in their long hop.

The radio operator of the steamer called Arthur Goebel, the Woolaroc's pilot, and Martin Jensen, pilot of the Aloha, but received no response. The ship's officers thought the plane was either Jensen's or Jack Frost's Golden Eagle, inasmuch as Goebel was believed to be a considerable distance north of that point.

Like to Wash Cooking Utensils?

Who does? It's not the pleasantest task of the housewife, but it can be made much less unpleasant if you use Gillex. For extra greasy things like stew pans, roasting pans, etc., fill with water and put in from half to a teaspoonful of Gillex. Let soak for a few minutes. Then rub with dish-cloth or mop. Off comes the grease and scum without effort. Oh yes! Gillex is a real help for the busy housewife. Try it once and you'll want to use it always.

Extreme Exhaustion

A Hospital Matron's Opinion of Virol

"Rosevale Hospital, Dumfries, Scotland.

"The above photographs are of a little girl aged 7 years and 5 months, who was certified by her doctor to be suffering from Wasting Disease and sent to Hospital, where on admission her weight was 25½ lbs.

"She was in a state of extreme emaciation and exhaustion. Apart from the usual Hospital diet she had no special treatment except Virol, which she had thrice daily from admission. Eight weeks after admission she weighed 39½ lbs., and the photograph on the right was taken at that time.

"I think you will agree with me that it is a striking recommendation for your wonderful preparation Virol, and I am pleased to have this opportunity of stating that during my nursing experience of over 20 years in Hospital, I have considered it to be my greatest standby in the treatment of all delicate children under my care.

(Sgd.) "J. A. McCALLUM, Matron."

Here in this case you have the Doctor prescribing Virol, the Matron testifying to the splendid results. No wonder that

Leafs Take Double Header From Jersey City

JERSEYS FAIL TO HOLD LEAFS

Canadians Take Double-Header Although Outhit in First Game

STARS GAIN ON LEAD

NEW YORK, Aug. 17.—(Canadian Press).—Toronto took both ends of a double header from the Jerseys at Jersey City yesterday, winning the first 3 to 1 and the second 4 to 1. In the first game the visiting Leafs were outhit, but the Jerseys failed in the pinches. In the second game Vic Sorrell held the opposition to five hits. Pete Monohan, Jersey City, first baseman, hit a home run in the second game to save his team from being shut out.

The Syracuse Stars gained half a game on the league leading Buffalo club by taking two games from the Keys at Reading while the Bisons were breaking even with Newark. Syracuse won the first game 7 to 2 and the second 8 to 6.

Buffalo won the first game at Newark 6 to 0. Mangum's twirling proving invincible but they lost the second 3 to 2.

The Orioles defeated Rochester twice at Baltimore. The scores were 6 to 5 and 3 to 0.

Soccer Notes

At the meeting of the local association last evening, arrangements were made to play the final game of the G. N. Gordon Cup on Saturday, when the Masseys meet the Thistles at King Edward Park. Kick-off at three o'clock promptly. Referee John Ward. In the event of a draw twenty minutes overtime will be played.

After an interesting discussion in regards to medals for the winners of the local league, the secretary was instructed to get samples of silverware so that they may be inspected.

The United States has been visited by soccer teams from South America, Australia, Czecho-Slovakia, Palestine and Ireland, and in future will see others from Spain, England, Scotland, and perhaps Norway and Sweden. The outstanding factor back of these colorful invasions is that the teams come to America always in a spirit of friendliness generally, to show what they have been able to accomplish with the help of the country.

A Comparison.

Recently a fan asked for a comparative statement showing the goals scored by the F. A. teams of a few years back and the S. F. A. tourists this season. Here it is:

	Eng. Goals		Scot. Goals
	F.	A.	F.	A.	Eng.	Scot.
Montreal	5	3	3	2	4859	7091
Hamilton	3	0	6	1	4666	4302
Toronto	6	0	2	3	6907	8661
Ft. William	9	0	6	1	1757	992
Winnipeg	2	1	5	2	7301	7000
Regina	2	0	4	0	2414	1392
Saskatoon	5	0	9	0	2074	1616
Calgary	7	4	6	0	3489	2947
Lethbridge	3	1	4	0	2074	1620
Vancouver	5	1	9	2	7422	6820
Nanaimo	3	0	5	0	3885	4343
Victoria	5	1	4	1	3479	2115
Vancouver	9	1	6	0	6989	5001
Edmonton	5	0	10	1	2007	2059
Winnipeg	7	0	4	1	3863	7296
Timmins	5	0	7	1	2166	1272
Windsor	5	2	4	2	3250	2958
Toronto	7	2	10	0	4957	7242
Montreal	2	1	4	2	5419	3000

England's other game was at Ottawa where they won 8-1 before a crowd of 1580. Scotland played Ulster United at Toronto, winning 3-0 in front of 6376 people. Incidentally the 3000 crowd in the last game at Montreal is not the official figure.

Dangerously Robust.

Soccer in Spain and Portugal has not reached the status which obtains in the Old Country, and Swansea Town are likely to join the list of clubs who have no desire to make a second visit. The trouble is that the play in Spain and Portugal is unnecessarily robust, and Swansea's tour involved quite a number of injuries.

IRELAND LEADING FIRST DAY'S PLAY

Gives Indications of Re-Establishing Herself in Former Exalted Position

PORT MARNOCK, Ireland, August 17 (Canadian Press Cable). — Judging from her success in the first day's play of the Irish open championship, which commenced here yesterday, Ireland gives indications of re-establishing herself in her former exalted position in competitive golf. W. Nolan, local professional, led the big field representing the golfing talent of England, Ireland, Scotland, and Wales, together with three well-known American stars, Bill Melhorn, Nabholtz, and Redmond. Ireland's triumphs did not stop there, for leading the amateurs was Major Hezlet, present Irish amateur champion.

Nolan, who returned a 72, broke the course record of 73, established by Moses O'Neill. T. Cotton, a young Londoner from Langley Park, tied for second position with Jack Smith, Wentworth, each having 73.

Other leading scores were: Ray, Melhorn, Corlett of Dorset, and Compston each had 75; J. H. Taylor, F. Smyth of Royal Dublin, Murdock of Kilmarnock, Duncan and E. Whitcombe each finished with 76; S. Jolly, Major Hezlet, Nabholtz, F. O'Connor of Woodbrook, and W. Oke of Fulwell scored 77; Herd, and Havers had 79 and 80 respectively; Charles Whitcombe and Ockenden, 80; and Redmond 82.

To-day's round will see the sixty best scores together with those tieing for sixtieth place qualifying for the 72 holes of competition proper, which starts on Thursday.

POWERS WINS BANKERS MATCH

UNFAVORABLE WEATHER

CONNAUGHT RIFLE RANGES, South March, Ont., Aug 17 (Canadian Press).—Under extremely unfavorable weather conditions, Lieut. J. B. Powers, of the Carleton Light Infantry, Grand Falls, N.B., yesterday captured the Bankers' match, cream of the competition at the second day's shooting in the Dominion of Canada Rifle Association meet here. Lieut. Powers ran up a total of 97, closely pressed by Pte. J. H. Regan, 16th Canadian Scottish of Victoria, B.C., who had a 96. Pte. Regan took second place, while Sgt. R. J. Smythe, Winnipeg rifle entry, finished third, also with a 96.

The scores were made under difficult conditions in the way of a cross-range wind, which was very gusty and at times assumed the proportions of a small gale, only to die down at intervals and render accurate sighting a hard task.

The City of Ottawa match was another principal match of the day, while considerable interest was also manifested in the Gzowski match, which is a marching and firing competition, with altogether twenty shots fired at ten different ranges. This latter match was fired under the personal direction of Col. F. F. Clarke, chief range officer, and was witnessed by a large assembly present on the occasion of a garden party given at the ranges on the occasion of the visit to the meet of Their Excellencies the Governor-General and Viscountess Willingdon. The match is a team competition, open to teams of four N.C.O.'s or other ranks from units of His Majesty's forces, and altogether there were fifteen teams entered.

Firing was commenced at the 550-yard range, and carried forward in fifty-yard bounds until the 100-yard distance was reached, and returned to the original firing point. At each distance the targets would be exposed on signal for fifteen seconds, during which period the competitors were required to load and fire their weapons. During the progress of this match Their Excellencies were escorted out on the ranges by Col. John I. McLaren, V.D., president of the B.C. R.A., and Lieut.-Col. W. K. Walker, D.S.O., M.C.

KINGSTON PLAY HERE SATURDAY

Meet Belmonts in First Game of O.S.A. Semi-Finals

JAMES STEVENSON PARK

What should prove to be one of the best softball games witnessed here will be staged Saturday afternoon at 3 o'clock at the James Stevenson Park when the Belmonts will meet Kingston in a semi-final game of the O.S.A. play-offs.

The Belmonts are one of the best representatives Peterborough have had and they should give a good account of themselves in Saturday's fixture. The fact that they beat out the Lockworks, who were practically the same team that represented Peterborough last year, with the addition of a capable twirler like Waddell, proves their strength. On Saturday they will trot out their strongest lineup with Harrison, Carruthers and McLean for mound duty.

The Belmonts outfield is the best in the city and their infield is also of A-1 quality. They are capable of backing their pitchers up with air-tight support, and they have been practicing faithfully to give their best Saturday.

Kingston are sending up the strongest team that has ever represented the Limestone City. With hard ball practically dead down there softball made great strides, with the result that it had one of its best years. The Kingston papers claim that this year's representatives are the best yet, and say the Peterborough aggregation will have to step to win.

Saturday's game should be a great battle, and should draw a record-breaking crowd. The admission price is only 25 cents, and that includes the grandstand.

CHICAGO ADDS LEAGUE LEAD

Defeat Robins 3—0 While Pirates Lose to Giants 8—4

PITCHES 22ND WIN

NEW YORK, Aug. 17.—(Canadian Press).—The Chicago Cubs added to their lead in the National League yesterday by triumphing over the Robins at Brooklyn, 3 to 0, while the Pirates were being given an 8 to 4 beating by the Giants at the Polo Grounds.

Charley Root pitched for the Cubs and turned in his 22nd victory of the season, a mark which gives him a long lead over twirlers of both leagues. Root with his "wrinkle ball" allowed the Robins but five hits and fanned nine batters.

Doug McWeeny started for the Robins and the three Chicago runs were scored off his delivery. It was the Robins' fifth straight defeat.

Pittsburg's downfall at the Polo Grounds was accomplished by a rally by the Giants in the closing innings. Roger Hornsby's 20th homer in the seventh with two on turned the tide and gave his team its sixth straight victory. Aldridge was good in the opening innings, but was driven to cover in the eighth. Barnes of the Giants was relieved by Henry in the seventh and the latter turned in a splendid relief performance.

Break 3-3 Tie.

Breaking a 3 to 3 tie score in the 11th with two runs, the St. Louis Cardinals downed the Braves 5 to 3, at Boston in the opening game of the series. Holm's double, Toporcer's bunt, Frisch's single, two passes by Bob Smith and a sacrifice fly gave the champions their deciding tallies. Frisch's brilliant all around play in the field and at bat featured the game.

At Philadelphia, the Phillies took the opener of a four game series from Cincinnati by 5 to 3. Lester Sweetland outpitching a trio of Red twirlers.

Rixey started for Cincinnati and was knocked out in the fourth. Kolp and Donohue succeeded him.

SELF-EDUCATION

(J. H. Burnham.)

In this article we propose to talk about what is perhaps the most fascinating of earthly pursuits, viz.: chemistry. A few hundred years ago all that was known of chemistry (the constitution of matter) was that the quantities of things were hotness, dryness, coldness and wetness with a tendency to exhibit internal motion, often developing into a tendency to change or take fire, this tendency being called phlogiston and being considered a further quality or property of matter. In time, chemistry developed into a branch of medicine and was confined largely to drugs to be used in the treatment of disease, and hence the chemist and drugseller came to centre in one person, the name "chemist" and "druggist" being carried on even to this day, with the old spelling of chymist instead of the other occasionally occurring. As the properties of substances or matter were thought to be so few and simple it was no wonder that chemists or alchemists, as the more general investigators were called, had an idea that each substance and more particularly each metal was really the same as another, only under different conditions of hotness, &c., and that all could be transmuted one into another and hence made into gold. The first to discover the way to do it would, of course, make his fortune. The laws and constitution of matter were wholly unknown and are the product of later days.

Modern chemistry begins really with the discovery of oxygen by Lavoisier, although Priestley deserves some credit, as does also Boyle who was said to be "the father of chemistry and the brother of the Earl of Cork." Boyle came to the conclusion that matter was made up of compounds which in turn were made up of simple, elementary substances. That was a guess and nothing better. Lavoisier, on finding that upon heating what we call red oxide of mercury, a reddish powder found in nature, that silver bright globules (of mercury) came away and a gas which he named oxygen, weighed the mercury and the gas which he caught in a retort and found that they equalled the weight of the original red powder. Thus the weighing—balance is the first instrument of discovery in chemistry to show or prove what things consisted of.

Chemists then found that substances like oxygen and mercury could not be simplified further and lo: there was confirmation of Boyle's guess.

We will now skip a great space and a long time simply by saying that so far as known there are 92 elements which, when compounded, go to make up all other substances. The earth is made up very largely of oxygen, iron, carbon and silicon (a variety of sand), while the air is made up of compounds (mixtures) almost wholly of nitrogen, carbon and oxygen, all ultimate simple substances. It will be noticed that gases often combine to make solids and when the solids are split up by the action of heat, &c., the gases come away as gases again.

In splitting up numerous substances it was found that apparently matter everywhere is made up of small particles called molecules, 60 times too small for the microscope, which are themselves made up of smaller particles named atoms which also are now found to be made up of still smaller particles called protons (positively electrified) with electrons (other particles) revolving about them, negatively electrified. It has been found as we have said that all substances no matter how different they may look and act are nevertheless made up of some one or more of the 92 elements. How and in what manner these substances were made up became the chief theory of chemists who finally showed that there was no haphazard about it, but that all substances differed the one from the other by some simple, regular change in the combination of the ultimate molecular combinations of atoms. These changes were so regulated by nature that they could be reduced to laws of change and when chemists had found what substances were made of and how and in what quantities the elements combined to make them they had all matter as it were at their mercy and were able to make new compounds which nature had never thought of out of the same elements or irreducible substances which nature used. It is not possible to create, however, new simple substances or elements, only new compounds.

Then by means of analysing light, splitting it up in the prism and identifying the glowing split-up parts with certain earthly solids and gases heated to the point of flame they found that distant stars were also made up of the same substances as our earth and sun, and gave off the same blazing gases and that the whole universe was one. Each different substance heated gives off a band of light peculiar to itself.

It must have been a matter of great astonishment when substances that looked to be wholly different in color and in every other way proved on breaking up (by less or greater degrees of heat) to be the same elements but compounded in different quantities. By a different arrangement of molecules (masses of atoms) as it is called. Substances are all supposed to be really one substance with the ultimate constituent parts of its molecules in different arrangement.

Then scientists go still farther and say that the ultimate particles which make up the molecule are not solid particles at all but simply units of electric energy and that the whole universe is built up from one simple thing, the electric unit, a unit of energy.

Solids, of course, are easily explained, being simply matter cooled down below a certain point whilst gases are that matter heated above the liquid point, the gases differing from the solids and liquids only in that the particles of which they are made are farther away from each other in the gaseous state. The liquid state is the intermediate state which matter assumes when passing under heat or cooling from one to the other.

Now, in closing, I am going to refer to the latest and most wonderful discovery yet made of the processes of action amongst themselves of the particles of matter. It is called catalysis. A catalyst is a substance by whose presence alone other substances are induced to take on activity but which itself in no way enters into the other substances or their activities and results. In other words, nature uses a system of stimulants for inducing change (growth, decay, digestion, variation, &c.). This system of stimulants was really discovered by Pasteur, who said it was confined to living things, whether animal or vegetable. Without it we could not exist. The carbon of the air would not be absorbed and assimilated (digested) by vegetation or the nitrogen by bacteria transferred to the roots of plants. These stimulators (exciters) are essential to the processes of living nature and are called enzymes, being the product of yeasts, bacteria, moulds, &c.

Different substances require different enzymes to act on them and sugar is acted on by one called zymose, the product of yeast bacteria, that separates the sugar into its original constituent materials which are alcohol (ethyl or drinkable alcohol), vinegar (acetic acid), and carbonic acid gas. Another kind of enzyme will split up the alcohol or change it into other products. This process of splitting up is erroneously called fermentation sometimes. It is not fermentation as we understand it but a distinct chemical operation.

When grapes or grain are ready (ripe) enzymes cause them in their full and perfect state to produce alcohol out of themselves by this catylitic action and then as in the case of the flower having served their purpose they relapse into the simple state from which they sprang ready to grow and produce again. Some people seek to prohibit the production of alcohol and it is at such points that points of contact and opposition arise between so-called religion and nature, or science, which is the knowledge of nature. What purpose those expect to save who have arrayed themselves against nature it is difficult to imagine. For mankind to set itself up as a critic of God's plans may be in accordance with some people's ideas of religion but it cannot go far.

Some of the most interesting and terrible of combinations of the original materials out of which all things are made are nitro-glycerine, dynamite, cordite and other high explosives not found in nature. Nor is the oxygen and acetyline flame which appears to be the hottest in existence found in nature.

Sufficient heat will split up and reduce to their simple original elements all substances and it is probable that when the super-heated condition of the universe cooled gradually down combinations of elements became possible and developed and nature arose but this in no way lessens the wonder of God's power and purpose nor does it explain the rise of intelligence and all that it connotes.

The most wonderful thing in the world is not nature but the power of choice which has been given us to choose well or ill and if that is interfered with the whole purpose of religion is destroyed.

Teddy Baldock, whom England hails as the new world's bantamweight champion, has been presented with an illuminated address by the Council of Poplar, of which borough he is a native and resident.

Tommy Milligan's recent unsuccessful attempt to topple the middleweight crown from the brow of Mickey Walker, recalls the fact that the last British holder of the middleweight title was Kid Lewis. Lewis won it from the American, Jack Britton, in New York, and lost it six weeks later to the same opponent after a terrific battle.

OSHAWA WINS SECOND GAME FROM KIWANIS

St. Andrew's Juniors Beat Local Boys 17—2 at Oshawa

OSHAWA WINS ROUND

Pitching better ball than on Saturday but lacking support, "Lefty" Guiry and his Kiwanis Juniors suffered a 17—2 defeat at the hands of St. Andrew's of Oshawa in the Motor City yesterday. Added to their win here, this gives Oshawa the round.

Guiry was much steadier than his previous game, but lacking support from both outfield and infield, lost his head when the St. Andrew's ran up eight runs in the second and third innings. The Club boys made a rally in the fifth when they scored their only runs, but the Oshawa team made a tally of three additional runs in their half of the inning.

Ogden, hurling for Oshawa, pitched steady ball and was well supported, they evidently being familiar with the rough diamond that in some manner accounted for many of the errors of the Peterborough team. Young, third baseman for St. Andrews, was probably the outstanding player of the game, getting a homer, one triple and two singles.

First Inning

Kiwanis.—LeBarr reached first on error of Little. Baker was out at first on throw from Luke, after the latter dropped the third ball. Westbrooke was passed, and LeBarr was out at the home bag when Sturgeon singled. Graham grounded out to retire the side.

Oshawa.—Carver hit a single. Baird grounded out to Guiry. Rowden fanned, followed by Young, to end their half of the first.

Second Inning

Kiwanis.—Hall fanned, and Hollingsworth grounded out. Gillespie stirred up some interest by a hot two bagger, but this was short lived when Guiry struck out.

Oshawa.— Gummow reached first on Hollingsworth's error. Hobell hit a hot one through Graham, allowing Gummow to reach home for the first counter, and Hobell rested on third. Little hit a two bagger and Hobell came home. Luke struck out. Ogden was passed by Guiry, and Little came home when Carver singled. Baird hit a single, but a double play retired Ogden and Carver.

Third Inning

Kiwanis.—LeBarr singled but overran second in an attempt to steal. Baker struck out, and Westbrooke lifted the pill to Hobell in the garden.

Oshawa. — Young hit safely, but Gummow flied out to Gillespie, who handled it nicely. Young stole third, and Baker, in a frantic effort to catch him, threw the ball to third. The baseman was out of position and Young came home. Hobell flied out to Westbrooke. Little reached first on Sturgeon's error. Luke and Ogden were passed. Carver singled. Baird hit to Guiry, who fumbled. Rowden grounded out.

Fourth Inning

Kiwanis. — Sturgeon singled and was nabbed at second in an effort to steal. Graham reached first when Young dropped a pop fly and stole second. Hall grounded out. Hollingsworth flied out.

Fifth Inning

Kiwanis.— Gillespie grounded out. Guiry singled. LeBarr made the round trip when his hit got away from Rowden, bringing in two. Westbrooke struck out. Sturgeon grounded out.

Oshawa.—Carver singled. Baird singled. Graham made a nice one-handed catch of Rowden's fly. Young singled, bringing home Carver and Baird. Gummow singled. Hobbell struck out.

Sixth Inning

Kiwanis.—Graham singled. Hall flied out. Hollingsworth was passed. Hobbell caught a fly from Gillespie. Guiry grounded out.

Oshawa. — Little hit a homer. Sturgeon replaced Giury. Luke grounded out. Ogden struck by pitcher when deliberately stepping in way of ball. Baird walked. Young hit a three bagger. Gummow grounded out. Hobbell flied out.

Seventh Inning

Kiwanis.—LeBarr struck out. Baker struck out. Westbrooke grounded out.

Mlle. Simone Thion de la Chaume again won the women's open golf championship of France when, in the recent tournament at Le Touquet, she defeated Mrs. Alec. Johnston in the 36-holes final by the record margin of 15 up and 14 to play. No championship tournament in Europe ever before was won by such a margin. A parallel is to be found, however, in the annals of the game on this side of the Atlantic. In the final for Canadian title six years ago Miss Cecil Leitch, the English star, defeated Miss Molly McBride by 17 and 15.

A Beautiful Exterior and Convenient Plan

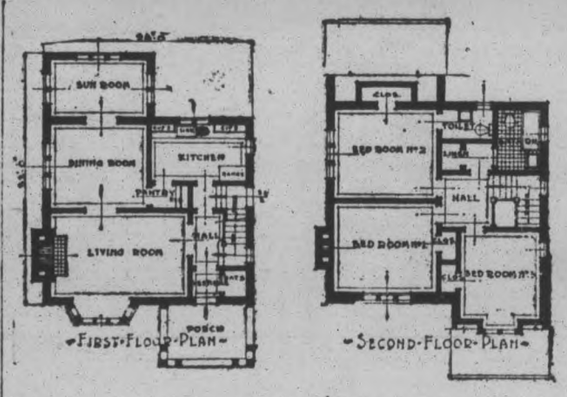
This home combines a delightful English exterior with an interior layout that is modern in every respect, and will also be found entirely suitable for our Canadian climate. It is planned for a thirty-five foot lot, allowing five feet for a mutual driveway, or a forty foot lot for an individual driveway.

The main hall is separated from the outside front entrance by a vestibule with a large coat closet, a feature which is most appreciated during the winter months. As one enters the hall, at the right is the stairway with an attractive lighted landing. The window is of the leaded glass casement type as are also all other windows in the house.

The living room is 13 by 19 feet and has a bay comprised of five windows, three in front and one at each side. To some of you, perhaps, the location of the large brick fireplace may not at first have the slightest significance, but look at it in the light of the prominence of its glowing appeal when entering the room.

French doors lead to the dining room and from there to the sunroom. The dining room is 11 by 13 feet 6 inches and the sunroom 8 by 13 feet 6 inches. A decided feature of the arrangement of these rooms, including the living room, is what one might call their flexibility for entertaining purposes, and also the charming vistas from either end of the house to the other.

In the kitchen, there are windows on two sides to provide for cross ventilation and their combined area is commendable from the viewpoint of light. The access to the dining room, service entry and front hall is most convenient, but not direct. You will understand the inference—very desirable from the viewpoint of sound, smell and vision. The small pantry between the kitchen and dining room provides space for a refrigerator which can be iced from the service entry, and above the refrigerator is a china cupboard. If desired, and it would improve the view from the dining room, the refrigerator and china cupboard could be built in together.



On the second floor are three good sized bedrooms with clothes closets; a tiled bathroomwith pedestal basin, and a large linen closet. A destinctive feature is the separate two-piece toilet off the owner's bedroom.

Including hot water heating and electric wiring providing for an electric range and numerous base plugs, the approximate cost of this house is $7,800.

Readers desiring further information regarding the plans and specifications for this house should communicate with the architect direct. Address, Harold R. Watson, Excelsior Life Building, Toronto, Ont. Copyright, 1927, MacLean Building Reports, Limited.

"The Fast Way to Health"

THE BREATH OF LIFE

From the first cry of the baby to the last gasp before death the body is dependent upon a steady supply of air. You may live many weeks without food, many days without water, but barely four minutes if your air supply is suddenly shut off. While life lasts, poisonous gases are constantly being thrown out through the lungs, and the vital oxygen of the atmosphere is taken into the body through the lungs, furnishing the system with this precious element to give vitality and assist in correct metabolism.

Most of us do not breathe deeply enough because our diaphragmatic muscles are insufficiently developed. The tubercular or asthmatic patient invariably has such poor control over this function that the action of the diaphragm is almost imperceptible under the X-ray examination.

If children were taught to develop control over their breathing we would have practically no tuberculosis. It does not take much breathing to sustain life, but if we want to be radiating fountains of vitality, we must develop our breathing apparatuses to an extraordinary degree. Learn diaphragmatic control as taught to singers, whether you ever sing a note or not.

While taking your walks each day, practice systematic breathing, inhaling, and exhaling every so many steps. When inhaling, first of all fill the lower part of the lungs with air so that your abdomen protrudes, and then let the chest expand without too much effort. The main expansion should be around the waist, just above the navel. When exhaling, gradually contract the ribs and waist, making an effort to reduce the region around the lower ribs to the smallest possible circumference. It is not necessary to strain yourself, and after you get the knack of inhaling you will find it very easy, and you will be rewarded with increased vitality and a virility you have never before experienced. After a while you will find that your lungs are working with a steady, measured rhythm, and that the normal inhalation of eighteen per minute is furnishing you with twice the amount of oxygen you have been getting, and the exhalation will cleanse your system of double the amount of poisonous gases.

The Hindoo Yogies, who are adepts at breath control, believe that cosmic energy is actually drawn into the lungs with each breath and distributed to all parts of the body. They have certainly been able to demonstrate some marvelous powers through breath control and, whether or not their theory about the distribution of pranic energy is true, the results of taking these exercises are undoubtedly beneficial, and often startling. Perhaps the effects produced are from the visualization and expectation of what is desired. At any rate, you will find both the diaphragmatic and the measured-breath control exercises to be exceedingly helpful in the cultivation of more abundant health.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

QUESTION: J. T. B. asks: "Should one eat his meal if it is time but he is not hungry?"

ANSWER: There would not be much sickness or many digestive disorders if people would only eat when hungry. Appetite and hunger are quite different, but you should at least have an appetite before your meals or you should wait and miss as many meals as necessary until there is a return of your normal appetite.

QUESTION: A. M. C. writes: "For two years I have had pellagra, and am in a rundown condition. My heart seems to run away at times. I am five feet tall, twenty-three years of age and weigh 106 pounds. Am I underweight? I would also like to know what would be a good diet."

ANSWER: First, take a fruit fast for a few days, and then live on a well-balanced diet such as I outline each week in this column. These menus will be sufficient to correct your trouble after you have taken the fruit fast.

Theatres

AT THE CAPITOL

The sturdy Richard Dix will be seen in a display of athletic prowess in "Knockout Reilly", his newest starring effort for Paramount to-morrow at the Capitol Theatre.

"Knockout Reilly", is briefly, a saga of fisticuffs wherein a young steel puddler finds life a high adventure. Action starts off with a bang when Dix knocks out Killer Agerra (Jack Renault) a pugilistic champion, for making advances to Mary Malone (Mary Brian), a dancer in a cabaret that both men frequent. When Mary's brother Pat, former champion who has been defeated in a crooked fight by Renault learns of it, he urges Reilly to enter the ring under his supervision. But Reilly will have none of it till little later when he is decoyed to Aggera's gymnasium and beaten up by the Killer and his gang. He swears revenge and under Malone's tutelage fights his way up to a bout with "The Killer." Aggera has a change of heart when he hears reports of Reilly's excellent condition. In a village store near Reilly's training camp, a lumberman is wounded in a gun fight. Evidence points to Reilly who is convicted and sentenced to two years in prison.

The rock pile keeps him in condition. Mary believes in him and strengthens him in his determination to stage a comeback. Reilly's return to the ring is dramatic. Agerra is matched to meet a fighter who fails to put in an appearance, and a packed house clamors for action. Reilly to all appearance prison wrecked arrives and is accepted as a substitute. Follows excitement enough for any fight fan. Things more to a roaring finish. Suspense is held to the very end.

Joe Humphries, whose fog-horn voice has announced all the big championship fights for the last twenty years, is the ring announced for the Dix-Renault bout.

Playing dramatic roles in the picture are Larry McGrath, former featherweight boxer who recently has been the leading Los Angeles referee; Eddie Garvey, former Notre Dame football star who boxed professionally after graduation, and Tommy Madden, whose cauliflower ears tell his story.

In Dix's training camp, fighters who appear are Kid Lewis, former bantamweight champion of the U.S. Army; Billy Vidabeck, prominent light heavyweight; Jack Perry, the light heavyweight who played the pugilist in the stage play, "Is Zat So?" and Sailor Gibbs, a featherweight of the U.S. Navy.

The last touch of prize ring authenticity is added to "Knockout Reilly" by the fact that Richard Dix's chauffeur, Scotty Devlin, is a former prizefighter. Dix boxed with him while training for the picture.

Dix's leading woman is Mary Brian, who since the picture probably knows more about fights and fighters than any other young lady of eighteen years in the whole country.

"IRISH HEARTS," with May McAvoy, is a Warner Bros. picturization of this novel.

SYNOPSIS

Sheila Kildare and her father emigrate to America from Killanmaul, Ireland, following Emmett Murtaugh, to whom Sheila is betrothed. Neither of the men will hold steady jobs in New York City, Murtaugh becoming a truck driver for a band of bootleggers. Sheila makes friends with the family of Rory O'Shea, a professional boxer, whose kindness interests her. Murtaugh is involved with Clarice Clancey, a cabaret girl. At the night club she is approached by a mysterious man who wants to know Murtaugh.

"Who's the other one?" asked the thin leader.

"Don't know him. Think I've seen him around, but all these guys look alike today, the ones that wear their hair slick. He seems familiar, but I can't place him."

"Do you think this girl will come through?"

"Maybe; he's not wise enough to be suspicious, and if we can line him up we'll take Mannie Clocker for plenty. That ship he's got on the way in has got a hundred and fifty thousand dollars' worth of uncut stuff if its got a drop. And it's stuff we can cut three times and it'll still be good!"

The music stopped and the conversation among the three was silenced. Leisurely they paid their accounts and bidding farewell to Clarice and Cissie they passed out into the street. The three parted quickly in front of the door and each hailed a different taxi-cab, though all gave the same address, a very quiet and orderly family hotel downtown.

"He won, mother, he won!"

CHAPTER IX
Rory O'Shea's Battle.

Mrs. O'Shea herself climbed the three flights of stairs that led to the Kildare apartment to invite Sheila and Old Tom down to hear announcement, round by round, of the fights at the Garden over the radio. Old Tom demurred at first, as he still was ashamed of quitting his job with Tim O'Shea, but the novelty of radio tempted him. They were the only guests. The other children of the O'Sheas all owned homes and radio equipment of their own. Not only that, but jobs to go to early in the morning. They couldn't afford to be wasting their sleeping hours by visiting the old folks in the midweek. At least, so old Mrs. O'Shea assured Sheila.

Michael O'Shea censored the reception. He experimented with one station after another, catching a marvelous concert by one of the most popular jazz orchestras, or by reference to the daily program he would manage to capture a program of old-fashioned songs of which Kathie, his wife, was so fond. But he kept his ear on the station broadcasting from the Garden that night, and when the preliminary bouts were uninteresting he shut them off pre-emptorily. So carefully did he time his return to the Garden station that they caught even the few introductions of other lightweights which immediately preceded the O'Shea-Campeau bout.

The eyes of the proud mother and father lighted when the announcement came that their Rory had entered the ring. The cheers for O'Shea that swept the huge hall brought an electric tingle to the cheeks of Sheila. Here was a hero! Campeau's reception was not so sweeping for the French lad had not yet won the hearts of the fans. Too few had seen him in action to have become true hero worshippers.

The preliminaries to the bout were short. The management was anxious to get on to the Brown—Malloy go. The managers of the heavyweight fighters had already warned the promoter repeatedly not to occasion any unnecessary delay no matter how popular the rest of the card proved to be with the crowd.

The first and second rounds were without much interest. The men had fought each other before and they were wary of the pitfalls which they knew existed. Toward the end of the second the "boo" chorus began, but it was short lived. There was a sharp exchange, toe to toe, just as the bell rang and the warmed up fans applauded.

"Take him Rory, take him!" "Carry the fight to the frog!" "Go on Campeau!" "Mix it up, mix it up!"

The bell for the third round quieted the audience. Campeau and O'Shea opened up now. Rory to his own satisfaction had found that the two previous rounds had left him hardly with a sweat. He sprang from his chair to meet Campeau near the latter's own corner. Returned confidence made Rory the aggressor and he carried the fight to his rival. But Campeau remained unharmed. The youth of the boy was holding out gamely against Rory's superior ringmanship. Experience and youth equalized the fighting qualities of the two men and while the round of fast fighting lifted the galleries to their feet, neither man showed appreciable damage and the round was even, just as had been the first two.

Sheila was now thoroughly aroused and excited. The calling of blows meant nothing to her, for she did not understand the language of the prize ring but when the voice of the announcer rang out: "Campeau draws first blood with left jab," Sheila felt her heart jump but was quickly reassured when old Mrs. O'Shea put in quietly, "Rory always did bleed easily in the nose, even when he was a baby."

It was the end of the sixth round that Rory began to feel the pace. He had carried the fight to the other and had delivered as much punishment as he had taken, but he feared Campeau's quicker recovery due to youth.

"Take it careful, Rory," whispered Jimmy Tree as he and Reagan sponged him down. "No more chances now. You can go the twelve rounds easy and you've still got the punch that'll win, if you wait for it. Tire him out a bit and take it easy. He'll probably start in to finish you now. Let's hope he does. Just wait and shoot it home; and, don't waste a single one. If you haven't got it pointed, don't shoot! You're going fine and remember you can do only what you think you can do!"

The sixth proved unsatisfactory to the crowd. Campeau rushed his opponent, but skilful Rory easily avoided these onslaughts and forced Campeau to waste precious strength in efforts against the wily older man. Campeau deserved the round for sheer agressiveness, but Rory walked to his chair with a smile and waved to a couple of newspaper writers who yelled good luck to him.

"That's the stuff, Rory," Reagan cried. "You're fresher now compared with him than you were at the end of the fourth. It's a win you'll get sure out of this."

"Now, for the lucky seventh," said Rory as he spat out the water and relaxed for those precious ten seconds that precede the bell.

Campeau was more wary this round. Each man felt out his opponent trying to judge the remaining strength and stamina in the other. And as the seconds passed in this skilful fencing Rory actually felt new vitality sweep into his body. Still he waited. He knew he must win by a knockout and he must be sure that the opening was made to order. Campeau advanced, there was an exchange of jabs and Rory sent his right to the jaw. It rocked Campeau and O'Shea followed it with his left. Campeau's body bent and he started to the floor but before his knees touched the canvas Rory shot his right again. It went home truly and Campeau was out, knocked unconscious without so much as a bruise to show where the blow had landed on his chin.

"One! Two!" the count came slowly across the air and into the little apartment where mother and father waited and a girl listened wide-eyed and confused. Here was suspense but by the time the call of "eight" had sounded the cheers and the cries of Rory O'Shea's name left no doubt as to the winner.

"He won, mother, he won!" Old Mike shouted and even Old Tom Kildare cried, "Good Boy, Rory, good boy!" "God Bless him," added his mother. Sheila alone was silent. She did not know what to do or what to say, but she was glad that Rory had won his fight.

The colorful scene as it was described by radio was not without its shock to Sheila. Brutal calls of the gallery fans for blood had sickened her. It seemed unfair for her, unmanly for men to howl for two of their own kind to try to slaughter each other. The business of the Great War had hardly touched at Killanmaul, save for the half dozen out of the whole countrysides who had gone into it.

OUTLINE OF SCIENCE

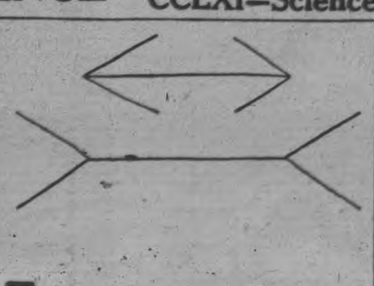
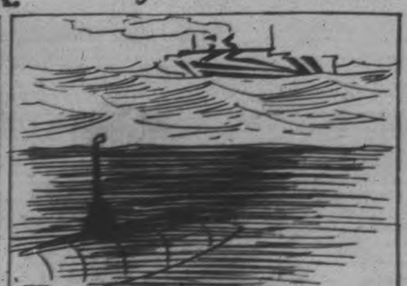
by MAX HAHN

THE OBJECT OF NAVAL CAMOUFLAGE WAS DIFFERENT FROM LAND CAMOUFLAGE. INSTEAD OF CONCEALMENT, ITS PURPOSE WAS TO DISTRACT AND DECEIVE. IT WAS IMPOSSIBLE TO CONCEAL SHIPS. EVEN THOUGH THEY COULDN'T BE SEEN THEY COULD BE BETRAYED BY THE U-BOAT'S MICROPHONE.



BECAUSE CONCEALMENT WAS OUT OF THE QUESTION THE NAVAL CAMOUFLEURS BASED THEIR WORK ON OPTICAL ILLUSIONS. YOU ARE FAMILIAR WITH THE PROBLEM OF WHICH OF THE TWO CENTER LINES IS LONGER. YOU WOULD GUESS THAT THEY WERE UNEQUAL, BUT IF YOU MEASURE THEM YOU WILL FIND THAT THEY ARE THE SAME LENGTH.

THIS AND OTHER ILLUSIONS WHICH HAVE BEEN OBSERVED BY PHYSICISTS WERE THE BASIS OF DAZZLE PAINTING OR MARINE CAMOUFLAGE. WHEN THE LINES ARE APPLIED SCIENTIFICALLY TO A SHIP IT IS VIRTUALLY IMPOSSIBLE TO ESTIMATE A SHIP'S SIZE, SPEED AND COURSE BY A FEW GLANCES THROUGH A PERISCOPE.



HENCE IT WAS THAT THE U-BOAT COMMANDER WAS FOOLED TIME AFTER TIME BY A DAZZLE-PAINTED SHIP. PERHAPS HE CAUGHT A GLIMPSE OF THE SHIP WHEN IT WAS THREE MILES AWAY. HE SUBMERGED AND SPED TOWARD WHERE HE THOUGHT IT WOULD BE, ONLY TO FIND THAT THE SHIP WAS NOWHERE TO BE FOUND AND HE HAD BEEN HOODWINKED AGAIN.

WALKER ESTATE GOES TO FAMILY

Brothers and Sisters Get the Money Inherited From Searles.

NEW YORK, Aug. 17.—(Canadian Press.)— The will of Arthur T. Walker, heir to the fortune of Edward F. Searles, Methuen, Mass., recluse, leaves the bulk of his thirty million dollar estate to his four sisters and two brothers. The will, which was filed in Brooklyn, to-day, also provided a two hundred thousand dollar bequest to Walker's secretary, E. E. Rudd. Mr. Walker, who was a native of Chatham, Ontario, was buried in that city last Saturday.

FLIGHT TO ROME TO START TO-NIGHT

If Two Storm Areas Over Atlantic Clear Up To-day

ROOSEVELT FIELD, N. Y., Aug. 17. — Indications were strong at the hangars to-day that if the two storm areas in the North Atlantic should clear off during the day, the monoplane 'Old Glory' would take off for Rome at five o'clock to-night.

Mechanics worked all night on the giant single motored Fokker, and early to-day its two pilots, Lloyd Bertraud and James Hill, announced that all preparations were completed for the ocean hop.

Would Encounter Storm

HALIFAX, N.S., (Canadian Press) —Although weather conditions off Newfoundland were suitable for flying today, reports obtained by the wireless office at the naval dockyard here indicated that unfavorable weather would meet the monoplane Old Glory if it left New York this afternoon, on its projected flight to Rome. Cape Race predicted fresh winds, mostly southerly, with unsettled and showery weather.

It Rid the System of Rheumatism

Lasting relief was obtained when the uric acid poisons were cleansed from the system by Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

After all there is nothing like Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills to get rid of the poisons in the system which cause pains, aches, lumbago and rheumatism. Dr. Chase's Liniment affords relief from the pain but to get rid of the cause it is necessary to go deeper and regulate the action of kidneys, liver and bowels.

Mrs. Ada Kincade, Drayton, Ont., writes:—

"For years my husband suffered from rheumatism. He tried treatment from many doctors, but received little relief. He also tried several remedies recommended, without avail. Two years ago after he had been unable to move or turn in bed for several weeks, a neighbor came in and recommended Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. I went down and purchased a box of these, which seem to have entirely relieved him, for he has never had an attack since. I take great pleasure in recommending these pills to anyone suffering from rheumatism."

Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills—35 cts. per box, all dealers, or The Dr. A. W. Chase Medicine Company, Limited, Toronto, Canada.

BELLEVILLE MAN GETS U.S. PENSION

Served in Cuba in 1898—Knew Nothing of Rights

BELLEVILLE, August 17. — Geo. A. Hill, gasoline service station proprietor of Bridge street West, owes his acquisition of a cheque for $309 back pension money and the announcement that he would receive a pension of $30 a month for his service in the Spanish-American War, to a chance conversation.

A tourist stopped at Hill's station last year, and the latter noticed a Spanish war button on his customer's coat. Hill, who is a native of Belleville, mentioned that he had served in the Cuban campaign, whereupon the tourist told of the pension that he was receiving. When Hill said that he was not receiving one the visitor took his name and address and details of service, promising to take up his case. In due time papers came to be filled and yesterday Hill received the cheque and the notification that the pension would be payable to him hereafter every month.

LOCAL DOG OWNERS ARE INTERESTED

Intend To Make This Year's Dog Show at Exhibition a Winner.

Peterborough is quite a centre for well bred dogs of all breeds, which is one of the reasons why the Dog Show in past years has been so successful. Another reason is due to the fact that the Peterborough Show is handled with the maximum of efficiency.

The directors are asking this year that local dog owners get their dogs in shape and enter them in the show in greater numbers than ever. The bigger the entry list, the better standing this show will have with the Canadian Kennel Club, under which auspices the show is held.

The judges, Dr. James E. Hair, a noted all-breed judge all the way from New Brunswick where he is acting as judge, to meet his appointment here.

The officials and members of the committee will give any one information on application. Mr. W. S. Mercil is chairman, and Mr. W. E. Jackson is secretary-treasurer.

FOUNTAIN NEEDS REPAIR IS CHARGE

Spray On Brown Memorial Too Strong, is Visitor's Statement.

A heavy barrage of criticism was yesterday directed against the City Council of Peterborough by J. Tighe, a Toronto man, the owner of some property in the west end of the city. Commenting on the present condition of the drinking fountain erected on Confederation Square as a memorial to Captain A. T. Brown, he said that he tried in vain to get a drink of water at the fountain.

"I tried, and got the water sprayed all over me," was his charge.

CROWDS AWAIT FLIERS.

WHEELER FIELD, T.H., August 17 (Canadian Press). — Through rain squalls descending intermittently along the 25-mile road between here and Honolulu, scores of automobiles loaded with aviation enthusiasts began a hegira soon after midnight to witness the arrival of the planes in the Dole race from San Francisco.

The Army made ample preparations for feeding the multitude expected at the field. To provide provender for the thousands, field kitchens had been placed at strategic positions, and were doing a land office business.

The after-theatre crowds in Honolulu journeyed virtually en masse to the aviation field, dinner jackets mingling with overalls and evening gowns with cotton dresses in the gathering throngs

HOAX IS CAUSE OF MAN'S CLAIM

Toronto Veteran Finds That Papers About Uncle Are False.

WILL TAKE ACTION.

TORONTO, August 17. — Canadian Press. — Herbert Walton today declared that a hoax by former school fellows in England, was responsible for his assumption that he had inherited a Baronicy and an estate of $260 00, by the death of an uncle in England. Walton, a returned soldier received advices from friends in Winnipeg to-day, which indicated that the papers and documents forwarded him from England were false. These papers had been accepted as genuine not only by Walton but by the bank handling his affairs. He added that he intended to take action against the persons who had misled him.

McElhiney was injured by an automobile, was heard in the Police Court this morning when George Rutherford was charged before Magistrate O. A. Langley with reckless driving. The Hon. G. N. Gordon, K.C., on behalf of the accused, pleaded not guilty On account of the fact that Mrs. McElhiney is still unable to appear in court, the prosecution asked and received an adjournment until Wednesday, August 31.

Mr. Gordon stated in court that Mrs. McElhiney was still confined to bed in St. Joseph's Hospital. On Saturday she was allowed to sit up for a short time, but on Sunday she grew weaker. Reports this morning indicated that she was progressing more favorably.

New High Records Made By Many Issues To-day

NEW YORK, Aug. 17 (Canadian Press).—Speculators for the advance encountered stiffer resistance in today's stock market, but they succeeded in lifting more than a score of issues to new high records.

Hudson assumed leadership of the motor group, with the demand for that issue accelerated by talk of an increased or extra dividend at the next meeting of directors. General Motors was sluggish early in the session and resumption of the advance in Chrysler ran into heavy profit-taking, but Packard was again boosted to a new high.

The advance in rails was checked by a disappointing freight traffic report for the first week of August, but special strength was shown by Peoria and Eastern and Western Maryland.

Oil and Liquor Stocks Feature Toronto Trading

TORONTO, Aug. 17 (Canadian Press).—Oil and liquor stocks were active features of the big market on the Toronto Stock Exchange today, and in the absence of a definite trend in other sections, set an upward pace. McCall in heavy dealing climbed two points at 42½ and Imperial Oil half at 49½. International Petroleum firmed ⅝ at 31¾. British American Oil eased an eighth at the noon close at 26¼. Gooderham and Worts was the outstandingly strong liquor stock gaining two and a quarter points at 49¾. Walker was a half better at 45, and Carling, heavily dealt in, a quarter higher at 29.

In the regular list Cement gained more than a point at 161, and Brazilian almost a point at 171¼. Cosmos at 28½ and Canners Preferred at 91½ were around a point better. A little weakness occurred in Hayes Wheels and International Nickel.

Kirkland's Advance Checked On Standard

TORONTO, Aug. 17 (Canadian Press).—The advance in Kirkland Lake stocks on the mining exchange received something of a check today although trading was on a much heavier scale; the morning turnover exceeded three-quarters of a million shares. Hollinger sold up another 15 at 18.15, but Kirkland Lake eased one at 1.95 and Kirkland Hunton closed steady at 14 at noon. Wright Hargreaves made another five cent gain at 6.45. Lake Shore sold up twenty at 22.20.

Outside of this group Laval Quebec and McIntyre were the features. Laval in heavy trading climbed nearly three points at 34¾ and McIntyre forty cents at 25.80. Amulet gained 15 at 4.33 and Teck Hughes four at 9.24. Beaver at 148 and Potter Doal at 13 were about the only reactionary stocks.

Wheat Opens Firmer But Weakens Quickly

CHICAGO, Aug. 17. — (Canadian Press.)— Unfavorable weather west and north-west, coupled with scattered buying, gave wheat a firm undertone at the start to-day. The advance was short lived, however, as prices soon fell to below yesterday's finish under increased pressure. Opening unchanged to 3-8c. higher, wheat soon suffered a general decline. Continued cool and wet weather gave firmness to corn, which started 1-8 to 5-8c. up, but later eased off under pressure. Oats sympathized with other grain and provisions ruled easy.

Opening prices were: Wheat, September 1.42, December 1.46¾. Corn, September, 1.11 1-8, December 1.15¼. Oats, September 48 3-8, December 52¼.

MARINES IN BARRACKS.

U. S. Troops Confined Because of Increasing Tension in Shanghai.

SANGHAI, Aug. 17 (Canadian Press).—United States Marines were confined to their quarters tonight in preparation for a possible emergency as a result of suddenly increased tension between the British and the Chinese, arising out of the seizure of the wings of a British airplane by Chinese authorities yesterday.

PAVING RECALLS SWIMMING HOLE

Goose Pond Used To Cover a Greater Area and Contain Island.

STREET COVERS PART.

Carrying out the contracts allotted by the City Council, the Amiesite Company has started the work of paving Smith Street between George and Water Streets, and the strip on Water Street from Dublin to Antrim Streets.

The paving of the portion of Water Street now under construction was delayed until the city authorities were satisfied that there was no danger of subsidence of the land formerly occupied by what was known as the Goose Pond, filled in years ago. Goose Pond was one of the favorite spots of the city to the boys of a generation ago.

In the river, some distance from Goose Pond, was a little island which has since disappeared. The many logs that were brought near the shore by the eddying waters were used as floating bridges by the boys travelling to the island, which became the stripping ground for the "cle swimming hole."

But the building of the dam on London Street raised the level of the waters, which covered the island and obliterated a juvenile happy hunting ground.

TRY MAGNESIA FOR INDIGESTION

People who suffer from indigestion usually have tried pepsin, charcoal, drugs and various digestive aids and got little more than slight temporary relief—sometimes not even that.

But before giving up to chronic dyspepsia, just try the effect of a little Bisurated Magnesia—not the ordinary commercial corbonate, citrate or milk, but pure Bisurated Magnesia which you can obtain from practically any druggist in either powder or tablet form.

Take a teaspoonful of the powder or four tablets with a little water after your next meal, and see what a difference this makes. It will instantly neutralize the dangerous, harmful acid in the stomach which now causes your food to ferment, and sour, making gas, wind, flatulence, heartburn and the bloated or heavy, lumpy feeling that seems to follow most everything you eat. You can enjoy your meals without a fear of indigestion.

OLD LACROSSE BALL REVIVES MEMORIES

Jack Creighton, caretaker of James Stevenson Park, has been unearthing some interesting relics lately. A short while ago he found a lacrosse ball under the reserved stand which looks and acts like anything but a lacrosse ball now. It was buried under a foot of earth and is as hard as a stone and will bounce about as well.

Until Alex Kay whittled the side it was hard to tell that it was not a croquet ball. It, no doubt, was lost about the time Jack and Jim McCabe, George Lipsett, Rolly Glover, Ernie Wasson, Dinnie Dobbin, Joe Begley, Fred Lynch, Badger Brown, Lionel King, Percy Rubidge, Chris. Graham, Bill Meagher, Bill Crowley, Dr. McPherson and others played the game, and there is no doubt but that the losing of the ball held up the game indefinitely or postponed it altogether until another ball could be obtained.

Any team that could boast of more than one lacrosse ball in those days was in affluence.

The other relic is a golf ball which has been hidden so long it has grown whiskers. Earliest recollection cannot reveal Riverside Park as a golf course.

WHEELER FIELD, T.H., Aug. 17.—(Canadian Press.)—"Look for trouble and you are sure to find it," one ambulance driver believes. Driving his vehicle on to the flying field to be ready for emergency service when the Dole dash ends, he piloted his machine over three sleeping soldiers. The soldiers, the first Dole casualties on the island, were quickly placed in the ambulance and rushed to hospital.

BRITISH AND CHINESE DISPUTE FOLLOWING LANDING OF PLANE OUTSIDE FOREIGN TERRITORY

Have Repeatedly Protested Against Airmen Flying Over Nationalist Area.

CUT OFF RAILWAY.

Foreign Minister Announces Nanking Intends To Use Incident For Showdown.

SHANGHAI, August 18 (Canadian Press). — In the midst of an increasing chaos in both the military and political situations in the Yangtse Valley, an incident arising out of the forced landing of a British military plane on Chinese territory on Tuesday has developed a tense situation between the Chinese authorities and the British expeditionary force here.

Although the particular spot where the plane landed was held by Chinese soldiers, was the Kiangwan golf course, this land, nevertheless, lies outside of the international settlement of Shanghai. The Chinese authorities have repeatedly protested against British airmen flying over any and all Chinese territory whether used by foreigners who play golf or by Chinese generals for manoeuvring.

Dr. C. C. Wu, Minister of Foreign Affairs for the Nanking Nationalist Government, announced yesterday the Chinese intend to use the incident for a showdown in the matter of flights over Chinese territory.

"The British in the eyes of the Chinese and international law are criminals as regards their aviation policy in China," Dr. Wu said, adding that though the Chinese had not the force to meet British "imperialism," they intended to let the world know what the British were doing.

The aeroplane incident has resulted in certain British demands for the return of the wings of the plane, which was the only part of the machine that a Royal Air Force detachment had not carried off to safety before the Chinese troops arrived

Cut Off Railroad.

When the Chinese refused to restore the wings, Major-General John Duncan, the British commander, ordered the railway between Shanghai, Hanchow, and Ningpo to be cut south of Soochow Creek, and British troops were posted at strategic points around the city, thus re-occupying the posts held by them during the troubles several months ago which followed the capture of Shanghai by the Nationalists.

In connection with the plane incident, the semi-official Chinese Kuomin News Agency stated that the British "ultimatum" did not dismay Chinese officials, and that suitable measures would be taken to uphold Chinese rights.

The posting of the British troops has re-directed attention to the general military situation, which is looked upon in foreign circles as charged with unpleasant possibilities in view of reports that the Northern Chinese forces had captured Pukow, and yesterday afternoon were bombarding Nanking, across the Yangtse. British subjects were being evacuated from Nanking to British war vessels.

Shanghai continues to be the richest prize for military capture, and with the retirement of General Chiang-Kai-Shek, various Nationalist leaders are now attempting to gain control.

Leaders Dispute.

There are approximately 8,000 troops in the Shanghai district split among four generals. Various units are reported to be fighting for precedence in reaching Shanghai, and dissension and jealousy are stated to be rife among the leaders. Considerable concern is developing among the foreign population regarding possible developments.

The United States marines in Shanghai were confined to their quarters last night in preparation for any possible emergency as a result of the suddenly increased tension between the British and Chinese.

NOT SERIOUS.

LONDON, August 18 (Canadian Press). — British official circles do not take a serious view of the plane incident at Shanghai.

It was said that the British diplomatic and military representatives on the ground would be left to settle the question as they have previously settled many problems arising out of the presence of the expeditionary force in China.

No fear, it was stated, was held in Downing Street that an amicable arrangement would not be made with the Chinese authorities.

Handing Back Wings

LONDON, Aug. 18 (Canadian Press).—The Chinese authorities in Shanghai, Reuter's says, are handing over today the wings of the British military aeroplane, which were seized after the plane was forced to descend outside the international settlement. After the delivery of the wings, the correspondent says, the British will immediately remove the break in the railway which they cut yesterday and withdraw to the settlement.

TEN ENROLLED IN HEIFER CLUB

Young People Agree To Raise Pure Bred Aryshires and Show Them.

TO FORM SHEEP CLUB.

Ten members have been enrolled in the Junior Ayrshire Heifer Club in this district. The names are Dawson Paul, Roy Wheeler, Alec. Tyres, Earl Roseborough, Fred Anderson, Aubrey Blakely, Gordon Kidd, all of Smith; Clarence Mann and Margaret Mann of Bridgenorth, and Harry Jackson of Omemee.

The cattle arrived last week and have been distributed one to each member of the club. These heifers are all pure bred, about two years old and in splendid condition. Four of them were being raised for show at the Royal Winter Fair.

The Junior Club will figure on the programme of the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition; the Agricultural Representative of the Provincial Department, J. B. Nelson, will arrange the judging and the Exhibition Board will be responsible for the prizes.

The boys of the club have agreed to look after the animals, to keep records of production, and to show them and their progeny at the competitions held under the auspices of the Exhibition.

It is hoped to form a Junior Sheep Club on somewhat similar lines.

RELATIVES OF WALKER WORK

Won't Quit Jobs at Present, Say Brother and Brother-in-law.

HEIRS TO MILLIONS.

DETROIT, Mich., Aug. 18 (Canadian Press).—William Walker to-day resumed his accustomed place behind a meat block in the Royal Oak butcher shop where he is employed, despite the fact that he has been notified that under the terms of the will of Arthur T. Walker, formerly of Chatham, Ont., he will receive a large portion of an estate believed to approximate fifteen million dollars.

Walker was dumfounded when informed of the terms of the will. Interviewed last night at his home, a simple one-storey bungalow in Royal Oak, he said he would continue at his present work "until I have time to think."

Sister "Worried to Death."

TORONTO, Aug. 18 (Canadian Press).—Mrs. I. H. Smith, who inherits possibly five million dollars from her brother, the late Arthur T. Walker, so far from showing any elation at her fortune, is "worried to death" about it. This is the statement of her husband, "Ike" Smith, telegraph operator.

Smith to-day was at his key as usual. He warned newspaper reporters not to go near his house. "I can stand some of the staring but my wife is nearly worried to death," he said.

They had received no official confirmation, Mr. Smith said, but did not doubt they would receive their share. They had made no plans for the future, and meanwhile he was going on with his work. His wife, at home, refuses to see any one.

CHILD DROWNED BESIDE DOCK AT SUMMER HOME

Angus, Two-Year-Old Son of Dr. A. W. McPherson, Loses Life at Chemong.

IN TWO FEET OF WATER.

Efforts of Doctors and Firemen With Pulmotor Are Unavailing.

Wandering away from their cottage this morning, Angus McPherson, aged one year and eleven months, youngest son of Dr. A. W. McPherson, fell off the McPherson dock and was drowned in water only two feet deep.

The little fellow had gone out in the morning to play about and had strayed, by chance, down to the dock where the canoes and skiff lie upturned on the boards. He must have slipped and fallen into the shallow water beneath, and been unable to call out for aid.

Soon after the lad left the house, the milkman, Melville McWilliams, passed by the McPherson dock, where the body lay submerged. Glancing towards the shore, McWilliams discovered the boy in the water. Without taking time to remove any of his clothing he leaped into the water and, gathering the boy in his arms, rushed up the path to the cottage, where the body was wrapped in a blanket.

A call for the pulmotor was sent in to the Fire Department at Peterborough and was responded to immediately.

Upon reaching the scene of the fatality, Fireman Wilson and Mason began the task of bringing some life back to the little body that lay so still in the blanket. Placing the body on the floor ,the firemen began operations under the direction of the doctors present. Doctor McPherson, the father of the lad; Dr. D. W. Clark, who was at Chemong at the time of the accident; Dr. H. M. Yelland, and Dr. J. A. Morgan all attended in a vain effort to restore life to the boy.

After almost twenty-five minutes of attempted resuscitation, all hope was given up for his recovery, and the little fellow was declared dead. Many waited sadly around the cottage for news from within while firemen and doctors were endeavoring to restore breath to the little body wrapped in the blanket.

Dr. McPherson has four other children, but this was the baby of the family. This is the first drowning fatality in Chemong Lake this year.

Changed Mind About Vote For Stability; John Jinks Gives Reason For His Absence

DUBLIN, August 18 (Canadian Press). — John Jinks, Sligo publican, who made his name a household name in Ireland by walking out of the Dail on Tuesday, and saving the life of the Cosgrave Government by failing to record his vote, was neither kidnapped nor spirited away.

"I simply walked out of the Dail. I was neither kindapped nor spirited away," Jinks said last evening before starting for his home in Sligo. "For the sake of the stability of my constituents I thought it was better to retain the present Government."

Jinks said that he thought the result of the division which was in favour of the Cosgrave Government only by the narrow margin of one vote cast by the speaker to break a tie, was a good thing for Ireland.

His action in failing to vote as his colleagues of the National League (Redmondites) did—against the Government—is likely to result in his expulsion from his party. His failure to vote with his colleagues resulted in a 71-71 tie.

(The first suggestion that Mr. Jinks might have been kidnapped was contained in a despatch to The Evening Star from its Dublin correspondent, who said that Jinks supported the resolution to vote against the Government adopted at a party caucus on Tuesday afternoon, was in his place in the Dail Eireann an hour before the vote was taken, but then disappeared. Captain William Redmond, leader of the National League Party, was quoted in the despatch as expressing the opinion that Jinks' failure to vote with his colleagues must have resulted from his being spirited away, unless he had been overcome by a sudden illness.)

TOURISTS COME IN LARGE BUS

NEAR LOON LAKE.

Travelling in a commodious and well appointed bus, equipped with reed armchairs, which to Canadian eyes seemed like a Red Cross motor ambulance, a party of American business men arrived in the city this afternoon from Vincennes, Indiana, on a trip to Loon Lake, where they propose to stay for two weeks.

The party set out on Monday, passing through Columbus, Ohio, Buffalo, Niagara Falls, Hamilton, Toronto, Oshawa, and Port Hope.

The only mishap on the route occurred at Columbus, where the gas tank dropped from its bearings, causing a delay of several hours on the journey.

When an Examiner representative called at the car as it was parked on George Street, between Hunter and Brock Streets, he was informed that the members of the party were negociating for the purchase of 200 acres of land near Loon Lake to be the site of a summer camp.

Without exception, the tourists of to-day harbour deadly designs on the bass and muskalonge of Loon Lake. All were lavish in their praises of the scenery on the route to Peterborough.

"The prettiest country I have ever set eyes on," was the comment of Ernest Bird, the driver, who rejoices in the nickname of "Lindy," bestowed on him of his charges of to-day, following his safe and speedy piloting of the heavy vehicle along the many miles of the way from Indiana. "It is just like a moving picture," added B. L. Robeson.

The car has a carrying capacity of twenty-one, consequently the ten individuals travelling have an abundance of room, enabling them to escape the discomfort arising from a long journey in cramped quarters.

All are well-known citizens of Vincennes, which is said to be the oldest city in the American North-West. Their names are: B. L. Robeson, Joe Joice, W. Warner, P. Page, R. Miller, M. Hartigan, W. C. Watjen, E. Smith, M. Shircliff, and Ernest Bird.

OTTAWA, Aug. 18 (Canadian Press).—"No interference" with the death sentence in the cases of Eugene Bigaouette of Quebec and Valentine Schmidt of Regina, is the decision of the Governor in Council, handed out officially today.

More than 600 persons are believed to have been poisoned by an Italian woman named Toffana, who lived in the 17th century. She was apprehended and executed.

Shot By Keeper During Jail Break

BALDWIN SAYS "AU REVOIR"

British Premier Issues Farewell Message To People of Canada.

FOR HOSPITALITY.

NORTH SYDNEY, N.S., Aug. 18 (Canadian Press).—Premier Baldwin of Great Britain issued the following farewell message to the Canadian people before sailing for home on the Empress of Scotland today.

"The time has come for me to say au revoir to Canada but I cannot go without sending a farewell message to her people one and all who have from the day we landed shown Mrs. Baldwin and myself such wonderful hospitality."

Hurried farewell, cool waves, and Sydney Harbor blue in the noon sunshine made up the setting of Premier Baldwin's farewell to the Dominion.

There was a last minute civic address and the presentation of an enormous cherrywood pipe, with a two-foot stem and a bowl like a coffee pot. Everyone was in high spirits and the crowds cheered again and again as the Premier caught the mammoth pipe in his jaws and waved adieu. As the tender pulled away the local band played "Auld Lang Syne," and the Prime Minister of Great Britain was obviously moved by the scenes of the moment. Mrs Baldwin stood beside her husband and waved to those who were on the pier.

JOHN OLIVER B. C. PREMIER DIES TO-DAY

Has Been Ill For Several Months—71 Years Old.

TAKEN SUDDENLY WORSE.

Minister of Finance, Hon. J. E. McLean, Has Been Acting Premier For Some Time.

VICTORIA, B.C., Aug. 18 (Canadian Press).—Premier John Oliver, of British Columbia, died early today. The Premier, taking a sudden turn for the worse after several months' illness, died at his home here before his physician could be called.

Mr. Oliver was relieved of his office duties when the Liberal caucus last month nominated J. E. McClean, Minister of Finance and Education as Acting Premier and leder designate of the Liberal party in British Columbia during the Premier's illness. The Premier was 71 years old.

A man of the people by birth and temperament, John Oliver was probably more proficient in the rugged arts of the pioneer than any other Canadian statesman. Miner, farmer, woodsman, engineer and stone-mason, he brought to the premiership of British Columbia a first-hand knowledge of the pioneer's problems which greatly helped him in his administration of that task.

Born in Hartington, Derbyshire (England), on July 31, 1856, John Oliver was the second son of Robert and Emma Oliver. When John was a small boy, his father deserted the farm for the mining business and operated, with indifferent success, a lead and iron mine on a property belonging to the late Duke of Devonshire. His son's schooling was restricted to a few years in elementary schools. His eleventh birthday found John Oliver working as a donkey boy in his father's mine "half time," under the arrangements which permitted students to study half of each day. At the age of twelve John left school altogether, combining his mine work with a side-line of selling eggs at Buxton market for farmers of his district.

With his earnings at this work, John bought a pony and cart and for a couple of years drove a thriving trade as farmer's agent. He was fourteen when, the Devonshire estate having closed out his father's mining property, the Oliver family migrated to Canada. Robert Oliver settled in Mayborough, in Wellington County, Ontario, with his wife and eight of his nine children. One son remained in England. John was the eldest of the family and immediately he took up his strenuous duties on his father's new farm. In the succeeding seven years he became an expert farmer. In the winter he worked with an axe in the Ontario woods and graduated as an expert woodsman. He dug wells and went into the quarries to blast stone. One of the crafts he learned at this period, and was proud of to the day of his death, was that of the stone-mason.

In 1877 John Oliver migrated to British Columbia, journeying by easy stages through the United States. He worked first as an axeman on the Canadian Pacific Railway, Fraser Valley Branch. He took out a homestead and did a little bridge-building by the way. Then he bought a thrashing outfit and operated it himself. He is among the first licensees as steam engineer in British Columbia.

Later he moved to the Delta district nearby and began a desperate fight with the floods which had made that district almost impossible to farmers. He dug dykes and drains and finally reclaimed to agriculture a big area in the swamp district. Meantime he dabbled in local politics. At a campaign meeting in 1898 he made an extempore speech which attracted attention. Within a few years he was recognized as a debater, when as member for The Delta he took his place in the provincial legislature in 1900. He was then an ardent supporter of the late Sir Richard McBride, but when McBride's administration became definitely Conservative, Oliver, always a liberal at heart, aligned himself with the Opposition, of which he became the leader in 1903. He bitterly opposed the McBride railway policy, which included the building of the Canadian Northern line to the coast.

In 1909 Oliver ran for the legislature in Victoria and The Delta, and was defeated in both constituencies. Oliver went back to his farm and his dykes, eschewing politics for seven years. In 1916, however, he was caught in the whirl of the political campaign which swept a Liberal premier into office, the late H. C. Brewster. Oliver was elected in the constituency of Dewdney and immediately became Minister of Agriculture in the Brewster administration. A few months later,

Prepare Secret Plane For Canadian Flight

NEW YORK, August 18 (Canadian Press). — The New York World to-day will say that a plane has been secretly under construction for weeks at the Farmingdale, L.I., plant of the Fairchild Airplane Corporation, and is to be delivered early next month to Captain E. L. Janney, of Ottawa, who hopes to be the first to fly from Canada to London.

THOUSANDS CHEER AS GOEBEL ALIGHTS AT HONOLULU FIELD TO WIN A $25,000 DOLE PRIZE

Actual Flying Time Was 26 Hours, 17 minutes and 20 Seconds.

ALOHA SECOND.

Lost For Four Hours, Says Pilot—Takes Second Money.

HONOLULU, Aug. 18 (Canadian Press).—Art Goebell, piloting the Woolaroc monoplane, won the $25,000 Dole prize in a hot finish here with the Aloha, piloted by Martin Jensen, which was reported passing over Koko Head yesterday afternoon shortly before the Woolaroc landed, the Navy Radio Service reported.

The actual flying time for Goebel was 26 hours, 17 minutes and 20 seconds.

The tremendous crowd cheered and cheered as Goebel appeared over the field and circled it preparatory to landing.

Wild With Enthusiasm

The crowd went wild with enthusiasm at the great finish and shouted its applause. Goebel was greeted by a salute of army bombs bursting in the air. Mrs. Martin Jensen, wife of Martin Jensen piloting the Aloha, broke through the ranks of military police and raced to Goebel's side. She narrowly escaped being hit by the whirring propeller.

Goebel expressed surprise when he was told he had won. He threw his hands in the air and clasped them together in a handshake of welcome for all the crowd.

"Say, folks, it is certainly great to land here," Goebel said. "How many others are in ahead of me?"

"God bless you." Mrs. Jensen cried when she greeted Goebel. "Oh, can't you tell me something about Martin? Is he still in the air? Did you pass him? Where do you think he can be?"

Mrs. Jensen threw her arms about the victorious pilot and kissed him several times before Governor Farrington, General Lewis and James Dole, prize donor, could reach his side.

"Honest to gosh, do you mean that I am really the first one here?" Goebel asked.

While the Hawaiian girls sang native melodies and hung leis about his neck, the crowd broke through the picket lines and surround Goebel and Davis.

After Governor Farrington shook hands with Goebel, he told the flier he was Governor. Goebel rejoined that he was Art Goebel and was flying in the Dole race.

Jim Dole was caught in the crush as he went out to greet the fliers. The prize donor smiled proudly as he gripped the hands of both men.

"I'm mighty happy, boys, that you arrived safely" he said.

Navigator Davis came in for a good share of the praise and congratulations.

Did Not See Others

"We did not see Martin Jensen (pilot of the Aloha) nor Jack Frost (pilot of the Golden Eagle)," Davis said, in answer to a query from Mrs. Jensen.

Davis and Goebel did not appear seriously affected by the long hop, but said a good night's sleep would certainly be appreciated.

And where is your leg? Davis was asked. The navigator smiled and said, "We didn't keep any log except in a haphazard way."

Clarence Cooke, Dole flight chairman, greeted the two fliers as they stepped from their plane.

"I am very much pleased to see a plane land and I think he made a perfect landing. But I will not be satisfied until the rest of the fliers are accounted for," said Mr. Cooke.

WHEELER FIELD, Honolulu, Aug. 18 (Canadian Press). — The monoplane Aloha, piloted by Martin Jensen, arrived at Wheeler Field at 2.20 p.m. (4.50 p.m. coast time).

The crowd went wild as Jensen appeared through Oahu's back door, coming down on the Waianae side of the field to win second money, $10,000.

Although thousands had left the field after the arrival of Art Goebel, who won the race in the monoplane Woolaroc, many remained and greeted Jensen as enthusiastically as they did Goebel.

Jensen's face was drawn and haggard, and he attempted to raise himself from the seat once but sat down again. He stood on his feet and peered over the edge of the cockpit and waved to his wife and the crowd which cheered madly at the homecoming.

Jensen then climbed out of the cockpit, over the top of the plane and jumped to the ground. His wife was revived and broke away from the army officers who had escorted her and rushed to him.

Her face streamed with tears as she hugged and kissed him.

Unofficial calculations made Jensen's time in the air one hour 58

39 NAVY SHIPS SEEKING PLANES

U. S. Navy Has Mustered All Vessels At Its Command For Search.

ERWIN STARTS TO-DAY.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 18 (Canadian Press).—Marshalling the greatest fleet of vessel at its command in the Pacific, the Navy Department today had thirty-nine ships of various descriptions under orders to search for the missing Hawaiian flight planes "Miss Doran" and "Golden Eagle."

Plane Will Search

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 18 (Canadian Press).—Capt. William P. Erwin, of Dallas, Texas, who failed to get started in the Dole air race on Tuesday, announced he would take off today for the Hawaiian Islands, following a zig-zag course in an effort to sight one of the two missing planes.

Capt. Erwin had a radio sending set installed in his plane last night and expected to start on the plane hunt late in the day. His decision was taken following the receipt of a telegram from Col. William Easterwood of Dallas, offering him a $25,000 purse if he continued the flight to Hong Kong. If Erwin sights the planes floating on the sea he will broadcast the news by radio and continue on his own course. The damage to Erwin's plane, "Dallas Spirit," in an attempted take-off Tuesday has been repaired and he intends to take a thirty-six-hour supply of gasoline, which he believes will give him a ten-hour margin in which to search for the missing planes.

Cooney and Jopling Issue Writ For Damages in Bus Accident.

Arising out of the accident on the Havelock Road, when a Cooney and Jopling bus carrying All Saints' Anglican Church Dramatic Club, overturned between Norwood and Peterborough, Messrs. The indemnity company with which the county has insured itself against liability for damages through highway accidents, has refused the claim, and the question of responsibility for damage to the vehicle will have to be fought out in the courts.

The case is expected to come up some time in September.

MANY ATTEND REGATTA AT TRENT RIVER

Cottagers and Visitors Are Thrilled By Various Sports.

BAND CONCERT.

Don McArthur, of Campbellford, Wins Honors in Swimming Marathon.

Trent River regatta, an event that is looked forward to annually by cottagers and outsiders alike was held yesterday afternoon, attended by a crowd of almost five hundred persons.

The Indian band from Alderville was an added attraction to the programme, providing music throughout the afternoon while the races were in progress. Cottagers from near and far attended, many of the visitors taking an active part in all the events and in some cases capturing the prizes. Norman Wright and Francis Rattan, Trent River boys kept the crowd in laughter by their merry pranks in the water — upsetting canoes and spilling the occupants to the merriment of themselves and the crowd that thronged the pier and banks, but not to the unfortunate 'subjects.'

Although the water was rather of a choppy nature, the weather conditions were almost ideal, with old Sol beaming brightly on such a happy, care-free crowd. Many of the visitors brought their picnic baskets and later enjoyed the dance at the pavilion, where music was supplied by the Chemong Columbian orchestra.

All the races were entered into with great enthusiasm by the participants and were given fine support by their friends thronging the piers and banks.

It was an afternoon crammed with everything that a regatta enthusiast could wish for, and when the final race was finished, even then many were reluctant to leave such a happy gathering.

Ladies' single canoe—1 Miss Smoke (silver cup, donated by The Examiner), 2 Mrs. James Cook (compact), 3 Miss M. Garneau (silver fork).

No Imminent Danger From Fires In Sault

SAULT STE. MARIE, Ont., August 18, Canadian Press. — While there is little danger from forest fires in the Sault district, about ten small fires are still burning, according to information received from the Ontario Forestry Branch yesterday. There have been twenty fires in the district since last Wednesday all within sixty miles of the north channel, and they have been kept under control by the local branch.

Fires on the Mississauga Indian Reserve at Livingstone, and one on the Rankin location, are the only ones which are giving any trouble, these three being the largest on the present list.

With the bush extremely dry, cause of the fires is said to be from smokers in the bush and berry pickers, of whom there are large numbers at favorite spots along the north shore now.

TWO ARE KILLED IN CAR ACCIDENT

Collision Occurs on Provincial Highway Four Miles From Cornwall.

OTHERS INJURED.

CORNWALL, Ont., August 18. — Canadian Press. — Two men were killed and two others slightly injured in a collision of automobiles on the Provincial Highway four miles from here yesterday, according to reports to the police. The tragedy occurred when a large touring car sideswiped a light coach on a hillside.

The dead: Leroy Cowan, aged 20, of Alexandria, Ont.

Mr. Johnson, who was driving the coach, told the police he noticed the touring car speeding down Robertson's hill, and desiring to give it plenty of room to pass, stopped his car on the roadside. The touring car had just rounded a sharp turn and was swerving slightly when he first noticed it, Johnson said. As the open car was about to pass, he reported, it skidded, and the centre of the auto crashed against the engine hood of his coach, smashing the engine in. The other car was also badly damaged.

Fractured Skull.

From his hospital cot, MacPherson told the police that when he came to after the crash, he found himself on the roadside, badly dazed but not seriously hurt. Cowan, who was driving the touring car, was lying with his head on the road and his feet on the running board of the car—he apparently had been thrown to the pavement on his head. McConnell who had been sitting alone in the back seat of Cowan's car, suffered a fractured skull, which caused instant death.

An inquest opened yesterday afternoon, was adjourned until Saturday, when it is expected McPherson will have been discharged from the hospital.

PREMIFR BALDWIN TOURS MARITIMES

Makes Hurried Trip Through Provinces Before Embarking For England.

HALIFAX, N.S., Aug. 18.—(Canadian Press.)—"We have loved every minute of our time. We are tired, of course, because we have worked hard." Premier Baldwin told the citizens of Halifax last night. "I have given every minute of the time I could spare to Canada and when I am through with the duties of my present post I will come again," he added.

At a twenty-eight knot clip, H.M.S. Capetown rushed the Premier and his party from Charlottetown to Pictou yesterday morning. A train hurried the party to Halifax and at midnight Mr. Baldwin will be on his way to North Sydney, where he will sail for England on the Empress of Scotland, completing his eighteen days of travel in Canada.

The addresses of welcome by the province and by the city were, said Mr. Baldwin, "steeped in the history of this continent and couched in language to warm the heart of an Englishman." The Prime Minister took exception to two words in addresses. Nova Scotia had called his visit a holiday and Halifax called it recreation. He felt as though he might have to go back to England to work in order to get a little rest.

FENG LEADER OF BEST UNIT OF NATIONALS

Outstanding Authority On China Say Nanking Army Split.

CIRCUMSTANCES DIFFER.

Feng Can Abandon Offensive Without Loss of Prestige.

WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass., Aug. 18.—Feng Yu-Hsiang heads the strongest Nationalist military unit and may succeed in consolidating the South if events in China should move according to what seems "logical" to foreigners, Dr. Stanley K. Hornbeck, outstanding authority and professor on the Far East at Harvard University, asserted yesterday at the Institute of Politics.

The resignation of Chiang Kai-Shek, Dr. Hornbeck said, served to break up the Nanking armies into two commands. This, he believed, leaves Feng the most prominent among the Nationalist commanders.

"In th present situation all eyes are focussed on Feng," Dr. Hornback said. "The rank and file of the Nationalists certainly have not the confidence in him that they had in Chiang Kai-Shek. He has been compromised by his past record and his dependence upon Soviet Russia for supplies and munitions. But he has a great record as an organizer and a drill master.

"Chiang had to go on with the military campaign against the North in order to maintain his political prestige. Feng could afford now to decline to act on the offensive and devote some time to consolidating the position attained by the Nationalists south of the Yangtse. This would be the logical thing to do, as it appears from this distance."

Dr. Hornbeck intimated that the creation of a military machine in China is more than a military problem. He said if Feng succeeds in uniting the Nationalist armies under his own or any other leadership, and in making of them a single driving force, he will have achieved a political prodigy.

The main question in regard to Feng's strength, Dr. Hornbeck believes, is centered around the ease or difficulty with which he is able to replenish his munitions, and supplies, which have thus far been presumably extended him overland from Russia.

Since April, 1926, Dr. Hornbeck continued, "Feng has controlled no arsenals and had no access to sea. By combining with Hankow he ought to be able to draw upon the Hanyang and Canton arsenals." Feng is identified with the Nationalist party, he went on, but had in the past received no dictation from the Nationalist Government.

It is very hard to estimate Feng's political views and attitudes towards the Powers, Dr. Hornbeck emphasized, but if yesterday's despatches, which stated that Michael Borodin is at his headquarters be true, we may draw our conclusions as to the influence to which he is being subjected.

Tariff Autonomy a Requisite

Sydney K. Wei, of the Central Education Commission of the Nationalist Government, said that tariff autonomy is a requisite in an indpendent China. China being an agricultural country, he maintained, foreign trade could be nothing but exploitation until the country is more extensively industrialized.

"For example," Mr. Wei said, "the Chinese cotton mills which are under Shanghai, have not been paying since the Armistice, due to foreign competition. The Chinese manufacturers have to pay heavier taxes than foreign manufacturers, with the result that foreigners can both import and manufacture more cheaply than Chinese.

"It is part of the Nationalist program to abolish many of the local taxes that bear on the chinese and replace them with protective tariffs that will put local manufacturers on a par with foreign importation."

Mr. Wei believes that Chiang Kai-Shek's resignation will have no serious effect on the national movement because its success has not been due to any one man, but to the uprising of the masses.

Sir Arthur Willert, head of the Press Bureau of the British Foreign office, spoke on China in Chapin Hall. He outlined Great Britain's stand in regard to the various Chinese parties, and admitted that his country's policies today "is based upon a profound conviction that from every point of view forcible intervention in the affairs of China cannot for a moment be contemplated."

Sir Arthur further said: "We realize that the time is long past when a repetition of the wars by which we imposed ourselves upon China in the last century is either possible or desirable." He denied that his country was "playing favorites" between the Chinese factions, and said that the Nationalist movement is not regarded as having "very much in common with the democratic or progressive movement in a western country," as the British at home see it.

OLD MASTERS

Flow down, cold rivulet, to the sea,
Thy tribute wave deliver
No more by me thy steps shall be,
For ever and for ever.
A thousand suns will stream on thee,
A thousand moons will quiver;
But not by thee my steps shall be,
For ever and for ever.
—Alfred Tennyson—A Farewell.

"Monoplane Golden Eagle and Biplane Miss Doran probably out of fuel, and landed in the ocean. Approximate location unknown. All vessels between the Pacific Coast of the United States and the Hawaiian Islands, especially those north or south of the regular lines, are requested to keep a sharp look out for floating planes, and if sighted radio promptly full details, address to the Federal Telegraph Company of San Francisco, including exact location where found and condition of the occupants."

SMITH RATE 20.6 MILLS

County Requires Nearly 12 Mills of This—Council Spends 4.6 Mills.

SCHOOL RATES EXTRA.

The members of the municipal council of the township of Smith met in the County Council Chamber, Peterborough, on Saturday, August 13th.

All the members except Councillor A. B. Mann were present, with Reev Middleton occupying the chair.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and confirmed.

By-law No. 849 to levy the amounts required by the trustees of the several school sections received its several readings and was passed.

By-law No. 850 to make provision for levying and collecting rates and assessments of the township of Smith for the year 1927 received its several readings and was also passed.

The rates are as follows:

General school	4 3/10
County	7 3/10
House of Refuge	1 1/10
County and Porvincial highways	3 3/10
Bridge rate	6/10
Township rate	1
Township roads	3
Total	20 6/10

Besides this there is the school trustees' levy, which varies for each section.

On motion of Dep.-Reeve Simpson with Councillor H. D. Coons as seconder a grant of $30 was given J. B. Nelson, representative for Peterborough county of the Department of Agriculture in aid of school fairs in Smith township for 1927.

The clerk was instructed to order supplies of sheep valuers' reports and affidavits of people having sheep killed by dogs from "The Municipal World Limited.

Owing to the fact that provision has been made for the payment of the taxes of any ratepayers in Smith who wish it at the Standard Bank of Canada, Lakefield, Council decided that it is not now necessary for the collector to have a sub-office at Young's Point as formerly.

On motion of Councillor Coons and seconded bw Deputy-Reeve Simpson the clerk was instructed to have the present insurance policy covering the collector of taxes against robbery renewed at the expiration of the same.

Moved by Councillor Fitzgerald and seconded by Reeve Middleton, that the following accounts be paid:

Peterborough Examiner, printing	$ 5.85
Mr. J. A. Jobe, postage stamps	2.27
Dawe-Pearson Ltd., printing voters' lists	125.88
Mr. J. B. Nelson, grant to school fairs	30.00

WINNIPEG WHEAT.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 18 (Canadian Press).—A large volume of wheat was poured into the pit yesterday, and an amazingly good absorption prevented a substantial break in prices. The closing was 1-8c lower to ¼c higher; Oct. $1.51¾; Dec. $1.48 3-8; and May, $1.52 5-8.

It was difficult to determine the nature of the buying. One prominent trader sold heavily in Winnipeg against wheat purchases in the Chicago market, and the early strength displayed in Chicago had not a little to do with the stubbornness of the local market. The full break was less than 2c, October refusing to go beyond $1.50.

There were more bullish reports from private U.S. crop inspectors now in Western Canada, but little attention was paid to them. The statement from Saskatchewan Tuesday that frost damage was not serious, taking the Province as a whole, discouraged the bull forces.

Weather conditions are improving in Western Canada after two days of rain. Coarse grains attracted little attention. There was a much better demand for cash wheat yesterday.

PLANE LANDS AT KEENE.

Captain Ayres and Companion Forced Down By Gas Shortage.

KEENE, Aug. 18.—Captain Ayres of the Peterborough Air School and a companion made a forced landing on the farm of Walter McFarlane about seven-thirty Tuesday night. Lack of fuel was the cause and no damage was done to the machine.

They stayed at Mr. McFarlane's home all night and left for Peterborough about six-fifteen in the morning.

BROTHERS AND SISTERS TO GET WALKER ESTATE

Vast Fortune Is Estimated at From $30,000,000 to $50,000,000.

NUMEROUS BEQUESTS.

Formerly of Chatham, Once Had Worked For $50 a Week.

NEW YORK, Aug. 18 (Canadian Press).—The fortune of the late Mark Hopkins, multi-millionaire railroad builder and California pioneer, having passed successively through the hands of the late Edward F. Searles and Arthur T. Walker, Searles' secretary is left to Walker's four sisters and two brothers, living in Ontario and Michigan, according to his will filed in Brooklyn yesterday. The estate is estimated at from $30,000,000 to $50,000,000. Walker, a resident of Brooklyn, and formerly of Chatham, Ont., was for several years a penniless young secretary. Finally his employment by Searles, an aged recluse of Methuen, Mass., at $50 a week paved the way to great wealth. When Searles died in 1920 he left the estate he had inherited from the widow of Mark Hopkins to his secretary.

While Walker did not follow the example of Searles by passing on the fortune to his secretary, he was evidently impressed by it, for when he made his will in 1923 he left his secretary, E. E. Rudd, $75,000, and two years later raised the bequest to $200,000 by a codicil. Rudd was also appointed sole executor without bond.

Attached to the petition for probate were waivers signed by all the heirs, so that the will was admitted at once, ending the speculation as to the disposition of the estate that has been rife since Walker's sudden death at the former Searles summer home at Windham, N.H., August 7. He was 50 and unmarried.

The will makes numerous bequests of from $25,000 to various items of jewellery of small value. No reasons for the bequests are given, although many of the beneficiaries are referred to as "my friend."

CHILDREN ENJOY OWN MASQUERADE

Many Turn Out in Costume For Annual Party.

STONEY LAKE, Aug. 17.—The annual children's masquerade was held on Saturday afternoon in the pavilion at Juniper Island and was decidedly one of the most pleasant events of Stoney Lake's social season. The weather conditions were ideal and long before three o'clock boat loads of children with their parents were arriving at Juniper. It was a purely cottagers' affair and there were few if any outside visitors. An orchestra provided music, Mrs. Greenlees presided at the piano and Mr. James Currier had the traps and the youngsters had an hour and a half of solid enjoyment.

Gordon K. Fraser was master of ceremonies and was assisted by Misses Betty Fairbairn and Helen McGann, who coaxed the timid ones and guarded the "tiny wees," assisted in the games and, in short, devoted themselves to the children's pleasure for the entire afternoon.

The attendance of adults was large and included besides parents and relatives of the children, many who were attracted by the pretty spectacle. The children ranged in age from 2 to 14 years and, while the number in costume was not quite up to last year, there were a goodly number nevertheless, Indians, pirates, old fashioned ladies, heralds and characters from nursery rhymes, played games and danced with one another with becoming gaiety. A realistic mud turtle ambled about, the small head occasionaly poking out from beneath the gigantitc shell. A tiny maid dressed as an old fashioned scrap book, a tiny kewpie, a demure Dutch girl, a chic French maid, a pair of paper dolls who wore delicate pastel tints, a cupid, a maiden of 1867 and another 1840, a diminutive bride and groom, a perfect impersonation of an aviator with his plane, the herald with his horn, the popular Old Dutch Cleanser lady in characteristic posture, night, a pair of Bo-Peeps who, armed with their crooks, were seeking the vagrant sheep; the hard boiled prospector, several pirates, and the small youth who gave his name as Captain Blood, Big Chief and his little "Canuck canoe," a parcel which bore the legend "Fresh meat, fragile," a baby vamp.

One youngster, who wore a costume made entirely of fringed crepe paper, answered inquiries as to what he represented with the cryptic remark, "Draw your own conclusions." A dainty red rose, a witch and the usual percentage of Pierrots and Pierrettes were present, all artlessly enjoying the entertainment provided. A game of "Farmer in the Dell," followed by "Musical Rug," broke the ice and the whole company enjoyed the afternoon.

Miss Davidson, Mrs. Sanford Smith and Mrs. J. H. Sherin were the judges and awarded prizes to the following:

Best pair, the Bride and Groom—Janet Collins and Andy Andrews.

Best boy, Big Chief—David Porter.

Best girl, Bo-Peep—Virginia Crawford.

Most original boy, French maid—Jack Gouinlock.

Most original costume, Mud Turtle—Diana Lockhart.

The committee provided extra prizes so that each child received a prize and a cone of ice cream. Mrs. Gordon Smith and Mr. Ian Wotherspoon were members of the committee who gave conspicuous service to the occasion. It was one of those satisfactory masquerades when everyone was a prize winner.

The special prizes for the children's regatta were presented, one to little Jane Currier for swimming and also to Glady Heward and Stewart Wotherspoon for the mixed tandem canoe, 16 years and under.

Among those in costume were: David Porter, Big Chief; Bobbie Porter, Pirate; Janet Collins and Andy Andrews, Bride and Groom; Mary Strickland, Pierrot; Jane Currier, Pierrette; "Peaches" Grahame and Aileen Mahood, Paper Dolls; Patricia Cole, Witch; Tom Cole, Pierrot; Arthur Cole, Pierrot; John Cole, Captain Blood; Baby Cole, Indian; Billy Wadds, Christmas Tree; Keith Acton, Aviator; Sam Peticolas, "Draw Your Own Conclusion"; Mary Follitt, Paper Parcel, Fragile, Fresh Meat; Elaine Robertson, Old Fashioned Girl; Mary Adelaide Acton, Bo Peep; Ted Moss, Prospector; Ruth Gouinlock, Dutch Girl; Jack Gouinlock, French Maid; Margaret Wood Red Riding Hood; Mary Hall, Red Rose; Jim Hall, Herald; Louise Hall, Pierrot; Pat Roper, Brigand; Diana Lockhart, Mud Turtle; Kim Ray, Air Pilot; Helen Rouse, Gipsy; Elspeth Chisholm, Gretchen; June Fraser, Cupid; Noreen Fraser, Night; Spencer Piper, Pierrot; Eleanor Piper, Pierrette; Marguerite Buck, Japanese; Kenneth Dawson, Old Dutch Cleanser; Bobby Wadds; Santa Claus; Eleanor Lane, Indian; Richard Green, Pierrot; Mary Macdonald, Ballet Girl; Billy Fountain, Pirate; Charlie Heward, Pirate; Peggy Follitt, Miss Canada; Jean Gillespie, Girl of 1867; Florence Bancroft, Bride; Blanche Bancroft, Pierrot; Beverley Bickley, Girl of 1340; Patricia Chisholm, Fairy; Daphne Smith, Scrap Book; Virginia Crawford, Bo Peep; Barbara Crawford, Kewpie; Grenfell Mitchell, Mister Peanut.

The prizes for the lucky number dance was won by Beverley and Jimmie Bickey.

By ANNE AUSTIN

"Shall I wear my peach-colored chiffon or my white georgette?" Cherry mused. Then, as there was an unmistakable gurgle of laughter from her baby, she rushed to Faith's chair and flung herself down upon her knees, letting her short copper-and-gold curls fall in a bright cascade over the dimpling face of the midget-sized infant. "Laughing at your old muzzer, lambie?" she crowed fondly. "You just wait, Midget! Won't be long now till you're dressing for your first beau! And oh, the hearts you'll break, you little beauty! Wonder if I'm going to be jealous of this little mite some day, Faith?"

"I almost wish she weren't going to be so pretty," Faith answered. "Beauty—like yours—can be a greater curse than it is a blessing. If you weren't so very lovely, honey ——"

"I'd be as good as you," Cherry retorted flippantly, springing to her feet after one last kiss upon the baby's little button nose. "Going to lecture me, darling? You have your orders from your husband, you know. All right! Shoot!

"Are you falling in love with Glenn Andrews, Cherry?" Faith asked, ignoring her sister's impudence.

"I have all the symptoms," Cherry flung over one bare, pearly tinted shoulder as she delved into the closet for the peach-colored chiffon. "Accelerated pulse, a keen new interest in life, mounting excitement—probably I am, darling. What of it? I suppose I'll always be falling in love with somebody till I die. And I hope to heaven I die before men quit falling in love with me."

"I thought you were interested in George," Faith said helplessly.

"George Pruitt is a one-woman man, and unfortunately, I'm not the one woman. You happen to be," Cherry retorted, an edge of hardness to her voice. "Glenn is so much easier. He had no intention of marrying Selma, if that's what is aching you. He told me so."

"Does he know about—about Mr. Cluny?" Faith asked hesitatingly.

"Who doesn't?" Cherry retorted. "Don't worry, precious. I've told Glenn all about it, and he understands and sympathizes beautifully. He also knows about—Chris. Everything," she added, as she slipped the lovely, cloud-like chiffon frock over her rioting curls.

"I agree with Bob that you had better wait until after your divorce from Chris before you become involved in any way with another man," Faith told her stiffly.

"Please, darling, don't cultivate that manner," Cherry begged, laughing. "You really are only twenty-one, you know! But listen, Faith: Don't you worry about me. I'm old enough and God knows I've had trouble enough to have learned to take care of myself. Glenn is as safe as a church ——"

"Then you don't really love him," Faith interrupted scornfully.

"Love!" Cherry wheeled and glared at her sister furiously. "Don't say 'love' to me! I'm sick of the word! All it's ever brought me is pain and disgrace ——"

"And the midget," Faith interrupted softly.

"She was a glorious accident," Cherry cried. "Love had nothing to do with her! No, I've had my lesson! I'll never love any man again—too much. Do I look all right?" her voice changed with miraculous suddenness, as she surveyed her radiant beauty in the mirror, a pleased smile curling her ripe little mouth.

MONTREAL, Aug. 18 (By Canadian Press).—Miss Alice Dresser, Provincial Convener of legislation for Women's Institutes has sent out a general letter to members in which she says: "The province of Quebec has many claims to fame. "The women of Quebec have been waiting many years, and the waiting period is not yet ended. This is the time for them to learn as much as possible about the problems our law-makers are facing. FRIDAY, AUGUST 19, 1927

There is a fair sign for those who bear public responsibilities and desire to push the business of the people.

Political corruption is to be uncovered in municipal affairs, east and west, it is foretold, and for that reason conscientious men will benefit greatly.

This trend in which the people of the country are to arouse from [illegible] regarding the administration of affairs is to be most fortunate for high official.

The stars are read as stimulating movements for reform and for a revival of old time standards of integrity.

Campaigns to overcome laxity regarding marriage and divorce will be bitterly fought before the end of the year, it is prognosticated.

Under this rule engineers, contractors and persons interested in constructive or creative work should benefit.

The planetary government favors those who develop wealth through manufactures or through agriculture rather than those who are mere traders.

The rule of the stars is not favorable to merchants and there may be some temporary difficulty affecting our expanding commerce.

Again the seers foretell for the Pacific coast tremendous growth, and it may be the place where world interest centers through its proximity to the Orient.

Warning is given in the reading of the heavens that degeneracy and immorality will cause serious problems for the white race, which in America is to suffer from corruption through vices it has sown among peoples of darker skins.

Persons whose birthdate it is will do well to appreciate the love that may appear tiresome or unwelcome.

Children born on this day may have many adventures in their careers. Both boys and girls probably will participate in real life dramas.

DRESS

By MARY MARSHALL

The five-year-old King Mihai of Roumania, grandson of ex-Queen Marie, is sensibly dressed in this white cotton shirt, light-weight woolen trousers, short white socks and light strapped pumps.

"It is so much easier to dress boys than girls," says the mother of daughters. But the mother of sons, especially little sons, is not so sure.

After the boy of five or six gets to the point where he is—or thinks he is—too old for middy blouses, sailor suits and the little suits with trousers that button over the waist, there is the vexed problem of the belt. European children usually wear suspenders or braces over their shirts with short flannel jackets on top. It is a usual enough sight to see French boys at play, coat off, with braces displayed. And the suspender has undoubted advantages over the belt for little boys whose waists are quite as broad as their hips.

Still it is possible to secure a comfortable, trim adjustment of little boy clothes—and that too without having the belt drawn too tight. The sketch shows the every-day clothes chosen for the five-year-old Mihai, now King of Roumania. And so far from looking to American eyes in any way outlandish or foreign it offers a really excellent model for a practical wearable play suit for any little boy of six or thereabouts.

Notice that the trousers are cut fairly high and worn with a rather wide belt, which is fastened snugly but not at all tightly. Notice, too, that the trousers are short. It is entirely an American idea to dress small boys in knicker-bockers. But there is nothing of the exaggerated, grotesque shortness about these little trousers that is to be sometimes seen in France. The fairly low comfortable collar is tied in a trim four-in-hand and fastened at the lower part to the shirt by means of a simple clasp pin.

In years gone by queens have set the fashion in feminine dress. The Prince of Wales does more than any one else to influence the current of masculine modes—and now we have a king who has made a splendid start in setting the fashions for little boys.

Hand-painted slippers are among the novelties shown in the smartest shoe shops, but unless you have a large dress allowance you probably feel that you cannot afford them. It is a simple enough trick, however, to paint your own. All you need is a box of paints, a paint brush, some white canvas or kid slippers—and the pattern. You don't even have to have a bit of artistic ability, and the pattern you can get if you will send me a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

FASHION NOTES.

ABOUT FAKE JEWELRY

(By Hedda Hoyt, United Press Fashion Editor)

NEW YORK, August 18. (United Press).—Fake jewelry has become so cheap and uninteresting that the smart woman no longer considers it even as a costume item. If she wears jewelry for daytime hours, it must be semi-precious jewelery which has an actual re-sale value. Substitutes do not interest her. Many women are familiar with real semi-precious stones and can distinguish them in a moment from their imitations. For those who cannot, we suggest a few hints as to stone values.

Jade comes in several colors but green is considered the most fashionable jewelry jade. The nearer green jade approaches the emerald shade the more valuable it is. Clear unmottled green jade is most costly. However, when the green is mottled with white or gray the value of the stone depends upon the color and quantity of the green portion. Jade is cold to the touch. When holding a piece of jade and an imitation stone in the hand for a period of time, the real jade remains colder than the imitation. Green malachite is often mistaken for jade although it is a much cheaper stone.

Carnelian of best quality is a clear reddish hue. Held to the light it is almost transparent and becomes an orangish red shade. Most of the real carnelian that we get in this country is slightly mottled or flaked. When one fails to detect slight imperfections in a medium-priced stone, it is probably because the stone is dyed onyx. Onyx can be dyed in clever imitation of carnelian and jade, although it is an inexpensive stone.

Some jewelers distinguish turquoise from imitation turquoise by rubbing a gold ring over the side. If the stone becomes gold where it is scratched, it is turquoise. Many of the carved pendants and beads are nothing but a chalky substance pressed and dyed to represent turquoise. This substance is easily breakable and when broken or chipped shows a white chalky inner substance. By scratching turquoise with a knife one can make this tests.

Real amber is light in weight and when rubbed is supposed to pick up little bits of tissue paper. Pressed amber or amber shaving may also be light and pick up paper, however, owing to the way it has been treated. Many people can tell amber by its rosin taste. It feels and tastes slightly gummy if placed between the teeth.

Rosequartz is in reality a pale pink crystal. The rosequartz chokers which one sees in the shops selling for $7 or $8 are usually dyed stones imported from Germany or Austria. Oriental rosequartz is the best quality and this is a fairly hard stone which is seldom tinted or dyed. Chokers of this cost from $35 to $100. As a rule these beads are carved.

Amethyst is a difficult stone to imitate except in glass. The best amethyst is clear in color and the deeper the shade the more costly the stone. Many prefer milky amethyst that varies in color as it's a bit more interesting.

Chaleedony is a grayish blue stone which is often imitated in dyed onyx. The imitations fail to get the delicate gray blue tones and verge on periwinkle shades, however.

For the first time in 125 years a girl has just been born in a certain family in Woking, England. The father is one of six sons and his father was one of five sons.

Education, fuller participation of women in politics, and the need for abolishing child marriage were among the subjects discussed at the first All-India Women's Conference, held recently in Poona.

HE TURNED AGAINST HIS COUNTRY—CHILD IS STORM CENTRE

Mrs. Annie Kincaid, Ontario woman, who sought in vain in Seattle, Washington courts, to obtain custody of her dead war veteran brother's child, returned heart broken when her suit failed. Her brother, a Canadian by birth but a veteran of the United States army, had said, it was reported before his death, that he did not wishhis little son to be reared under the British crown. Mrs. Kincaid is shown above on the left. In the centre is her deceased brother, Burt Cosbie. At the right is the baby Albert Cosbie, aged 3, over who much litigation has occurred in the United States courts.

SAINT and SINNER

By ANNE AUSTIN

"Shall I wear my peach-colored chiffon or my white georgette?" Cherry mused. Then, as there was an unmistakable gurgle of laughter from her baby, she rushed to Faith's chair and flung herself down upon her knees, letting her short copper-and-gold curls fall in a bright cascade over the dimpling face of the midget-sized infant, "Laughing at your old muzzer, lambie?" she crowed fondly. "You just wait, Midget! Won't be long now till you're dressing for your first beau! And oh, the hearts you'll break, you little beauty! Wonder if I'm going to be jealous of this little mite some day, Faith?"

"I almost wish she weren't going to be so pretty," Faith answered. "Beauty—like yours—can be a greater curse than it is a blessing. If you weren't so very lovely, honey ——"

"Are you falling in love with Glenn Andrews, Cherry?" Faith asked, ignoring her sister's impudence.

"I have all the symptoms," Cherry flung over one bare, pearly tinted shoulder as she delved into the closet for the peach-colored chiffon. "I thought you were interested in George," Faith said helplessly.

"Does he know about—about Mr. Cluny?" Faith asked hesitatingly.

"Who doesn't?" Cherry retorted. "Don't worry, precious. I've told Glenn all about it, and he understands and sympathizes beautifully. He also knows about—Chris. Everything," she added, as she slipped the lovely, cloud-like chiffon frock over her rioting curls.

"I agree with Bob that you had better wait until after your divorce from Chris before you become involved in any way with another man," Faith told her stiffly.

DRESS

By MARY MARSHALL

The five-year-old King Mihai of Roumania, grandson of ex-Queen Marie, is sensibly dressed in this white cotton shirt, light-weight woolen trousers, short white socks and light strapped pumps.

"It is so much easier to dress boys than girls," says the mother of daughters. But the mother of sons, especially little sons, is not so sure.

After the boy of five or six gets to the point where he is—or thinks he is—too old for middy blouses, sailor suits and the little suits with trousers that button over the waist, there is the vexed problem of the belt. European children usually wear suspenders or braces over their shirts with short flannel jackets on top. It is a usual enough sight to see French boys at play, coat off, with braces displayed. And the suspender has undoubted advantages over the belt for little boys whose waists are quite as broad as their hips.

Still it is possible to secure a comfortable, trim adjustment of little boy clothes—and that too without having the belt drawn too tight. The sketch shows the every-day clothes chosen for the five-year-old Mihai, now King of Roumania. And so far from looking to American eyes in any way outlandish or foreign it offers a really excellent model for a practical wearable play suit for any little boy of six or thereabouts.

Notice that the trousers are cut fairly high and worn with a rather wide belt, which is fastened snugly but not at all tightly. Notice, too, that the trousers are short. It is entirely an American idea to dress small boys in knicker-bockers. But there is nothing of the exaggerated, grotesque shortness about these little trousers that is to be sometimes seen in France. The fairly low comfortable collar is tied in a trim four-in-hand and fastened at the lower part to the shirt by means of a simple clasp pin.

In years gone by queens have set the fashion in feminine dress. The Prince of Wales does more than any one else to influence the current of masculine modes—and now we have a king who has made a splendid start in setting the fashions for little boys.

Hand-painted slippers are among the novelties shown in the smartest shoe shops, but unless you have a large dress allowance you probably feel that you cannot afford them. It is a simple enough trick, however, to paint your own. All you need is a box of paints, a paint brush, some white canvas or kid slippers—and the pattern. You don't even have to have a bit of artistic ability, and the pattern you can get if you will send me a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

FASHION NOTES.

ABOUT FAKE JEWELRY

(By Hedda Hoyt, United Press Fashion Editor)

NEW YORK, August 18. (United Press).—Fake jewelry has become so cheap and uninteresting that the smart woman no longer considers it even as a costume item. If she wears jewelry for daytime hours, it must be semi-precious jewelery which has an actual re-sale value. Substitutes do not interest her. Many women are familiar with real semi-precious stones and can distinguish them in a moment from their imitations. For those who cannot, we suggest a few hints as to stone values.

Jade comes in several colors but green is considered the most fashionable jewelry jade. The nearer green jade approaches the emerald shade the more valuable it is. Clear unmottled green jade is most costly. However, when the green is mottled with white or gray the value of the stone depends upon the color and quantity of the green portion. Jade is cold to the touch. When holding a piece of jade and an imitation stone in the hand for a period of time, the real jade remains colder than the imitation. Green malachite is often mistaken for jade although it is a much cheaper stone.

Carnelian of best quality is a clear reddish hue. Held to the light it is almost transparent and becomes an orangish red shade. Most of the real carnelian that we get in this country is slightly mottled or flaked. When one fails to detect slight imperfections in a medium-priced stone, it is probably because the stone is dyed onyx. Onyx can be dyed in clever imitation of carnelian and jade, although it is an inexpensive stone.

Some jewelers distinguish turquoise from imitation turquoise by rubbing a gold ring over the stone. If the stone becomes gold where it is scratched, it is turquoise. Many of the carved pendants and beads are nothing but a chalky substance pressed and dyed to represent turquoise. This substance is easily breakable and when broken or chipped shows a white chalky inner substance. By scratching turquoise with a knife one can make this tests.

Real amber is light in weight and when rubbed is supposed to pick up little bits of tissue paper. Pressed amber or amber shaving may also be light and pick up paper, however, owing to the way it has been treated. Many people can tell amber by its rosin taste. It feels and tastes slightly gummy if placed between the teeth.

Rosequartz is in reality a pale pink crystal. The rosequartz chokers which one sees in the shops selling for $7 or $8 are usually dyed stones imported from Germany or Austria. Oriental rosequartz is the best quality and this is a fairly hard stone which is seldom tinted or dyed. Chokers of this cost from $35 to $100. As a rule these beads are carved.

Amethyst is a difficult stone to imitate except in glass. The best amethyst is clear in color and the deeper the shade the more costly the stone. Many prefer milky amethyst that varies in color as it's a bit more interesting.

Chaleedony is a gravish blue stone which is often imitated in dyed onyx. The imitations fail to get the delicate gray blue tones and verge on periwinkle shades, however.

For the first time in 125 years a girl has just been born in a certain family in Woking, England. The father is one of six sons and his father was one of five sons.

Education, fuller participation of women in politics, and the need for abolishing child marriage were among the subjects discussed at the first All-India Women's Conference, held recently in Poona.

HE TURNED AGAINST HIS COUNTRY—CHILD IS STORM CENTRE

Mrs. Annie Kincaid, Ontario woman, who sought in vain in Seattle, Washington courts, to obtain custody of her dead war veteran brother's child, returned heart broken when her suit failed. Her brother, a Canadian by birth but a veteran of the United States army, had said, it was reported before his death, that he did not wishhis little son to be reared under the British crown. Mrs. Kincaid is shown above on the left. In the centre is her deceased brother, Burt Cosbie. At the right is the baby Albert Cosbie, aged 3, over who much litigation has occurred in the United States courts.

CONTRAST OF METHODS.

"You can drink on the Champs Elysees in a sidewalk cafe. But you resent the contemptuous presence of a gendarme who looks at you and refuses to blow his whistle. The legality of the affair casts a chill over the fun cold enough to nickle-plate a fireless cooker."

An American humorist thus expresses a fundamental sociological truth which apparently he himself experienced on a visit to Paris.

Imagine a sidewalk cafe on Yonge street, Toronto, or at the corner of Charlotte and George streets, Peterborough, where beers and wines and liquors could be bought and sipped as the crowd streamed by.

One might fancy that such a plan would appeal even to the prohibitionists, who could at least see the sippers instead of having to hire spotters to ferret out the bootleggers and "blind pigs" which prohibition has invariably failed to stamp out.

But the Parisian plan would be too simple and logical for Peterborough and Toronto. Zealots who believe, in spite of experience and their knowledge of human nature, that people can be legislated and dragooned into sobriety would be horrified at the frankness of the boulevard cafe.

They do not realize that there is a streak of abstinacy and perversity in many men, who react as the humorist from Volstedia admits: "It's a lot more fun sneaking into a feed and grain store back home and gurgling a snifter of liquid out of an umbrella stand marked 'Rat Poison.'"

SEEKING NEW MARKETS.

In his endeavour to extend Canada's foreign trade, Hon. James Malcolm, Minister of Trade and Commerce, has sent a deputy to South America to canvass the prospects of securing new markets for Canadian products.

Hon. Mr. Malcolm has made a good impression by the energy and initiative he has brought to this highly important department. He seems to be a decided acquisition to the Federal Cabinet, and every Canadian, irrespective of politics, will hope that his efforts may be attended with success.

The Minister and other Canadians seeking to establish new business connections below the equator might profit by the comparative failure of United States trade missionaries to ingratiate themselves with the people of the Spanish south.

Less "pep" and more poise, less bluntness and more blandness, are the needs of United States salesmanship practice in South America.

The American's aggressive approach so much approved at home chills the Uruguayan or Brazilian business man, and orders are frozen up by the very manner which was calculated to thaw and extract them.

Uncle Sam sees a large and attractive field for his products in the other America, and has already built up an extensive trade. Canadian interests and investments there are also important, and the Canadian manner should not be an obstacle.

REFUTING A SLANDER.

Mr. Baldwin did a good turn to his working class fellow-countrymen and to workers in general when he refuted misconceptions prevailing on this side of the Atlantic regarding the British unemployment insurance scheme.

The term "dole," as pointed out by Mr. Baldwin, is absolutely a misnomer for an insurance plan to which those now drawing a small relief sum contributed while working and earning weekly wages.

From the inauguration of the scheme by Mr. Lloyd George, payments to the unemployment insurance fund have been made by the three parties concerned—state, employer and worker.

If the impression prevails in some quarters that the average unemployed worker in Britain prefers living in idleness on a pittance handed over the counter of the unemployment office to a full envelope at the end of a week of toil, responsibility must be laid on the shoulders of yellow British journals with high circulations that have found pleasure in baiting the workers of their country.

Of course, there are cases of deliberate shirking of work and sponging on public funds. In the million and a half unemployed of Britain, it is only reasonable to suppose there must need be a percentage of malingers and petty grafters.

But the average man out of a job in Britain is as like by Canadian confrere as are two bullets, cast from the same mould.

Provided there is prospect of a reasonable return, he is able and willing to work.

The lesson for us in the situation is, as Mr. Baldwin pointed out, that it will be mutually advantageous if we can bring those willing but idle hands into contact with our empty and idle lands.

PRESERVING THE NEWSPAPERS.

How much of the almost incalculable mine of wealth to the historian of the future, contained in the periodical press of today, will be available for the instruction of the coming generations, when they seek to learn of those strange, restless beings who lived in the twentieth century?

Most public libraries file the local papers and bind them for reference. The vast increase in the use of paper and the necessity for cheapness have combined to reduce the quality with disastrous results.

It is fairly certain that within comparatively few years, most of the newspapers of today will have perished, however carefully they are preserved in bound volumes.

Many will say, "Good riddance." But this is a hasty generalization. The newspapers not only mirror the facts of day-to-day history: they record facts that are of importance for local and national history. The ephemeral tracts and broadsides of the Civil War and Commonwealth period, collected day by day by George Thomason, whose collection, about 24,000 pieces, is now in the British museum, serves to illustrate the value to the historian of things despised when first printed. Carlyle said of this collection that it is the greatest series of historical documents possessed by any nation, and that "it is worth all the sheepskins in the Tower."

Carlyle may have exaggerated: The national records were then in the Tower of London when he wrote: the Public Record Office and its wonderful organization came later.

But whether Carlyle's statement regarding it be accurate or not, the importance of the Thomason Tracts for the story of the ebb and flow of events and opinions during the Civil War serves to illustrate the value of unofficial records represented in modern times by the newspaper press.

It may happen that the mind of the Canadian people during the years of the Great War will be more accurately interpreted by some future historians from the daily and weekly newspapers of those years when from any study of official documents.

The preservation of newspapers is, therefore, a duty which the libraries of today owe to posterity. But acute librarians have been quick to realize that all their efforts might prove useless, because of the perishable nature of the paper used.

Efforts to remove this difficulty have been made by each of the outstanding papers in Britain and America.

For some years past The London Times has supplied to the national libraries a copy of each issue on a special paper. This example is now being followed by The New York Times, which guarantees a 100 per cent. rag paper for filing purposes.

But what of other newspapers? Can the system be extended to cover a wider field? He would be a real benefactor to posterity who would bring this about.

BEAUTY AS A COMMERCIAL ASSET.

It has been assumed in recent years that industrial efficiency, mass production and keen competition for markets necessitate the subordination of beauty to strict utility. Hundreds of protesting articles have been written on the alleged ugliness of machine-made products and the loss that comes to modern civilization through standardization and the sacrifice of everything deemed nonessential. As a matter of fact, in recent years opposite tendencies have manifested themselves in industry and in trade. Too little attention has been paid to these tendencies.

A striking article in the Atlantic Monthly for August makes out a strong case for the claim that beauty is coming back in a variety of ways into the life of the average person. Manufacturers, it is shown by illustrations, are laying stress on the attractiveness of their products to the discriminating eye. Inventors and designers are kept busy making articles of common use as pleasing to the view as possible. Schools of commercial art are increasing in number, and the demand for their graduates is growing.

There is a new type of factory manager or superintendent, a type that refuses to associate any kind of industry with unsightly and forbidding surroundings. More and more factories have green lawns in front or back of them where flowers are not lacking, and the buildings themselves have undergone a change of architectural style on the side of beauty.

Window displays in department stores have developed an art of their own. Inside the stores one finds art galleries as well as rooms full of lovely and beautiful things. The great gulf fixed between the fine arts and the commercial arts is disappearing. There is less occasion to deplore the domination of the automatic tool and the machine. Indeed, those implements are making it possible for beauty to re-enter modest homes.

Zoning, city and regional planning, the motor car and other influences are combining to transform city streets and the approaches to cities. Factories are moving to the country and the country is being brought into the city. Under intelligent and efficient treatment, the problem of restoring beauty to modern urban life, once properly formulated, will not resist solution.—Chicago News.

FUTURE SUPPLY OF FUEL IS SURE.

An English fuel expert makes the prediction that within seven years Canada will be independent of both American and British coal because of a patented process which will turn Canadian coal dust, lignite and even peat into fuel fit for domestic and industrial purposes. The prediction is interesting, whether or not the hopes expressed are wholly or partly realized in the time mentioned, or longer. In any event, Canada is better off as regards fuel supplies than ever before. In industry the "white coal" from the great water sources that are being harnessed is being put to more use every day, and additional waterfalls and rapids are being studied and their potentialities estimated in advance of demands. A vast supply of steam coal is being mined and the coking industry is being enlarged and its product advertised. As for household fuel, the people in Canadian cities and towns are in an enviable position, for they have the domestic fuel source and both American and British supplies at their service. When there was a strike in the American mines, Canada was supplied with Welsh and Scotch coal, and some Dutch and German fuel as well. When the British miners quit their labors, there was hard American coal to fill the bins and feed stoves and furnaces. Prior to the great strike in the United States anthracite field in 1902, very little, if any, British coal entered the Canadian market, but since then the importations of coal have grown, and the last three or four years have seen a tremendous increase in the use of Welsh and Scotch coal in Eastern Canada, Montreal being a particularly heavy user of British hard coal. American anthracite is still the most used fuel here. The householder also has coke in plenty for his home if he prefers it. With domestic, American and British hard coal available, and coke into the bargain, there is less likelihood than ever of a fuel famine in Canada, and competition should keep prices at a reasonable level. The fuel situation to that extent may be considered satisfactory.—St. Catharines Standard.

ASTONISHING AND USELESS.

There is, it is reported, an inlaid chess table composed of 51,000 bits of wood from all parts of the world. There are undoubtedly persons who proudly and devotedly do these things. It is beyond the comprehension, and certainly outside the patience, of the average, but somewhere there is a man ready to write a prayer on the head of a pin, or to make a chess table of 51,000 pieces of wood gathered somehow from all over the earth.

The chess table represents what infinity of tedious care and exhausting minuteness of workmanship! For what hours did the creator of it cramp his physical frame the while he worked those trifling splinters into position? And why a chess table?

The prayer on the pin-head, the minutely-inlaid chess-board are to gape at, not to use; they emphasize the queer pleasure the human mind discovers in achieving useless and astonishing things.—Detroit News.

MONTREAL GRAIN AND PRODUCE.

MONTREAL, Que., August 18 (Canadian Press). — The export trade in Canadian grain on the Montreal market yesterday was moderate under a fair demand from the Continent and the United Kingdom.

The demand for spring and winter wheat grades of flour continued on the quiet side, but values ruled steady.

A fairly active business was done in all lines of millfeed, and prices were firm. The market for all standard grades of rolled oats continued firm under a moderate inquiry.

A feature of the cheese trade was the further weakness that developed and prices were reduced another ½c per pound. This was attributed to the small demand of late. The receipts were 9,225 boxes.

The butter market was again quiet, but the undertone was firmer, and prices were marked up a fraction. The receipts were 125 packages.

A stronger feeling developed in the egg market, and values were marked up one cent per dozen, which was due to the scarcity of supplies and the good demand. The receipts were 1,153 cases.

CHICAGO GRAIN

CHICAGO, August 18 (Canadian Press). — Fear of frost in the Canadian North-West, due to cold weather in Alaska, induced good buying of wheat toward the finish of yesterday's session on the Board of Trade, and values turned upgrade. Leading houses bought freely and the market closed strong, with wheat showing a net advance of ½c to ⅞c, corn being up 1c to 1⅜c, oats ¼c down, and provisions 5c to $1.00 off.

Rather violent fluctuations took place in the wheat market during the greater part of the day, due to the difference of opinion regarding weather and crop advices from the West and North-West. Winnipeg failed to place much stress on the weather conditions in the Prairie Provinces, the opinion being general that the total crop will be late in spite of the frost damage in certain portions of Saskatchewan. This, however, will depend a good deal on the frost developments, as much of the wheat is still two to three weeks from harvest.

Corn rallied sharply on late buying on short covering. Although the belt has received considerable moisture of late, it was pointed out that the crop requires warmer weather.

Oats were unsettled with other grains.

Provisions were easier.

MANY ENJOY TRIP TO JUNIPER ISLAND

Moonlight Excursion From Lakefield is Very Well Patronized.

LAKEFIELD, Aug. 18.—A very successful moonlight excursion was held on Friday evening on the steamer "Stoney Lake" under the auspices of the employees of the Canada Cement Co. Nixon's orchestra of Peterborough supplied music for dancing, which was enjoyed during the trip and at Juniper Island, where the boat stopped for an hour. There was a very large crowd and a very pleasant evening was spent. The weather was ideal for the trip and the moon, which at the full, made the trip through the islands delightful for those who preferred the scenery to dancing.

The Temple Band of the Salvation Army visited Lakefield on Sunday morning and took charge of the service in the Regent street United church by courtesy of Rev. S. A. Kemp. The singing was led by the band and was extremely hearty. The church was crowded to the doors.

Flowers were placed on the altar of St. John's church, Lakefield, on Sunday by Mrs. D. Sloan of Peterborough in memory of her daughter, Agnes Macdonald, who died on August 14th several years ago.

The annual masquerade dance will be held at Riverside Pavilion on Thursday evening, August 25th.

A Thought For To-day

THE POWER OF PATIENCE.

Impatience, I believe, has ruined more projects, blasted more hopes, delayed more results than any other human characteristic.

But the average human of today wants to do everything in a hurry—wants to reach a goal by a short-cut road.

Folks fail sometimes for want of strength, you say—forgetting that strength, endurance, born of patience, is the result of the power to hold on, to hold fast.

"I work with patience, which is almost power," said Mrs. Browning.

And I warrant that if you will look about you at the men and women of your acquaintance who have made a success, who have arrived, and will analyze their qualities and their methods, you will find that patience is a dominant characteristic.

Looks for Reconciliation Between Nanking and Hankow Forces

SHANGHAI, Aug. 18.—With a crash, dramatic in its suddenness, the Nanking Nationalist Government has collapsed, following the overthrow and retirement of Chiang Kai Shek.

Fifteen members of the Central Executive Committee of the Kuomintang (Nationalist) Party have resigned, and the ministry is expected to follow.

The situation is passing into the hands of the militarists. The Nanking and Hankow armies are uniting, General Li Chung Chen temporarily taking the place of Chiang Kai Shek.

Feng Seeks Control.

While Marshal Sun Chuan Fang, China's man of mystery, is pressing toward Nanking with his northerners, Marshal Feng Yu Hsiang, China's picturesque "Wallenstein", but known as the "Prince of Betrayers", is seeking to swing himself into Chiang Kai Shek's saddle as commander-in-chief. Feng affects a monkish simplicity and asceticism. He is the only notable war lord with only one wife.

Feng's chief adviser is General Osmanoff, a Russian, who is assisted by several other Russians. Feng's success in making himself leader of the Nationalists would mean a renewed ascendancy of Russian influence in China, although it would be in a more discreet form.

The Nanking central executive committee today refused invitations from Feng for a conference looking toward reconciliation between the Nanking and Hankow factions, which he proposed.

Borodin, who is now speeding away from China, has nevertheless had his revenge, for Chiang Kai Shek, his enemy, is the victim of the strong Russian influences in Hankow which now promise to retake the leadership in the Nationalist revolution.

Chang "Sacrifices Self."

The former generalissimo today issued a 5,000-word manifesto, declaring himself in the interest of the party unity. He appeals to both factions to reunite. The manifesto reflects his bitter resentment at the intrigues against him and renews his declarations against Communism.

If Hankow and Nanking fail to reunite prospects are that General Chang Tso Lin, former bandit king of the North, will soon control the greater part of China.

Huang Fu, Mayor of Shanghai, has resigned and Foreign Minister Wu is reported to have quit. The Shanghai foreign colony does not weep because extorionate taxes were taken from them by Chiang.

Fen Yu Hsiang is intensively at work seeking to create a triple alliance of the south, with himself. Hankow and Nanking banded against the norther triple alliance of Chang Tso Lin, Chang Chung Chang and Sun Chuan Fang.

SMOKE SCREEN TO HELP PLANES

Can Be Laid By One Plane To Protect Others From Anti-Aircraft Guns.

TRIED OUT TO-DAY.

NEW YORK, Aug. 17 (Canadian Press).—A new safeguard for attacking airplanes from the anti-aircraft guns of enemy ships was predicted by aviators to-day, following the experiment of the army Martin bomber to envelop the new French liner Ile De France in a vast smoke screen near New York Harbor. Swooping low over the huge black liner, the bomber cut a vast horseshoe about the vessel, leaving in its wake expansive and gleaming white curtains that hid the liner from the view of the peering eyes on observation planes.

New York Movement Continues Upward To-day

NEW YORK, August 18. — Canadian Press. — The main price movement in to-days stock market continued upward but considerable spottiness developed, particularly in the early trading Easy money ratescontinued to provide the main groundwork for the advance. Rails started upwards around midday under the leadership of the eastern carriers. "Nickle Plate," Lehigh Valley, Delawsare and Hudson, Baltimore and Ohio, and Atlantic Coast Line all sold two to nearly four points above yesterday's final quotations. Further strength developed in the oil group. One block of 10,000 shares of Phillips' Petroleum changed hands at 45, Houston extended its gain to more than five points, and Atlantic Refining to 3½. Motors were spotty. Resumption of the advance in the merchandising issues was accompanied by heavy profit taking.

Kirkland and Quebec Groups Lead Market

TORONTO, August 18. — The Kirkland Lake and Quebec groups were again active leaders in a huge market on the Standard mining exchange. This morning's transactions topped 800,000 shares. Amulet took the lead with a turnover of more than a hundred thousand shares and an advance of 33c at 4.60. Noranda ran up 70c at 23.25, Area went up 4 at 76, and Laval Quebec, heavily dealt in, climbed 3½ at 38. Ribago gained only fractionally at 31. Kirkland Lakes were less strong in heavy trading. Kirkland Lake itself eased three at 188 but Wright Hargreaves gained four at 6.45. Lakeshore was easier at 22.00. Argonaut advanced 1¾ at 34½.

General Trend Downward On Toronto Exchange

TORONTO, Aug. 18. (Canadian Press).—After early advances on the Toronto Stock Exchange to-day, stocks tended to recede. Abitibi, however, remained the upward leader with a gain of four at 106½. F. N. Burt and Brompton, the active issues of the session, gained two at 63 and 1½ at 38 respectively. McColl Bros., a dominant issue, touched 44 3-8 but receded to 43 5-8 for a net loss of an eighth. Cosmos Imperial finished the morning three-quarters higher at 29¼ and Brazilian was up a like fraction at 172. British Columbia Fishing improved a point at 17½.

Among the generally quiet liquor stocks, Walker was weakest, losing one at 48¾. Carlings eased ¾ at 28 5-8.

The oils, outside of McColl, were steady, though British American lost an eighth at 26 3-8. Noranda had a remarkable advance of nearly a dollar at 23.40.

News From Canada Causes Drop In Wheat

CHICAGO, August 18 (Canadian Press). — Failure of frost to develop in the Canadian North-West, coupled with an easier tone in the Liverpool market, gave the wheat market here a bearish tendency during the early dealings. On the break in values, however, active buying by a house with eastern connections absorbed the pit surplus and brought about a strong rally. Opening unchanged to ⅜c higher, wheat fell below yesterday's finish and then recovered. Corn firmed with wheat and on reports of cooler weather over the belt, starting ⅛c lower to ⅛c advance, the market held near to initial figures. Oats were steady and provisions easy.

General Activity Is Indicated In Mines

(Special from The Financial Post Syndicate)

The mining market seems to be priming itself for general activity. Trading during the past week has broadened materially. Public buying has shown a steady increase in volume and with a variety of good news coming from all sections, it is felt that the mine shares are going to continue to attract.

Quebec issues have been considerably in the limelight due to the steadiness of Amulet above the $4 mark and the wide fluctuations in Area. The Amulet move was based upon good news and while some consider the present price high, there is merit behind the venture. Area savors of manipulation. There is not good news and it will be time enough for the investor to buy when the good news is forthcoming even if the price is ten points higher.

Many cannot understand why Noranda does not begin to reflect the increased improvement that has taken place at the mine. Since new sinking operations have been gotten under way below the 300-ft. level and downward extensions of ore bodies have been proven, adding materially to ore in sight, the shares have actually slipped back. The stock has shown weakness ever since the deal was concluded whereby Noranda secured control of Waite Montgomery and the Alderson and MacKay mines. There is continued good news from the latter property. Besides new lateral developments underground, Diamond Drills have cut good ore among 1200-ft which is the deepest drilling done in the camp and also the deepest ore has been found in the area. This news is of divided interest as well to Towagmac Shareholders for their company owns the 35% interest in the Alderson-machinery mine that is not controlled by Noranda. Duprat reorganization has been confirmed by shareholders and old stock is transferrable on a basis of one new for two old. The Company is launching exploration work on over 6,000 acres and has $75,000 cash in the treasury, in addition to what may be forthcoming with considerable new stock in the treasury.

Optimistic reports are about in regard to Harvie Exploration in Quebec. It is understood that a firm of competent engineers have examined the property and reported that the Ringrose property shows a remarkable width and values. Details will likely be announced on the occasion of the split of these shares on a five-new-for-one-old basis. This company has organized a new exploration effort and has already secured some important properties, details of which are about to be announced.

Woman Lake has gotten somewhat of a black eye because of the definite information from that section that the Timmins interests have quit the Jackson Manion property. This was a sensational discovery and values were very high. It is understood that the deepest of the 16 holes put down by the Timmins, was under 200-ft. and yet all cut the granite formation, and indication that the deposit is a shallow one. It looks as if the property will make a small but rich mine.

Some official information in regard to Pioneer Mining Corporations drilling of the Jubilee vein in Minaipocoten should soon be on its way. It is understood that the company has put down between 20 and 30 holes and got values in every one of them—in short drew no blanks. As the company practically proved up a mine on the adjoining Minto, it is expected that it will soon be ready to go on with plans for a mill.

Rather an upset came to the proposed financing of Coniaurum Mines, adjoining McIntyre and Hollinger in Porcupine, when Goldale Mining Co. directors raised objection to the proposals. Coniagas, which owns control of Coniarum, proposed to lend the company $800,000 at 7% and take down a bonus of 80,000 shares of stock for doing so. Goldale holds a block of Coniaurum stock and objected. It is likely now that shares will be offered shareholders around 84 a share to provide the funds for deeper development and construction of a mill.

The deal whereby Premier Mines, British Columbia absorbs B.C. Silver and National Silver, has it seems, definitely gone through. Two weeks ago this was reported but some doubts were cast on the report. While no official information has been forthcoming it would appear now that all doubts are removed.

TYPHOID EPIDEMIC HAS PASSED PEAK

Chatham Authorities Report Only One New Case To-day.

CHATHAM, Ont., Aug. 18 (Canadian Press).—That the peak of the local typhoid epidemic is passing was the opinion today of local and provincial health authorities. Only one new case was reported today. Precautionary measures, however, are not being relaxed. As it is only a week since the dairy from which the infection was traced was closed down and it normally takes two weeks for infection to develop, the true extent of the epidemic will not be determined for some days yet.

The measure was adopted by a vote of three to two.

He also announced definitely for the first time that he would make the trip alone and, if successful in landing in England, will fly back to Canada as soon as the weather permits.

"It won't be long now," he said, when asked when he expected to leave.

FORD GARAGE BEING ALTERED

Peter Hamilton Building Is Being Prepared For New Tenants.

DIFFICULT TASK.

Workmen employed by Frank Barret are busy effecting alterations at the southern half of the old Peter Hamilton building, converting it into a Ford supply service station, garage and repair shop, to be occupied by Messrs. Hood and Cumming, the new Ford dealers in this city.

The wall facing George street has been pierced for the installation of three large show windows and a front door.

The old blacksmith shop further back is also undergoing an extensive change. A cement floor will be constructed and the south side will be fitted up with workers' benches. A new office is also included in the plan.

Fifteen thousand pounds of steel are being used in the repairs and alterations.

The work of removing the heavy machines, says Mr. Barrett, presented a difficult problem, much of it having remained in position for more than forty years.

GLADIOLUS SHOW END OF NEXT WEEK

LAWN JUDGING SOON.

The gladiolus lovers are watching their flower beds anxiously just now, in anticipation of producing the prize bloom for the local gladiolus show next week. Judging by the interest already evinced, Friday and Saturday, August 26 and 27, will see a nice exhibit in the window of the Turnbull Store. It is open to amateurs only, and indeed anyone is liable to grow just as fine bloom as the professional. The list of prizes was published a short time ago, and entries should now be sent to the secretary of the society, Chamber of Commerce. There is no charge for entry, and it is hoped that a large number of garden enthusiasts will bring in their finest gladiolus for this show. It is not even necessary to be a member of the society, as this exhibit is open to anyone who cares to show.

Another of the midsummer contests featured by the Horticultural Society, the lawn and garden judging, will take place next week, and those who are proud of their lawns and gardens should notify the secretary at once, as the route to be followed by the judge must be arranged ahead of time.

CLOTH ALLOWS TANNING

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—Science has discovered a new fabric, which will be used for sports dresses, that allows the ultra-violet rays of the sun to penetrate it. This means that the wearer can get a good coat of sunburn without uncovering her arms and neck—provided, of course, that her undies are not proof against the rays.

Read this message from Mrs. H. Taylor, Peterborough:

"Rinso suds soak everything clean, so I have no more boiling to do, no hard rubbing on a washboard. Little wonder that my clothes last a lot longer. And Rinso isn't hard on my hands either. I have tried all kinds of laundry soaps and chips for a good many years, but nothing but Rinso for me now. It makes my washing so easy and my clothes so white and bright."

MRS. H. TAYLOR,
535 Chamberlain,
Peterborough, Ont.

makes them last longer

All over Canada, women are turning to this time-saving, work-saving, clothes-saving method of washing just by soaking!

Rinso has banished forever the necessity of boiling or rubbing and scrubbing clothes threadbare to get them clean. And what a thrill to note the snowy whiteness, the brightness of colored fabrics, the clean fragrance of everything, after soaking in Rinso!

The thick, soapy Rinso suds gently loosen the most ground-in dirt. Rinse and it floats away. Only cuffs, edges, need a gentle rub.

Rinso contains no acids, bleach or harmful chemicals—nothing to hurt clothes or hands.

U.E.L. FAMILY HAS REUNION

Descendants of Gilbert James Barton Gather at Crow Lake.

ABOUT 50 PRESENT

BONAR LAW, Aug. 18.—The descendants of Gilbert James Barton, Esq., U.E.L., held a reunion at Crowe Lake on Sunday, August 14. About fifty people were present. Most of these were from the immediate vicinity.

The granfather of the late Mr. Barton came from England and settled in the New England States. They were driven from what they sought to keep a veritable New England for allegiance to their motherland.

Late in the year 1784, the old Puritan minister, his wife (nee Phebe von Black), and two children traveled north. They were accompanied by Ara De Long, his wife, and children, a Huguenot family who remained loyal to their adopted country. The party was completed by two of their former slaves who refused to leave their master.

The Barton family stopped for a time near St. Catharines, then moved to Prince Edward county and finally settled in the north of Rawdon township in Hastings county. The two children married Ara and Phebe De Long, the only two children of that family.

Mrs. Barton died after fourteen years here. Gilbert James Barton died a number of years later at the age of 100. In his last year he was able to travel south to his old home, and once again minister to a few of his people.

Very few direct descendants of this family are now in the vicinity. The wish was expressed that at a future reunion more would find it possible to be present.

MASQUERADE AT VIAMEDE HOTEL

DANCE ENJOYED

VIAMEDE, Aug. 18—The annual masquerade dance was held on Friday evening at "Viamede" and was a great success. The pavilion, with its perfect floor, was filled to capacity, and the crowd spent a delightful evening. Excellent music was provided by the Rameses Orchestra who were untiring in their response to encores. As has been the case at every masquerade in the district this season, the number of spectators far exceeded those in costume but the costumes were all good and most of them original. Mr and Mrs. Benham as Sis Hopkins and her "boy friend" were a scream. The outfits were perfect in representations of the characters impersonated. Miss Charlotte Werner was a stunning Spanish Senorita and Miss Pauline Bilkey was a fetching impersonation of the "Student Prince". Master W. Jones, clad in his pajamas with a candle in his hand and a deflated inner tube slung over his shoulder carried a card on his back with the interesting inscription, "Time to retire."

Mr. Bilkey, clad as a summer girl leaned on the arm of Mr. Dela Haye dresse as a French count, Ala Menjore. Miss Helen Werner was a handsome peasant. Dr. Lemay was a Hobo with much patched clothes and his bundle slung over a stick. Margaret and Beverley Bilkey were a boy and girl of "Ye good old days" and were a very attractive pair. A flaxen haired Marguerite (Miss Fowler) was the companion to the Student Prince.

Master Jimmie Bilkey was a Highland man fully equipped even to a tiny flask which he proudly flourished. Frank Nied was a diminutive policeman and Mrs. Sarah Benham was a Gipsy. Miss Nied was a Japanese lady and Miss McBride was a belle of the Mayflower days. There were the usual number of pierrots and pierettes.

The judges were Mrs. J. B. Smith of Buffalo, Mrs. William E. Broughham of Detroit, and Dr. Belt of Cleveland.

Prizes were awarde to Miss Charlotte Werner as the best lady, Dr. W. J. Lemay as the best gentleman, Miss Beverley Bilkey as the best child's costume and to Misses C. Bilkey and B. Fowler as the best pair and to Mr. and Mrs. Benham as the most original couple.

The dancing kept up briskly till about midnight and the verdict was unanimously given that the dance was an unqualified success.

MASQUERADE AT WANTASA ROOM

Costumes Beautiful and Original—Many People Attend.

STONEY LAKE NEWS.

McCRACKEN'S LANDING, Aug. 18.—A succesful masquerade dance was held in the Wantasa Tea Room at McCracken's Landing on Friday evening last. Following what is apparently the usual custom the number in costume constituted a small percentage of the attendance but the costumes were excellent with several very original impersonations. Messrs. Eric Fawcett and Jim Currier, who furnished the music, were arrayed in clerical garb and their incongruous costumes caused much merriment during the evening.

The prize winners were:

Lady's fancy costume—Mrs. Bronson as a Chinese lady.

Lady's comic costume—Mrs. Elsa May as "Sally in our Alley."

Gentleman's comic costume—Mr. E. B. Lansier as Larry Gamp.

Mr. Jewitt's costume which was perfect in every detail, was the outstanding impersonation of the whole dance.

Miss Waunees McCarthy and Miss Eleanor Longnecker were baby dolls and were very good. Mrs. Case was a stately Spanish Senorita, the Misses O'Connel's were haymakers and Margaret and Muriel Strickland and Pat Tylor represented the famous group, Toots, Casper, and Buttercup, "Spare Ribs" was also present but for a brief period.

Miss Winifred Culver and Mr. Bradley Rowell were a charming old fashioned couple, the kind that "we only read of or see in the plays". Jack Livingstone and Esme Howard were a pair of daring brigands. Mr. Bill Ham was a striking looking ballet dancer and Miss McIlroy was a festive looking Christmas cracker. Miss Doris Score represented a Spanish gipsy in a very clever manner. Mr. Ken Macdonald was a husky Stevedore. The crowd which attended taxed the capacity of the room to its limit, but nevertheless all present enjoyed a memorable and pleasant evening.

Two magnificent cruisers visited Stoney Lake last week and were very greatly admired. They were the "Thalasa" owned by Mr. Stillman of the Imperial Oil Co. and "Isla" owned by Mr. Stillman's friend, Mr. Elliott of Wall street, New York. These craft were anchored at Crowe's Landing on Friday night and expected to move down to Juniper on Saturday.

Bridge Parties.

Mrs. Currier and Mrs. F. J. Sawers were the hostesses of a delightful bridge party at the "Wantasa Tea Room" on Thursday afternoon, the prizes were won by Mrs. F. Greenlees Mrs. Coones and Mrs. Archie Morrow. Among the others present were: Mrs. J. M. Fairbairn, Mrs Gordon Smith, Miss Nana Hall, Miss Morrow, Mrs. Bell, Miss Lambe, Miss Winnifred Hutchison.

Mrs. William Willoughby of Fairy Lake Villa entertained two tables of bridge at the Wantasa Tea Room last week.

Eleven tables of bridge were played at the weekly party held at Wantasa Tea Rooms on Tuesday, August 9th. A pleasant time was spent.

Mrs. Harold Tyler gave a delightful dinner at "Wantasa Inn" on Friday evening. Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Strickland of Peterborough and Mrs. E. R. Tate of Lakefield.

MEALS CHANGE IN 30 YEARS

Queen's Hotel Chef Produces Menu for Christmas, 1894

GAME NOT ALLOWED

"Today," says Joseph E Smith, "people want to be fed a lot differently than they did 20 years ago."

Joseph should know, for he is the third Smith—the third memoer of one Smith family, in fact—to have ruled the kitchen of the Queen's Hotel during the last 47 years, and ever since he was big enough to handle a ladle and a spoon he has been catering to epicurean tastes.

Meals Not as Heavy.

"Nowadays," Joseph yesterday explained, "the meals are not nearly so heavy. Breakfasts especially are not what they used to be. Only dinners retain a vague resemblance of their splendor of the past. One reason for this change of taste, I believe, lies in the fact that game which we once served with daily regularity, is now taboo according to the law. Wines and liquor? No! I do not think their absence from the dinner table had anything to do with the situation."

The Queen's Hotel Christmas dinner menu last year was an eight-course affair, as compared to the 19-course dinner which the hostelry served to its patrons in 1894. The menu for this latter spread Joseph preserves almost reverently, for it is one of the links which connect him with a distant day when it was an actual delight to concoct dishes for people who got a lot more "kick" from their food than apparently they do now. That 1894 menu reads like one of Henry the Eighth's rosiest dreams come true. As Joseph E. Smith detailed it, it ran:

"Fillet of Pigeons.

"Philadelphia capon, braise, Chanceliere, with Jerusalem artichokes; Jambonneaux of Manitoba hare, St. Hubert, with French peas; Chartreuse of fillet of pigeons, Chantilly, with asparagus a la Hollandaise and Chateau Margaux; fillet of Christmas beef, Yorkshire pudding and spinach au jus and puree of potatoes, cr young turkey, chestnut dressing, cranberry jelly with browned sweet potatoes and cauliflower a la creme; English pheasant, larded, bread sauce or quails, Bardees au cresson with Mumm's extra dry. Boned turkey with aspic jelly, all preceded by Darne of Vancouver salmon a l'Amirale, with sliced cucumbers and pommes au gastonomie in addition to Sauterne."

CHURCH RE-OPENED AFTER RENOVATION

Warkworth Presbyterian Church Filled at Thank-offering Services.

WARKWORTH, Aug. 18.—The re-opening of the Presbyterian Church after being newly decorated, was held on Sunday. The church was beautifully decorated with flowers and a large congregation attended both services.

In the evening Rev. D. A. Thomson of Hastings and son, Rev. E. A. Thomson of Elora, assisted with the service, the former reading Psalm 132 for the first lesson and the latter reading from the nineteenth verse of the tenth chapter of Hebrews, and also offering prayer.

Mr. Lewis Fowler gave an interesting address. The text was the 23rd chapter of Second Samuel, sixteenth verse: "And three mighty men broke through the host of the Philistines and drew water out of the well of Bethlehem that was by the gate and took it and brought it to David: nevertheless he would not drink thereof but poured it out unto the Lord."

The first part of the address dealt with the story of David and his brave men, the order of three and the order of thirty. One night while taking refuge in a cave twelve miles from Bethlehem, the birthplace of David, and surrounded by the Philistines, David expressed a wish that he could have a drink of the water in the well at Bethlehem. Quietly his three brave men made their way to this well and brought the water to their leader, but after the water was given to David he refused to drink it, but offered it to God as a sacrament. From a common wish a sacrament developed.

The speaker then chose to speak on the home as an exceedingly common thing, but which meant a great deal of sacrifice to those who built it up, and advice was given to the young people not to prize the home too little. It may not mean much now, but later it may become unspeakably dear and something which one would not exchange for all the world. There are always two sides to a sacrament. So it is with the soul which may be a Temple of God or a synagogue of Satan.

Then the Church and the Cross were painted out as being common, but on dealing with the other side of the question it was shown that it has cost a great deal. God never intended that one should get these things cheaply, but as a sacrament. The memorial tablet which is so common meant a great deal of sacrifice to those brave men in whose honor it is created. All that we receive should be poured out as an offering.

After the singing of a hymn the Rev. D. A. Thomson pronounced the benediction.

The thankoffering received amounted to six hundred dollars.

Keen's Recipes for Pickletime!

You can never make too many pickles and relishes. They put the finishing touch to your meals—an edge on your appetite. No economical housewife should be without home-made pickles, chows, catsups, sauces and chutneys.

MUSTARD PICKLE

1 pint small cucumbers; 1 pint large cucumbers; 1 pint pickling onions; 1 cup string beans cut diagonally in 1 inch pieces; 1 pint cauliflower cut in small pieces; 3 red peppers chopped; 3 green peppers chopped; 1 cup small carrots or sliced carrots; 1 pint small green tomatoes cut in halves or quarters;

Soak all vegetables in brine (1 cup of salt to 1 gallon water) over night. Drain them and soak them in clear water for three hours. Mix a sufficient amount of vinegar and water in equal quantities to cover the vegetables. Allow them to stand in this vinegar for one hour and then scald them in this liquid. Make a dressing of the following ingredients:

1¼ cup white sugar; 4 tablespoons flour; 4 tablespoons Keen's Mustard; 1 teaspoon turmeric; 1 teaspoon celery salt; 3 pints vinegar:—

Mix all the dry ingredients and add the hot vinegar slowly stirring it to make a smooth paste. Cook the mixture over a pan of hot water until the sauce thickens.

Drain the vegetables thoroughly. Pour the mustard dressing over them while they are hot and simmer them for 5 minutes. Pack the pickles into hot, clean jars and seal.

TOMATO MUSTARD

1 bushel tomatoes; ½ ounce mace; 3 ounces white pepper; 3 ounces ground ginger; 3 ounces whole cloves; 2 pounds brown sugar; ½ ounce cayenne pepper or less; 1 pound Keen's Mustard; 1 pound salt; 1 dozen large onions, finely sliced; 2 quarts vinegar;

Cut tomatoes and boil one hour. Let cool and press through colander. Add all ingredients except mustard and cayenne. Boil slowly for three hours. When nearly cold add mustard and cayenne thoroughly mixed in vinegar. Tie spices in a bag. This will keep for any length of time.

SPICED TOMATOES AND CELERY

6 bunches celery; 1 pimento; 2 tablespoonfuls salt; 1 tablespoonful Keen's Mustard; 15 red tomatoes; 1 teaspoonful cloves; 1 teaspoonful spices; 2 cupfuls sugar; 1½ cupfuls vinegar:

Separate the stalks of celery and cut them into small pieces, as well as the tomatoes. Put the ingredients in a saucepan and let parboil an hour and a half. Put into sterilized jars and seal air-tight.

DUTCH PICKLE

1 quart green cucumbers, 1 small cabbage, 1 quart onions, 3 red peppers, 1 quart green tomatoes, 1 large cauliflower, ½ cup salt. Chop all fine and pour on enough hot water to cover.

Let stand half-an-hour and drain, then make a dressing of the following: 8 tablespoonfuls Keen's Mustard, 3 cups sugar, 1 teaspoonful turmeric, 1 cup flour. Mix with a little vinegar until smooth, add mixture to 2 quarts vinegar, stirring constantly, over fire, until thickened, then pour over vegetables.

CHOW CHOW

1 large cauliflower; 18 small cucumbers; 1 pint onions (small); 6 green peppers; 2 red peppers; 1 quart vinegar; 2 tablespoons Keen's Mustard; 1 tablespoon turmeric; 1 cup salt:—

Peel onions; cook 10 minutes in boiling water. Drain. Separate cauliflower into flowerets, and soak in salted water ½ hour. Put the onions in one bowl, the cauliflower, cucumbers and peppers in another. Add the salt to 3 quarts water and boil 10 minutes. Skim and pour over the vegetables in the two bowls and let stand over night. Pour off brine and put vegetables together in a preserving kettle. Mix mustard and turmeric with ½ cup water and pour over the vegetables. Add the vinegar and heat to the boiling point. Simmer one hour, then seal in sterilized jars.

minutes and 27 seconds longer than that of Goebel.

The Dole flight committee was heaping leis on Mrs. Jensen and her husband when she cried:

"Don't forget the navigator, he brought you home."

The navigator of the Aloha is Paul Schluter of San Francisco.

The crowd again broke through the ranks of guardsmen but the people were forced back at the point of bayonets.

"We were four hours late, but we are here," said Jensen. "We got lost, but after four hours' wandering we found ourselves and lit out like a blue streak for Wheeler Field."

Navigator Schluter climbed from the plane immediately after Jensen and for a few minutes was lost in the milling crowd. Military police forced a path through the crowd to the plane and located the navigator, who was being hugged and handshaken by friends of Jensen.

Many Join Search.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 18. Canadian Press. — Forty destroyers, merchant vessels and aircraft joined in the hunt to-day for the two airplanes, the Golden Eagle, and the Miss Doran, which sailed into the air from Oakland on Tuesday, with high hopes of reaching Honolulu in the competitioni for the James Dole $35,000 prize for a non-stop flight to Honolulu.

While interest in the flight swerved to the search over the Pacific, tucked safely in hangars at Wheeler Field, Hawaii, were the monoplanes Woolaroc and Aloha ,which landed at the finishing point late yesterday.

At midnight the missing planes had been out more than 34 hours, a long time past the time when their gasoline supply would have kept them on the wing.

One carried Miss Mildred Doran, the pretty young Michigan school teacher, with J. A. Pedlar, pilot, and Lieut. V. Knope, as navigator.

The other was the cigar-shaped monoplane, piloted by Jack Frost of New York, and navigated by Gordon Scott of Santa Monica.

Airplanes were zooming out from the shores of Hawaii and California, scanning the broad expanses of the Pacific, where the fliers may be battling the elements, hoping to sight a passing ship, in their planes, or in the inflated rubber lifeboats, which they took for just such an eventuality.

The fate of Miss Doran was the cause for the greatest anxiety owing to the fear that it may have been forced down soon after it left the starting point, and dumped into the sea with a ton of gasoline in the tanks

FROST PREPARED.

The Golden Eagle presented a more hopeful aspect. It was sent into the race equipped for just such an emergency. Its navigator was considered one of the most skilful, and Pilot Frost had the machine performing perfectly at the take-off. If forced into the open sea, the landing gear could be dropped after the plane reached the water ,and the three extremities of the craft, the wing ends and the rear of the fuselage, it is believed, inflated with air carried in the navigator's cabin.

The Radio Corporation of America and the Federal Telegraph Company broadcast to all ships in the Pacific a request that they keep a sharp lookout for the missing planes, and the message was repeated at frequent intervals throughout the night. The wireless appeal was directed not only to merchant vessels between here and Honolulu, but to those in the seas beyond the Hawaiian Islands, for it was considered likely that either or both of the lost planes might have strayed far from their course and flown past their goal before they were compelled to alight.

The first successful airplane flight was made at Kitty Hawk, N.C., Dec. 17, 1903. Wilbur and Orville Wright made four flights that day, the longest lasting 59 seconds.

WAR CRY EDITOR LEAVING TORONTO

Brigadier Taylor Going to Winnipeg as Chief Secretary of West

TORONTO, Ont., August 18.—Much regret is being expressed in Salvation Army circles over farewell orders received by Brigadier Bramwell Taylor, who for four years has served as editor of The War Cry, the official gazette of Canada East Territory. Brigadier Taylor has been appointed to the important office of Field Secretary for Canada West, a territory which extends from Port Arthur to Alaska. A public service of farewell will be held in the Army Temple, Albert Street, on Sunday evening.

Came Six Years Ago.

Not only has Brigadier Tayler endeared himself to a host of Salvationists through his editorial connection, but also in musical spheres as well. Coming to Canada from the Old Country some six years ago, Brigadier Taylor brought with him musical gifts which had won for him membership in the International Headquarters Staff Band and later the leadership of the Wood Green Band of London. Brigadier Taylor's editorial gifts found expression while in London in the place he held as sub-editor of The War Cry, published at the International Headquarters. His first office in Canada was the editorship of The Canada West War Cry.

Brigadier Taylor, who served extensively during the late war in the Army Ambulance, won distinction several times. He qualified for the Mons Star medal and was also decorated with the Order of the British Empire, the latter distinction being pinned on by His Majesty King George V. at Buckingham Palace.

Major Church Succeeds.

Major Sidney Church, editor of The Canada West War Cry, who has been appointed Brigadier Taylor's successor, has in former years been connected with the editorial staff of The War Cry, published in Toronto.

Cognawagas Lose Second Game of League Finals

CRESCENTS WIN 8 TO 4 VERDICT FROM THE COGS

Play Great Game for Six Innings With Wild Finish.

CHANGE HURLERS

Will Play Third Game, Made Necessary, Tomorrow Evening.

A great game of baseball for six innings, and a wild finish that caused some strain on the vocal cords of the majority of a vast crowd, nearly one thousand strong, featured the second game of the East Peterborough League finals at Exhibition Park, last evening, the Crescents getting the verdict in an 8 to 4 score. The third game made necessary, will be played tomorrow evening, and in the event of rain, the teams will be forced to play on Saturday to declare a winner.

Both teams decided to put in some new hurling material, Crescents sending "Shockey" Mein to the mound, while Cogs used Harvey Smith. Mein sewed up the Cogs for six frames and then went wobbly to give the opposition four runs. Smith failed to weather the storm because of his wildness, and ceased to operate with one gone and the bases loaded in the second. Vannest was hurried to the hurling heap, and after J. Jones had doubled through first to score two runs, proceeded to put on the brakes, holding Crescents hitless until the seventh when they broke loose and scored three runs.

Against Mein's fine pitching, the Cogs did not get anything that looked like a hit until the sixth when Rooke shot one through second. But "Shockey" evidently is not a moonlight performer. The shades of night were falling when he went into the seventh, to be greeted by a rally, due largely to his loss of control, and the Cogs ability to see them where they "aint." Everybody in the grandstand was wildly excited, and the players absorbed some of the charged ozone.

How They Scored.

Smith failed to work on LeBarr who drew a walk. He stole second, and was sacrificed by J. Jones. With Ranger at bat, a wild pitch scored LeBarr. The Crescents' captain struck out. Kenneally was passed and Barry flew out to Cripps.

For Crescents, Scully grounded to Weese, getting the bag when the throw to first was wide. Corbett rolled to the pitcher who threw badly to second. F. Jones also rolled to the box and Smith threw the ball "a mile" past first, scoring Scully. Mein sent out a fly to Prest. Corbett going in. LeBarr up again, was hit, and that finished Smith. With Vannest pitching, J. Jones shot one through first to score F. Jones and LeBarr. The next two grounded out.

From then until the end the sixth, the game was a real battle neither team being able to solve the pitchers. In the seventh, Ranger who was passed, made his way to third on short hits by Kenneally and Barry and went home on a balk by Vannest who had the bases loaded. Scully failed to connect, but Corbett drove the ball into the middle field to score Kenneally and Barry. F. Jones lined out to Rooke and Mein fanned.

Howden who had replaced Mackness in the sixth started the Cogs' final frame by accepting a pass. He stole second. Weese was deadheaded, Vannest popped to Barry, and Prest walked to fill the bags. Crary singled to right to score Howden and Weese, and Prest went in on F. Jones' peg to the plate the throw being high. Cripps fanned. Rooke singled into right to score Crary. Wilson tapped down first and made the bag. Davis ended the excitement when he fozzled an attempt to bunt the third strike:

LEADS FIELD.

Other qualifiers and their scores were: Compston 75—150; Sayner 77—151; Ray 77—152; Taylor 75—152; O'Connor 75—152; Vickers of Heswall, 73—153; Barber of Cavendish 76—154; Murdoch of Kilmarnock 78—154; C. Whitcombe 74—154; Nolan, present titleholder, 83—155; Duncan 80—156; Hezlet 79—156; E. Whitcombe 81—157; M. Jolly of Foxgrove 80—157; Melhorn 82—157; Corlett 82—157; Herd 80—158; Nabholtz 81—158; Ockenden 81—161; Havers 82—162; Vardon 80—163. The American, Redmond, was the only notable performer who failed to qualify.

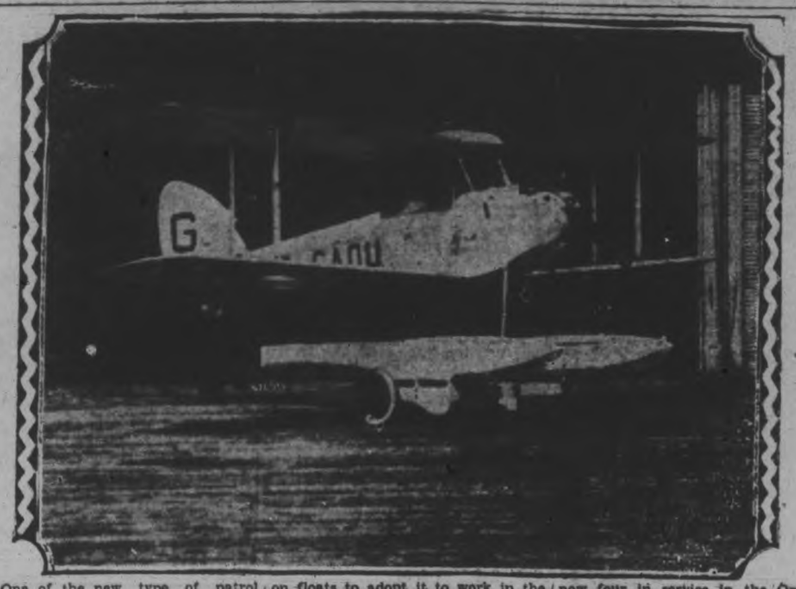
Fort Wayne may not loom very big on the baseball map nowadays, but in the early days of the pastime it cut quite a figure. The Indiana town had a team in the old National League, as it was constituted in 1871. In later days it had berths in the Northwestern League, the Indiana State, Western, Interstate and Central League and in the Western Association.



One of the new type of patrol planes now being employed by the Ontario government air service is illustrated above. It is a D.H. Moth 60X, which has just been mounted on floats to adopt it to work in the provincial northland, where the many lakes and rivers provide unrivalled landing places. This small type of English plane, of which there are now four in service in the Ontario forest patrol work, gets 22 miles to the gallon of gasoline, has a speed of 95 miles an hour.

KEEN COMPETITION AT RIFLE TOURNEY

Shoot-Offs Necessary to Determine Medallist in Two Important Events.

CONNAUGHT RIFLE RANGES, South March, Ont., Aug. 18 (Canadian Press).—Keen competition marked yesterday's events in the Dominion of Canada Rifle Association meet when in two of the important matches, shoot-offs were necessary to determine the medalist. In neither case was the first money winner returned medalist.

After a dull sky tempered by a gusty wind had made conditions unfavorable in the early afternoon, a warm sun broke through the clouds and the wind died out leaving perfect shooting conditions for the last two hours of the day's shooting.

Macdonald Brier Match

The first shoot off was in the Macdonald Brier Match, four competitors being tied for leading position with totals of 98 out of a possible 100. The competitors concerned were Lieut. H. W. Bishop, G.G.F.G., Ottawa; Lieut. W. Holms, R.C.N., Halifax; Pte. J. W. Houlden, Princess Louise's (A. and S.) Highlanders, Hamilton, and Sgt. H. W. Burton, R.C.E., Victoria. Sgt. Burton had the best 98. (Scores less than possibles are banked on their composition), and therefore is the winner of the first money prize. For the medal, which is considered the major prize of the match, all four competitors had to shoot off. The result gave the medal to Lieut. Bishop.

The Walker Match was also settled by a shoot off under somewhat similar conditions. Lieut. D. T. Burke, G.G.F.G., Ottawa, and Sgt. A. G. Lucas, Queen's Own Rifles, Toronto, tied for the best 69 score out of a possible 70.

Other 69's were scored by Lieuts. J. W. Houlden, Princess Louise's (A. and S.) Highlanders, Hamilton; Lieut. H. E. Rowlands, Royal Hamilton Light Infantry; Sgt. W. Justice Queen's Own Cameron Highlanders, Winnipeg, and C.S.M.I. W. H. Wood, the P.P.C.L.I., Esquimalt. Lieut. Burke and Sgt. Lucas shared the first money prize with their better composed 69's, while all six competitors shot off for the medal and the win of the match.,

The shoot-off took place before a large number of the other shots in camp, amid intense silence. The first shoot was the best of five shots. In this, Lieut. Rowlands, Lieut. Burke and C.S.M. Wood each shot equal possibles. The next was shot for shot. On his first shot Burke got a magpie, and was out of it, as both Wood and Rowlands got bull's eyes. Wood then fired an inner and Rowlands got another bull's eye to win the medal and the match.

Some of the best shooting of the meeting was that in the Coates Match, a team competition. An official scoring placed the G.G.F.G., (A team), Ottawa, first with 382 out of a possible 400 on two ranges, 600 and 500 yards. The 72nd Seaforth Highlanders of Vancouver are unofficially placed second with 380, and several other teams close behind.

On the 600-yard distance three teams tied for high scoring honors, including the G.G.F.G., the P.L. (A. and S.) Highlanders, Hamilton, and the 72nd Seaforth Highlanders. Official scores in this match will not be issued for some time.

Considerable interest is being shown in the Grand Aggregate for the Bisley team. A good many shots are right up among the leaders including Pte. J. H. Regan, 16th Canadian Scottish, Victoria, who is leading at present, C.S.L. W. A. Hawkins, Queen's Own Rifles, Toronto; Cpl. W. J. Livingstone, G.G.F.G., Ottawa; Lieut. H. W. Bishop, G.G.F.G., Ottawa, and a number of others.

Alters Record

A corrected list of the winners in the Victoria Rifles of Canada Challenge Trophy just issued alters the record of this aggregate. The Toronto Regiment, previously shown in first place with 429, gives way to the Hamilton Collegiate Institute Cadet Corps (A team) with 434. The Toronto Regiment is placed second and the 90th Winnipeg Rifles, previously shown second, drop to fifth place. Third place now goes to the Hamilton S.C.I.C.C. (B team) with a total of 428, and fourth position is taken by the P.L. (A. and S.) Highlanders with 423. There are only two prizes in this event.

For Thursday the big feature of interest is the first stage of the Governor General's Match, at 200 and 500 yards in the forenoon and 600 yards in the afternoon. No other major matches are scheduled until 3.30 p.m., when the London Merchants Match will go on. The Governor General's Match is considered a big feature of the meeting, with the King's Medal Match, instituted in Canada only in recent years, holding a place of almost equal importance. This latter match is scheduled for Friday afternoon. The second stage of the Governor General's, open only to the highest 150 competitors on the first stage, is to be fired on Friday morning.

Ruth Clouts 38th; Is Even With Gehrig

CHICAGO, Ills., Aug. 18.—(Canadian Press).—Babe Ruth drew up on an even footing with Lou Gehrig by lifting the ball into the grand stands at the Sox park here yesterday for Homer No. 38 in the 11th innings of the Yank's fracas with Chicago. None was on base. Connally was pitching. The homer broke the tie and the Yanks defeated the White Sox 3 to 2.

For the first time in the history of English law, the date fixed for a man's execution was cancelled recently and his case referred to the court of criminal appeal.

YANKEES WIN AT WINDY CITY

Ruth's 38th Homer Breaks Up Pitching Battle for 3-2 Victory.

TIGERS WIN 6-2

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—(Canadian Press).—Babe Ruth's 38th home run smash yesterday broke up an eleven inning pitching battle between George Connally of the White Sox and Pipgras and Moore of the Yankees to give New York its second straight triumph at Chicago by 3 to 2. Ruth's blow placed him in a deadlock with his mate, Lou Gehrig, for home run honors.

Connally held the Hugmen to five hits while Chicago made six off the combined efforts of Pipgrass and Moore. Prior to slamming his telling blow, Ruth struck out with the bases loaded to end the rally in which the Yankees had tied the count.

At Detroit, Billings, the bespectacled right hander from Brown University started his first Major League game and pitched the Tigers to a 6 to 2 victory over the Red Sox in the second game of the series.

Allows Four Hits.

The young collegian, going the full route, allowed only four hits.

Philadelphia made it three straight from the Indians at Cleveland when Grove outpitched Hudlin and the Mackmen won, 4 to 1.

Grove kept Cleveland's eight hits scattered until the eighth when three singles prevented a shut-out.

The Washington Senators and the St. Louis Browns split a double bill at St. Louis, the Senators winning the first, 4 to 1, and the Browns taking the second, 3 to 2.

In the first game Lisenbee held the home team to four scattered hits, while his teammates pounded Jones for seven safeties, which accounted for their four runs. In the ninth inning of the second game, with the score 2 to 1 against the Browns, Schultze, pinch hitting for Gerber, singled, Adams walked and O'Rourke's single scored them for the winning runs. Although Braxton relieved Hadley in the ninth inning and pitched to only two men, he was credited with losing the game.

SKEETERS SPLIT DOUBLEHEADER

SCOUTS WATCH GAME

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—(Canadian Press).—The Skeeters split a double header at Jersey City yesterday with the Toronto Leafs, losing the first, 3 to 1 and taking the nightcap 3 to 0.

Don Songer, former Giant pitcher, started the game for Toronto but gave way to Satterfield in the fifth. Satterfield received credit for the victory. Erwin Brame hurled the second game and while hit hard, was strong with men on the bases. It was his 15th victory of the season. Major League scouts and Barney Dreyfuss of the Pirates were in the stands.

At Newark the Bears found Chester Falk's southpaw slants a puzzle in all but one inning, and the Buffalo Bisons turned in a 5 to 3 victory. Cohen's hitting and fielding was a large factor in the Bison's victory.

The Baltimore Orioles took both games of a doubleheader from Rochester, 8 to 1 and 12 to 1, hitting safely 28 times. In the nightcap Archdeacon hit for the circuit with one in the fourth frame.

Reading and Syracuse broke even in the final of three consecutive doubleheaders at Reading. The Keystones winning the first, 5 to 4, and losing the seven-inning nightcap 8 to 2.

BALMY BEACH RINK IS VICTOR FOR GOLD CUP

Tom Simpson Defeats Frank Lightbourne's Victoria Rink.

SCORE IS 18 TO 16

TORONTO CANOE CLUB, Aug. 18.—Tom Simpson of Balmy Beach won the gold cup, defeating Frank Lightbourne, Victoria Rink, 18 to 16, for the dominion championship.

It will be the case of club mates fighting it out for the Ontario trophy, emblematic of the secondary championship of the Dominion Lawn Bowling Association. Two rinks from the Ambitious City are in the finals both from the Hamilton Victoria Club and skipped by Eddie Bickle and H. C. McKellar. Bickle's rink eliminated a four skipped by Frank Brown of the London Thistle Club in a close and exciting match by the count of 15 to 14. McKellar and Company downed the last Toronto rink from the Withrow Club led by H. Enticknapp. The trophy will be welcomed in Hamilton and it should cause a bit of a revival in the interest taken in the game at the Victoria Club.

BREAK GIANT'S WINNING STREAK

GRASP EARLY LEAD

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—(Canadian Press).—Carmen Hill's strong pitching wrecked the New York winning streak of six games here yesterday, the Pirates evening the series by taking the second contest by 4 to 1. Fitzsimmons also pitched well but Pittsburgh grasped a three-run lead in the third inning by bunching three hits with an error by Hornsby and a sacrifice fly for three runs. Hill allowed only five scattered hits to earn his fifth victory over the McGraw men. The Corsairs gained a full game on the league leaders as the Cubs lost to Brooklyn, thereby reducing Chicago's lead to five contests.

Brooklyn bunched hits off Carlson in the eighth and ninth innings to score five runs to whip the Cubs by 6 to 5 at Brooklyn. Chicago started fast, Stephens clouting a home run with two on base in the opening inning. Pinch Hitter Babe Herman hoisted for a four bagger in the eighth with two on base to tie the count at four all, but the Cubs went in front again in the ninth when Wilson's single scored Adams. With two down in the Robins' half of the inning, Bobby Barrett singled to score Carey and Felix.

The victory snapped the Robins' five-game losing streak as well as ended the four-game winning stride of the Bruins. It was the third triumph for Brooklyn over the Cubs in 17 games.

At Boston St. Louis pounded Robertson off the mound in the seventh inning and handled Genewich, his relief pitcher, hard enough to earn a 7 to 1 decision over the Braves.

Senor Adolfo Luque held the Phillies to four hits at Philadelphia yesterday and beat Frank Ulrich in a hurling duel, Cincinnati winning by a score of 2 to 1 in a fast game completed in 85 minutes. A home run into the left field bleachers by Charley Dressen broke up a 1-1 tie in the eighth inning and accounted for the winning run.

FAST TUSSLE IS EXPECTED SATURDAY

Belmonts To Put Up Strong Front in Softball Semi-Finals.

Softball fans are in for a good treat on Saturday when the Kingston softball winners will meet the Belmonts at James Stevenson Park at 3 p.m. Both teams boast better representatives than last year. Kingston are hailed as one of the best softball aggregrations in Eastern Ontario. The fact that hard ball in the Limestone City is practically a dead issue makes this seem certain. Interest in Kingston turned to softball this year and the cream of all the hardball players took up the game, with the result that they have a wonderful team to represent them in the O.S.A. series.

The Belmonts are the strongest team that has ever represented this city. Their record for the season proves that. They have been practicing earnestly for this game and were out last night for a two hour workout, which included fielding and hitting practice.

Saturday's game should be one of the best witnessed here, and should attract a large crowd of fans. Harrison will likely do the heaving for the Club with Carruthers and McLean in reserve.

Uncle Wiggily

To-day's Bedtime Story

By Howard R. Garis

(Copyright, 1927, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"Hurray! Here we are!"

"Oh, isn't it grand in the sand!"

"We can play teeter tauter all over the water!"

Forty leven little bunny boys and girls, or forty twelve if you count Baby Bunty, and I suppose she should be counted, raced about on the seashore sands while Uncle Wiggily, his wife and Nurse Jane Fuzzy Wuzzy looked at them and smiled.

"Yes, it was about time we came to the shore," said the rabbit lady, as she hopped toward the shell cottage which she and her husband had rented for the season.

"I am glad you like it," said the bunny uncle. "And now if you and

"That's just the trouble," sighed the sad crab.

Nurse Jane will look after the children, my dear, I'll hop to the eight and nine cent store in the village and get something to eat."

Mrs. Longears thought this would be all right and away hopped Uncle Wiggily down the sand. It was the first day of his arrival at the seashore where he hoped to have some jolly adventures during the hot weather.

Mr. Longears had not hopped very far on his way to the eight and nine cent store when suddenly, from a bunch of seaweed on the beach, he heard a sad and doleful voice saying:

"Oh, what is the use of living?"

"Dear me! That is no way to talk!" called the rabbit gentleman who felt most uncommon jolly that day, so that his nose twinkled like a new dishpan. "Who are you and what is the matter?" the bunny asked.

"I am a crab and I am sad," was the answer.

"Ha! Then you must be the Sad Crab!" chuckled Mr. Longears.

"Why, how did you know that?" asked the queer creature, crawling side ways out of the bunch of seaweed and walking toward the rabbit holding out his strong, pinching claws.

"Why, you just told me you were sad and I can see that you are a crab without being told," answered the bunny. "Though why you are sad on such a beautiful day, when every one else is happy, I can't see," the rabbit gentleman remarked.

"That's just the trouble," sighed the sad crab. "Every one is happy except me. It makes me sad to see so much joy in the world."

"Nonsense!" laughed Uncle Wiggily. "You should be glad to see others happy. I haven't time to talk to you any more now. But when I come back from the store I shall try to make you happy."

"Oh, are you going to leave me?" asked the crab, popping out his eyes, for he could do that trick. "O, dear! Boo hoo! That makes me sadder than ever!"

"Cheer up! I'll soon be back!" said Uncle Wiggily. So he hopped on to the store, thinking, the while, what he could do to make the sad crab glad. But it wasn't until he was almost back at the shell cottage, and saw his little bunnies playing about on the sand, that the rabbit had an idea.

"I must give that crab something to do," decided Uncle Wiggily. "When one has work to do one is too busy to be sad."

But, all of a sudden, Baby Bunty, who was sitting near a hole in the sand, began to scream and cry very hard.

"Oh, dear!" sobbed the little orphan rabbit. "Somebody is pinching my tail! Oh, how it hurts! What pain! Oh, how sad I am! I'm the saddest little bunny in all the world!"

Bunty jumped up and, as she did so, off the end of her short little tail dropped the sad crab. But he was sad no more.

"Ha! Ha!" he laughed to Uncle Wiggily. "Now I know how to be cheerful. I will pinch a little rabbit every day and make her cry. And when she cries she will be sadder than I am and that will make me glad."

"No! No!" exclaimed Uncle Wiggily, while Nurse Jane rubbed Bunty's sore tail. "You can't pinch my bunnies, sad crab. But I will make you forget your troubles by working. Come, you shall pile up near my shell cottage a hill of sand a mile high, carrying one grain at a time. That will keep you busy all summer."

"Oh, fine!" cried the no longer sad crab. So he set to work piling up a mile high mountain of sand a grain at a time, and he was never sorrowful any more. So from this we may learn, if we will, that it is wrong to throw banana skins on the sidewalk which might cause some one to slip and fall.

PLANE MAY START FOR ROME TO-DAY

CURTIS FIELD N. Y., Aug. 18.—United Press. — The New York to Rome flight of the Fokker monoplane 'Old Glory,' will start at five p.m., to-day, if the weather conditions over the Atlantic are favorable, it was announced by Anthony B. G. Fokker, the designer and builder of the plane.

STATE RESTS CASE.

Three and a Half Months Hearing About House of David Over.

ST. JOSEPH, Michigan, August 18.—United Press. — Three and a half months of court sessions filling 12,500 pages of testimony, with charges, denials, counter charges and rebuttals, ended here late yesterday when the state rested its case in hearing to dissolve the House of David as a public nuisance

Sixteen witnesses in rebuttal had consumed most of the day prior to the announcement Judge Louis H. Fead then set September 26, as the date for the filing of closing briefs and the hearing of arguments.

Favorite Is Winner In Connaught Feature

CONNAUGHT PARK, Ottawa, Aug. 18 (Canadian Press).—There was another good crowd at Connaught Jockey Club races yesterday, when a program in which long shots and favorites both had their innings, produced a great deal of exciting competition. W. J. Salmon's Black Friar fulfilled the expectations of the followers of the form chart by winning the feature event, the Nursery Purse, at six furlongs. Breaking away in good position this two-year-old colt worked soon into the lead, guided by Willie Curran, and won a length and a half ahead of Fletcher's Dushka, with T. W. Frost's Thymon third.

In the second race, Polly Dunbar fell and threw her rider, H. Fisher, who was badly shaken up. The horse was unable to rise for some time and finally limped on three legs. She may have to be destroyed.

Lyrics Of Life

(By Douglas Malloch.)

THE MAN TO GO FISHING WITH

The kind of man to go fishing with
Is not the man who has fame or goods.
A title's nothing, and wealth's a myth,
When men are up in the great green woods.
It's not the man who is deeply wise,
It isn't even the polished man,
But one who is handy fixing flies
And turning fish in a frying-pan.

The kind of man to go fishing with
Is a regular man in lots of ways.
His lips are clean, yet his tales have pith,
When spinning yarns by the evening blaze.
He does his share of the daily toil,
He's one of the bunch, like all the rest;
He's not afraid that his hands will soil,
He doesn't act like an honored guest.

On a fishing trip that's the kind of man
That men will like, and a whole life through.
What matters is not his creed or clan,
But whether he wears for a week or two.
On wealth or title you can't depend,
Or whether his name is Smythe or Smith.
The kind of a man to choose for friend
Is a man who's the kind to go fishing with.

STYLE LEADS THE LEADING 400-ITES

General Cornelius Vanderbilt, John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and Thomas Powell Fowler.

By Curtis Wood.
For NEA Service.

NEW YORK, Aug. 18—It is all very well, the fashion follower will say, to write what men's modes ought to be—but just what are the 400 wearing?

Accordingly, this writer, armed with a photographer, hied himself to the leading Long Island resorts where the Harrimans, the Brokaws, the Astors and the Vanderbilts spend the warm summer afternoons and evenings.

Aristocracy, Conservatism, Part

And what a pleasant surprise! Time was when aristocracy and conservatism were synonomous terms. No more. One will find bright, glowing colors, newest fads and fancies, novelty checks and materials, latest experiments in tailoring, up-to-the-minute cuts and models—all strutting up and down the golden sands of the Sound and Ocean shores at these exclusive resorts.

If a new striped pattern, a longer and fuller cut of vacation flannels appears on the Fifth avenue market, look for it next day at Newport. You will likely find a distinguished financier or an otherwise dignified jurist wearing it.

They All Come to Newport.

If a new model of slashed pockets, flowing cut, six buttoned cuffs and unusually long lines appears, look for it at Newport. If the patch pockets, the berets, the wide striped tie, the heavily brogued and contrasting colored soprts shoe make an appearance at any reliable haberdashery, look for them too, at Newport.

This writer, fresh from a foray of Fifth avenue shops, listened to what the managers had to say about what ought to be worn—then went to Newport and lo, there was confirmation.

Let us take a stroll down the board walk and across the sands. Here is a well known leader of the blue bloods, the stately figure of General Cornelius Vanderbilt. Get busy, photographer. Snap him. That's good. Let's see now.

He's wearing a gray tweed coat, cream flannel trousers, black silk and lisle stockings, white duck shoes with tan leather soles. A plain brown poplin tie and a regulation straw sailo offset the altogether sporty effect.

Years ago, one of the Vanderbilt clan would no more consider appearing in public with a jazz-type slashed pocket and six-button novelty cuff effect than he would wear shirtsleeves to a banquet.

Another Tradition Buster.

But, hold on. Here's Walter Gifford, president of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company. He too has broken away from the musty and traditional summer garb of the drab aristocrat. He has a natty French beret cocked at a jaunty angle over his left ear. He has a silk foulard four-in-hand with a faint contrasting stripe. He is wearing the latest blue serve double-breasted coat with the new wide patched pockets, and his flannels are cut long and collegiate to "break" just at the ankle instead of the stilted skimpy mode of yore.

And Even John D., Jr.

Even John D. Rockefeller, Jr., snapped on board boat, is not averse to stepping out in some very apparent stripings. His garb, while a bit more subdued than his brother financiers, is still not what might be considered drab. He goes in for wide, draping cuts, flowing lines and an English pattern throughout. Note the unusually wide trouser-cuffs.

And here comes another member of the social register—Thomas Powell Fowler. Look at the collegiate cut of his flannels. And those broad, bold stripes. Nothing musty or old-fashioned there, either. A dressy silk kerchief peeps brightly out of his double-breasted blue coat pocket and his tie has the side regimental striping, first made popular at Oxford and Cambridge. And so it goes on down the line—vivid colorings, newest modes, all on the 400.

TREATING YOUR FRIENDS

It is generally conceded that the evils of the saloon were caused mostly by the "treating" habit. A man who had no desire to be intemperate would over-indulge, and drink to excess, simply because he wanted to hold up his end of the treating, and found himself finally unable to hold himself up. If prohibition would prevent this practice, there would not be the widespread disregard of the Eighteenth Amendment, and a man would drink only what he wanted or thought he needed. From my point of view, it is the one thing which makes the liquor question such a problem—so difficult of solution.

Most "parties" given in American homes today are veritable drinking orgies, and the host seems to think it his duty to urge his guests to drink too much.

Most physicians are practically divided on the question of whether or not a moderate amount of alcohol is beneficial, but all are agreed that any amount over a slight stimulation is decidedly detrimental to health. Remember, when you urge your friends to drink intoxicating liquors, you may be insisting in their doing something which would be as harmful as small doses of poison. Many people are in such a delicate state of health that the slightest amount of alcohol is harmful to them.

The same thing can be aptly said of the general practice of forcing on your friends more food than they really are hungry for in an effort to treat them to larger quantities, and more "queer" combinations than they have treated you to.

Those who abhor intemperance in drinking are often the ones who are the most intemperate at the table and try to make their friends so. Food intoxication is the consequence of such indiscretion and this auto-intoxication carries with it, as an outcome, more serious effects in disease and suffering than even the toxic poisoning of liquor.

Learn temperance in eating and you will not urge your friends to be gluttons any more than you desire them to be sick. If you must treat them, treat them to kind words, kind thoughts and kind deeds, and you will find them "treating you back" with those same things about which you can be the most intemperate with benefit to all.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

QUESTION: Mrs. M. A. T. writes: "Have severe pain at back just below shoulders, especially on right side. Is more painful at night, and stops me from sleeping. Also have large brown spots on neck. Is this liver trouble? Is tea harmful to such a complaint?"

ANSWER: The location of your pain is indicative of liver trouble, but of course I cannot accurately diagnose you by mail. It is not advisable for you to use coffee or tea, or any other drink which will place a burden upon the liver.

QUESTION: S. L. F. writes: "Please tell me why orange juice makes my feet and legs swell and pain me so. I am much overweight, and took the orange juice for four or five days and lost ten pounds, but had to stop on account of this swelling and pain."

ANSWER: The orange juice fast is given to patients who have swollen hands and feet. You can rest assured that if you had continued your fast the swelling would have disappeared. The "Crisis" period frequently arises on the third to fifth day of the fast, and often various symptoms are produced by the stirring up of the toxins in the blood stream, some of them being swellings or pain in those parts of the body where there has been large deposits of impurities. Try the fast again, and keep on fasting until you pass this crisis period.

QUESTION: Bill writes: "What is 'Chopa'?"

ANSWER: The Chopa, or Bream, or "Sailor' choice" is one of several tropical fishes bearing the same title. It is a small pan-fried of the Atlantic coast.

Why Gum-Dipped Mileage Costs Less "Per Mile"

The demand from car owners for Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires has given Firestone Dealers a large increase in volume that enables them to sell these tires to you at the lowest prices in the history of the industry.

The Firestone Balloon Tread, scientifically designed three years ago, and unchanged today has the wear resisting qualities that give thousands of extra miles.

This tread must be placed on a carcass that has the qualifications to withstand terrific flexing. The Firestone carcass is made of cords dipped in rubber solution which not only saturates and insulates every fibre of every cord, but unifies sidewalls with carcass, eliminating any possibility of separation under the extreme flexing of low-pressure.

The Firestone Dealer in your locality will gladly explain the Gum-Dipping process, the scientifically designed tire tread, and other advantages that only Gum-Dipped tires can give. See him today.

Irish Hearts

By MOLLIE MALONE

"IRISH HEARTS," with May McAvoy, is a Warner Bros. picturization of this novel.

SYNOPSIS

Sheila Kildare and her father emigrate to America from Killanmaul, Ireland. They have followed Emmett Murtough, to whom Sheila is betrothed. Neither Murtough nor Kildare will hold steady jobs and Sheila goes to work as a waitress. She makes friends with the family of Rory O'Shea, a professional boxer, whose kindness interests her. Murtough joins a bootlegging gang and becomes involved with a cabaret girl. Rory wins his fight with Campeau. The purse is $2,500.

Sheila did not know that in America one more than four million young men became excellent boxers in the training camps and that the ring when man pits strength and skill and quickness of limb and eye against the same even qualities of another man that it is no longer hideous but a brave sight.

Sheila had shuddered as she mentally pictured the blood streaming over Rory's face and she recalled her curiosity and the repugnance she felt when first she noticed the shapeless ear which Rory wore modestly. A cauliflower ear is nothing to boast of, not even among fighters! She wondered before she fell asleep what Rory O'Shea would decide to do. Would he continue to try for the championship or would he start into business for himself with his winnings. Twenty-five hundred dollars! A fortune thought Sheila. In her ignorance she did not realize that Rory would not net more than $1500 when his manager had been paid and other expenses deducted.

Devlin and Murtough had met early and the leisurely drive to Clocker's landing station had proved uneventful. They arrived well ahead of their schedule and there was more than an hour to wait. The driver for the truck and his guard had been sent down ahead by train and they were ready and waiting the hour to start.

"We got a lot of work ahead," remarked Simmons casually. "The old man's got a shipload out there and we're preparing to take care of $150,000 worth of stuff. Going to try to land it all in two nights, next Friday and Saturday. Then it will mean double time to get it to the warehouses in the city. There'll be hard driving to do then."

"Going to land all of it here? I should think it would be better to slip in some up at the place on the Sound and not take a chance with all of it in one spot."

"Well, I don't know what Mannie's idea is, but he gave us orders to get ready to store it all here beginning Friday night."

"Any leaks this time? Stevens' gang rapped Mannie hard the last time to say nothing of what happened to Evans and Williams, poor devils."

"You got yours too, didn't you," Simmons asked Murtough.

"Yes, but it didn't prove serious, laid up a few days that was all."

"You're lucky. Did Dixon recognize any of the hi-jackers?"

"No, but, of course, we all know it was Stevens' gang. Mannie put Dixon out to run 'em down if he could and when he gets wise to who did the shooting, believe me, from what I heard Mannie say, there will be war in plenty."

Devlin looked at his watch. "Come on, boys, it's five of two. Let's get started." The truck driver and his companion mounted the van and started the engine. The pilot car took the lead at the road and the drive to the City began. The two automobiles easily acquired the forty mile an hour schedule and so smoothly did the engines run that the machines could hardly be heard a hundred yards off the highway. There was a quarter moon which gave light sufficient to see yards ahead against danger. An hour and a half later Murtough nudged Devlin's arm.

"Who's that?"

Three men stood in the road two hundred yards ahead. As the cars approached one stepped across to the right and waved his arm. Murtough drew his automatic out of its shoulder holster. Devlin struck him with his elbow. "Not that." Devlin slowed down.

"Halt!"

The car came to a stop and one of the figures on the left stepped to the running board. His companion covered the occupants.

"How should I know," answered Devlin. "Ask the driver maybe he knows."

"You're piloting it; what's in it."

"Go on; why should I be piloting a truck just because I'm driving ahead of it."

"Oh, we're wise. Come on, now, let's get at this."

"Well, what's it all about," demanded Devlin. "Who are you and what right have you got to stop anybody."

"We're agents," the spokesman threw back his coat and showed a badge.

"Yeh, you're fine agents," jeered Devlin. "In what alley did you pick up those badges?"

"We'll show you. Climb into the back seat there, you two. Sam, get on the driver's seat of the truck and cover both those men. Dan, you sit in the back here; I'll drive."

"Yes, you will. Come on now; what's all the play for. How do we know you're agents. Anybody can get a couple of fake badges. I don't think you're agents at all. What you want is some spending money. Well, how much?"

"Your money can't fix us, we're on the level."

"I don't believe it. Come on, you got us stopped. How much?"

"You're pretty wise at that. Suppose we ain't agents; just the same we got you and we can run you into the nearest station; then where do you get off?"

"Oh, it may cost a couple of hundred in cash, but to tell the truth we want to get into the city. We don't want to lose any time."

"That sounds reasonable. It's your turn to talk."

"I'll slip you fifty a piece. And it's a good job for you. A ten minute stick up and a hundred and fifty. How about it."

"Behave! Do you think we're young. Two hundred for each of us."

"Never! I'd rather ride into the station," bluffed Devlin. "Besides I haven't got that much." Devlin reached into his trousers pocket and pulled out some bills. He counted them in front of his captors. There were $325. "Here, I've got three twenty five. I need the twenty five. You take the rest. How about it? Then none of us lose any time."

"Not yet! Call your man off that truck and stick your guns in your pockets. Line up there on the right, the three of you."

The leaders of the three hold-up men called his companions and they grouped themselves on the right of the pilot car. Devlin handed the bills to Murtough. "Come on, Dick," he cried to the driver of the truck. The truck sped up and passed the pilot car. "Give him the dough," said Devlin and Murtough handed it over. "Good-by, you cheap grafters," cried Devlin as he stepped on the gas. In a few minutes he had overtaken the truck and was again in the lead at a pace of forty miles an hour.

"Why, didn't you run by 'em or run 'em down," asked Murtough.

"I knew they weren't real hi-jackers. No hi-jacker is going to stand in the middle of the road a target for bullets. They may be cheap grafters, actually attached to the enforcement division, or they may be small time crooks who fake up badges and take chicken feed. And, you can't always tell what those cheap guys'll do. One of 'em may be hopped up just enough to shoot without any reason and then you're in a jam, even if nobody gets hurt. You got to use judgment in this game, boy."

At four-thirty o'clock the pilot car and the truck drove into the garage which was the blind for the cache in the city. Devlin and Murtough walked east to Ninth Avenue and there took taxicabs to their lodgings. Before the cab driver reached Murtough's rooming house Emmett decided to call on Clarice at the Castle. He ordered the cab to wait while he washed and put on a more presentable suit and half an hour later he was greeted with squeals of delight by Clarice. There were still half a dozen parties on and as they left one at a time, other parties, all in evening clothes, drifted in from the entertainment night clubs downtown; but the morning proved to be a quiet one. Murtough ordered a truckman's portion of bacon and eggs and drinks and contented himself to wait until Clarice would be excused.

JOHN OLIVER

on the death of Premier Brewster, Oliver was chosen Premier in his place. In the 1920 campaign the Oliver administration was returned to power.

Legislation enacted during the Oliver regime includes votes for women, mothers' pensions, a workmen's compensation act and a measure of financial aid to municipalities. A provincially-owned railway and the establishment of provincial control of the liquor trade were two of the controversial matters with which Oliver had to deal almost throughout his Premiership.

During his years in office as chief minister, Premier Oliver initiated many departures in social legislation; land and settlement laws, and improvements to the educational system of the province.

For the past five years a considerable portion of his time and attention was directed toward the prosecution of British Columbia's claims for freight rate reductions, and better terms from the Dominion.

A square-built man of enormous strength, he was proud of his humble origin and delighted in recalling the days of his pioneer life on bush farms in Ontario and British Columbia. A forceful speaker, and ready debater, he loved a political argument and was never happier than when crossing swords with some opponent worthy of his steel across the floor of the Legislature. He possessed a ready wit and a keen sense of humor, delighting in and applauding any good-natured thrust at himself from his opponents.

Shortly after his arrival in British Columbia Oliver married Elizabeth Woodward, daughter of William and Hannah Woodward, who had emigrated from Cheshire, England, several years before to Mud Bay, B.C. Of the eight children, the five sons include a doctor, a lawyer, a mineralogist, a soldier and a farmer, who manages his father's agricultural estate. Four of the five are university graduates, three from Toronto and one from McGill. One daughter is a school teacher.

GIRLS MARRY EARLIER.

LONDON, Aug. 18.— Marriages in England are running more and more to the "spring and winter" variety, statistics show. Girls are marrying younger than before the war and men at a later age. The majority of brides to-day are between 20 and 25; the average used to be between 25 and 30.

GUILTY MAN SWOONS.

Paul Meller, Twice Deported From Canada, Passed Bad Cheques.

LONDON, Aug. 18 (United Press).—Paul Meller, formerly a teacher in an Ontario College and twice deported from Canada, swooned in court here today when bound over after pleading guilty to obtaining a sapphire and diamond brooch valued at fifty pounds sterling from a New Bond Street jeweler by two postdated cheques on a Swiss bank in which he had no account.

He was carried from the dock by a court attendant.

The Salvation Army stated that it was prepared to take Meller in hand.

BEHIND SHAM'S MASK IN RUMANIA

(By Milton Bronner, NEA Service Correspondent.)

LONDON, Aug. 18.—"The King is dead! Long live the King." They cried out this age-old formula in Bucharest the other day when they proclaimed that King Ferdinand of Rumania had been gathered to his fathers and that his five-year-old grandson, King Michael, had succeeded him. And everybody in Rumania knew it was a sham.

They announced that as the new King was a mere babe, Rumania would be ruled during his minority by a regency. And everybody in Rumania knew this was a sham, too.

They said the Queen Mother, Marie, would continue to be a power behind the throne, but this also was a sham.

The Only Real King—Bratiano

For there is only one king in Rumania. He has been king for many years now. He will probably be king until he dies or until he wearies of the game. He wears no crown. He holds no court. He gives no levees. He bears no title. But just the same Ion Bratiano is master of Rumania and everybody knows it.

Whether he is Prime Minister, as he mostly is, or whether he allows somebody else to be Premier, as he sometimes does, all the strings of power are always in the hands of "King Ion."

The army in the main is loyal to him and the army is the big power. Big business is loyal to him, because Bratiano is himself a big business man.

The strongest party in the land, the Liberal Party, is his own creation, inherited from his father, Ion the First. It is Liberal in name only.

Bratiano is well educated, smooth, suave, alert and sixty. His will is law. He is the boss of a veritable Balkan Ruritania.

All the Makings of Drama.

It is well, perhaps, that there is such a man at the helm in Rumania. Else the five-year-old King Michael would be in an extremely sorry plight. For beneath the surface calm that Bratiano succeeds in preserving constant threats of trouble simmer.

The regency is a frail one. It has no will of its own.

The widowed Queen Marie still is avid of power and ambitious.

In the army are several generals who think they would make splendid dictators.

Across the Rumanian border, warlike Magyars and intriguing Bolsheviks await the hour when they can take back from Rumania lands and people they claim as their own.

That, with Bratiano's shadow in the background, is the inheritance into which Michael has come.

IN MEMORIAM.

McILMOYLE. — In fond and loving memory of our dear daughter, Helen Marguerite, who died August 18th, 1921.
No stain was on her little heart,
Sin had not entered there,
And innocence slept sweetly
On her pale, white brow so fair.
She was too pure for this cold earth,
Too beautiful to stay;
And so God's holy angel took
Our darling one away.

GOOD BASEBALL HERE SATURDAY

Royals Meet South Oshawa Juveniles in O.B.A.A. Game at Exhibition Park.

SECOND OF SERIES.

What promises to be one of the best baseball games of the year will be played on Saturday afternoon at the Exhibition Grounds, when All Saints' Royals meet a team from Oshawa in the Juvenile series of the O.B.A.A. Both teams play clever ball and, if their first game, at Oshawa last Saturday, is to be taken as a standard, will provide plenty of hitting and running. In the Motor City the home team won in eleven innings, the final score being 13 to 12.

The Royals hope to even up the series by a win on Saturday. They have a strong team and should make a good showing and are deserving of strong support. They have much the same team as went through to the Midget finals last year, and hope to reach the top in the higher series this year.

FIRE-FIGHTING SPREE.

CHICAGO, Aug. 18.—Many a traffic cop in Chicago the other night cleared his crossing for a clanging fire-truck that went charging about the streets in a business-like manner. But there was no fire, and next morning the $15,000 truck was found in an alley, undamaged and deserted. A watchman at a new fire station was found bound and gagged. He said two youths tied him up at the point of a gun and stole the truck "to play firemen."

VOL. LX., No. 41 — PETERBOROUGH, FRIDAY, AUGUST 19, 1927 — PRICE THREE CENTS

C.N.R. IS NO LONGER A MENACE TO ECONOMIC PEACE OF CANADA PRESIDENT TELLS REGINA MEN

Met All Obligations Last Year, With Three Million Over, He Says.

MUST PROTECT REVENUES.

Progress of Dominion Depends Great Deal On Transportation Facilities.

REGINA, Sask., Aug. 19 (Special). —The Canadian National Railway System has ceased to be a menace to the economic peace of Canada, said Sir Henry Thornton, Chairman and President of the Company, in an address to the Council of the Board of Trade here yesterday evening.

"The story is simply," he continued, "in the last year we met all obligations on all securities in the hands of the public and we had three million dollars left at the disposal of the Government.

"Because of that showing, reductions in tariffs and in the income taxes have been made possible. Insofar as the future is concerned, our future is the future of Canada, our destiny is entirely wrapped up in that of the Dominion itself.

Progress Depends on Facilities

"On the other hand a measure of progress of Canada will depend upon the facilities its transportation systems can provide. Therefore we should reasonably be able to look to the people of Canada for the protection of our gross revenues. Rate reductions are popular but so are free lunch counters. We have no quarrel with the situation as it was in the past, but we do look with considerable anxiety upon further assaults upon the freight rate structure. With the same rates as obtained in the United States last year, the Canadian National Railways would have earned seventy-three million dollars, which would have been sufficient to have met all fixed charges."

Sir Henry made it clear there is to be no let-up in the effort to improve the financial position of the company. In this connection, he said, "Apart from and above any question of operating this railway for financial results we are also endeavoring to do so in the way that will best develop the communities we serve. We propose to pursue ardently and relentlessly both freight and passenger traffic and to use every reasonable device to induce people to ship and travel over our lines. We do not intend to subsist on the crumbs dropped from any rich man's table but to put our own feet under the mahogany and help ourselves."

Decision Satisfactory

With reference to the recent report upon the terminus of the Hudson Bay railway, upon which Sir Henry has been asked his opinion frequently, he said: "Lately there has been some controversy concerning the selection of the terminal of the Hudson Bay railway. Since that report was made public I have been asked my opinion several times. I can only say this:

"In choosing Mr. Frederick Palmer to consider the merits of both ports, the Government selected an admirable man for the job. I have known Mr. Palmer intimately for a number of years and I know him to be a most capable man. He is one of the ablest harbor engineers in the world. Fearless and without prejudice and he would make no judgment except what he considered to be founded upon sound fact. Knowing Mr. Palmer as I do and Mr. Dunning as I do, I should think that since Mr. Palmer has made his report and Mr. Dunning has accepted it, the people of Canada may rest contented with that decision."

Sir Henry, who is bringing to a close his Western trip of inspection, left last night for Winnipeg, where he will remain until late on Sunday From Winnipeg he will inspect the hotel properties at Minaki on the Winnipeg River, and then proceed to Port William and Port Arthur. He will return to Montreal from the head of the Lakes.

FUNERAL RITES FOR JUDGE GARY

MANY PAY TRIBUTE.

(By Edwin L. Heckler, United Press Staff Correspondent).

WHEATON, Ills., Aug. 19 (United Press).—A steady rain was falling yesterday as national leaders and hundreds of residents of this suburban city paid their final tribute to Judge Elbert H. Gary, head of the United States Steel Corporation.

The funeral service started at 9.30 a.m., Bishop Fred B. Leete, Indianapolis; the Rev. J. T. Ladd, Elgin, Ills.; the Rev. Ernest Tuttle, Evanstown, Ills., and the Rev. Elmer Pennwell conducted the rites.

Only a few hundred persons were able to crowd into the Gary Memorial Church. Hundreds remained outside.

Rumors of Safety Miss Doran Baseless

HONOLULU, Aug. 19 (Associated Press). — The publication of baseless rumors in a newspaper here, not a member of the Associated Press, that the Dole flight plane Miss Doran and its crew had been found off the north coast of Maui, in the isolated Keanae section, served to excite the residents of Honolulu last night, who filled the newspaper offices, demanding more accurate information.

Representatives of the Associated Press, using both automobile and aeroplane, rushed toward Kaenae, only to learn that what observers thought was Pedlar's gaily painted plane was a sampan, a Japanese fishing boat.

CONFESSION OF NEVILS NAMES SEVERAL MEN

Others Among Ten Accused Implicated By Signed Admission.

THIRTY WITNESSES.

Hearing Likely To Last Two Days—Trial Before Judge.

BARRIE, Ont., August 19 (Special to The Examiner). — The curtain rose on another chapter in the sensational history of Beeton banditry here to-day, when the ten men accused of complicity in cattle rustling and burglaries appeared for preliminary hearing before Police Magistrate Jeffs.

A sensation developed early in the hearing, when a confession, signed by Elwood Nevils, one of the accused, was read in Court. In it Nevils admitted stealing cattle, and implicated several of those who are accused with him.

The prosecutions arise from investigations made during the past three weeks, since Alex. Hodge killed Dan. Forsythe in defence of his life and property.

Many Charges.

The men charged are: Edward Hickland, fifteen charges of theft and receiving; Joseph McDermott, eleven charges of thefts of cattle, perjury, and receiving ;Alfred Hartley, one charge of theft of a pig; Harry Cannon, two charges of theft of cattle; Frank Kelly, two charges of theft of cattle; Elwood Nevils, four charges of theft of cattle; William Langley, three charges of theft of cattle; Samuel Nevils, four charges of theft of cattle and pigs; Manning McEwen, three charges of theft of cattle; and Reginald Andrews, four charges of theft of cattle.

Besides these charges, there may be other interlocking charges made.

Thirty witnesses have been subpoenaed, and it is expected that the hearing will last two days, owing to the number of charges and the large mass of evidence.

Counsels for the prisoners intimated to-day that they would likely be tried by judge and jury, but would insist on all the evidence being brought out by the crown before their clients are committed for trial.

Nevils' statement read in court included the following reference to Alex. Hodge's' killing of Dan Forsythe, the then unknown man who held him up, and the indirect cause of the Beeton clean up, resulting in the present charges:

"After the killing of Dan Forsythe by Alex. Hodge, Joe McDermott told me not to say anything to the detectives with reference to driving Johnston around. He asked me if the detectives had called to see me, and I said 'No.' He said 'Do not tell the detectives anything,' because he did not want to get into trouble over it On the day of the inquest, Aug. 3, 1927, Joe McDermott wanted to know what I was going to say. I told him I was going to say what was right. Signed Elwood Nevils."

$30,000 Offered For Recovery of Planes

HONOLULU, Aug. 19 (Canadian Press).—William P. Malloska, of Flint, Mich., backer of the aeroplane "Miss Doran," yesterday offered a reward for the recovery of the occupants of the plane, dead or alive.

This brought the total amount offered for the recovery of the missing Dole fliers to $30,000 as James D. Dole, who posted the prizes for the flight, had previously offered regards of $10,000 each for recovery of the planes.

PICNIC CLOSES PROGRAM AT PLAYGROUNDS

About 400 Children and Adults Gather at the Oval.

WINNERS ANNOUNCED.

Central Boys Won the Softball League—King Edward Girls Champions.

Like all good things, even summer playground programs must come to an end, and yesterday the official season of school vacation sports under supervisors appointed by the Board of Education was wound up by a grand field day, attended by nearly 400 children and a number of parents, at Nicholls Oval.

During recent days there has been a falling off in the number of children attending the playground at Queen Alexandra School, on some occasions no more than 80 were present; but the attendance at Central and King Edward has been maintained at a high average around 150; on some days more than 200 children were present at each of these schools.

Under the direction of the supervisors, those games that lent themselves readily to organization on a competitive basis were played under the league system. Leagues were formed for boys' and girls' softball, for checkers and for quoits.

Central School, winning all matches played, heads the boys' softball league. In the girls' section, King Edward School, also victorious in every encounter, tops the league table. The champions of the two leagues were pitted against each other at the field day yesterday; in a game in which the teams exchanged batteries, the boys' pitcher and catcher playing for the girls, and vice versa. In spite of these exchanges however, the mere men triumphed over the weaker sex by the score of 14—8.

Following the conclusion of the league games, some interesting post series matches were played between the league leaders, and a team of all talents comprised of the best players of the other clubs. In the boys' game, the champions, Central, vindicated their position by beating their All Star opponents in two games out of three played. The girl champions, King Edward, however, were less successful, winning only the odd game of three played again a team drawn from Central and Queen Alexandra.

To King Edward School also went both the horseshoe and the checker championships.

During the Chautauqua season, 205 children were admitted from the playgrounds to the programs in the tent.

Under the auspices of the Kiwanis Club four swimming classes of girls ranging from six to fourteen years of age were organized and given instruction by Miss Caroline Littlefield in the Y.W.C.A. pool. Thirty-eight of these girls, none of whom formerly could swim a stroke, became proficient swimmers after six lessons. Swimming classes for the boys were also held by the supervisors of Inverlea Beach.

An interesting feature of yesterday's activities was the display on the benches of some splendid specimens of needlework, card work, fancy sewing and raffia-made frames and cushions, all done by the girls in the open at the different playgrounds.

After the games yesterday the badges were distributed to the winners. Soft drinks were provided for all, and the day came to a close at 5.30. The large number of children present was capable handled by the energetic general supervisor. Mr. Abraham, whose experience in marshaling parades and assemblies of grown-ups stands him in good stead in managing the children. The school grounds will be closed entirely after tomorrow.

Along with Mr. Abraham, Miss Ethel Rowe has been in charge at Central; Ralph Knox and Miss A. Batten have supervised at Queen Alexandra; and Ken Goheen and Miss M. McDonald at King Edward.

First New York-Pacific Air Express Line Will Begin Sept. 1, Provide 31-Hour Service

NEW YORK, Aug. 19.—The American Railway Express Company is concluding a contract with the Boeing Airplane Corporation for service between Chicago and San Francisco which will provide thirty-one hour service between New York and the Pacific, it was learned yesterday. It is expected that this, the first transcontinental express package service, will be started September 1.

It is understood that the rate between New York and San Francisco will be $3.50 a pound, the maximum weight of a package to be 200 pounds. The airplane flying between Chicago and San Francisco will carry two passengers each at a fare of about $300. The air express route between here and San Francisco will be about 2,600 miles, against the railway route of 3,250 miles.

Preliminary steps in the development of air service were begun by the American Railway Express last November through the signing of contracts for flights between New York and Chicago and Chicago and Dallas, Texas. These cities, with Boston and Los Angeles, are all to be included in the new service. The Chicago-New York schedule provides for the acceptance of packages in the evening for delivery the following morning. Between 75 and 100 airplanes will be used in the transcontinental service.

TWO PLANES AID HUNT FOR BOYS

Scatter Handbills Through the Woods Advising Lost What To Do.

FIVE LADS MISSING.

MONTREAL, Aug. 19 (Canadian Press).—With two aeroplanes and a party of a hundred men searching the woods in the vicinity of Lake Archambault, no trace of the five boys who have been reported lost since Sunday had come to light to-day. Two aeroplanes set out early this morning. They scattered three thousand handbills, bearing the following message:

"Boys, when you read this, go to the nearest open place you can find and make a fire or wave a shirt so that the aeroplanes can see you and send some one to bring you out. Stay right where you are until help comes."

The boys, who range from eight to fourteen years, were camping at Camp Agaming on Lake Archambault in the Laurentian Mountains.

They set out for a short trip on Sunday, intending to remain in the woods overnight and return to the camp on Monday evening. They failed to return and searchers found traces of them 15 miles from the lake but were unable to follow the trail. A piece of paper found near a recently extinguished camp fire, bore the words: "We boys from Camp Agaming are lost."

WOLVES SEEN NEAR BUCKHORN

Two Large and Powerful Animals Noticed in Smith Township Yesterday.

TIMBER WOLVES.

Two timber wolves were sighted last night shortly after five o'clock, by Fred Jopling and Sandfield McManus both of Bridgenorth at a point about five miles from Buckhorn and half a mile from the bridge crossing the head of Little Mud Lake.

Messrs Jopling and McManus were returning from Buckhorn and had passed the spot where the road branches off in the directions of Lakefield and Selwyn, when they observed the animals on a little knoll on the highway.

Mr. Jopling's first impression that the animals were foxes was corrected when he obtained a second view of them as they loped across a portion of open country leading towards a swamp.

Although he had never before seen a wolf at liberty Mr. Jopling had no difficulty in identifying the animals, while Mr. McManus who had often seen timber wolves in his shantying days easily recognized them as the marauders of the woods.

When last seen, the animals which Mr. Jopling describes as powerful black grey brutes, were travelling at a fast pace compared with their speed when the men first saw them. When the two men reached the top of the knoll the animals were loping leisurely, one after the other, occasionally throwing a backward glance at their intensely interested watchers. The animals were finally seen travelling rapidly towards the cover of a clump of cedars. Hoping to intercept them, the two men drove speedily ahead, but coming in sight of the tents of a colony of campers, they came to the conclusion that the animals had scented the human habitation and had reversed their direction.

It is many years since wolves have been reported so close to Peterboro. Recently a number of sheep have been destroyed by wolves at Burleigh, near the camp of the Burleigh Falls Fishing Club.

It is believed that the wolves have made their summer home among the woods in the neighborhood of Buckhorn.

SEARCHERS FIND CLUE IN CAVERN

SIX MILES FROM ENTRY.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Aug 19.—Six miles back in the depths of the historic Nickajack Cave rescue workers yesterday found this cryptic message:

"L.S.A. 196," with a line pointing further into the cavern. Lawrence S. Ashley, aged forty, cave guide and explorer, who entered the cavern early Monday and has not been heard of since, is thought to have left this as a sign to be used for his own guidance in retracing his steps.

Immediately five crews of volunteer rescuers recruited from the farmers of Shellmound, a tiny village, 22 miles south of Chattanooga, concentrated their efforts in this cavern and made preparations to penetrate further in the direction indicated by the sign.

The workers are greatly handicapped by ignorance of the topography of the cave and lack of proper lights. In addition they must contend with the icy waters of a deep underground river which courses through two miles of the cave to empty into the Tennessee River a half mile from the cave mouth.

At points along the winding way rock slides of from fifty to three hundred feet in extent present obstacles difficult to overcome. It was after climbing over one such three hundred-foot slide of loose rock that a rescue party discovered a small entry into which Ashley had gone and which opened into a large "room."

Previously they had found Ashley's tracks leading into the underground stream where they stopped. Searchers waded and dived into the stream in search of the explorer's body. At other points his gasoline lantern and two small carbide lamps were found.

Nickajack Cave is one of the largest in America. It is under Sand Mountain and is believed to extend through the mountain thirty miles to near Trenton, Ga. Recently Ashley announced his intention of exploring the cave to determine if it did extend this far. He discovered a cave much larger than the cavern of the stream known in earlier days to Indians and freebooters and later to tourists. It was to chart his discovery that he left Monday to be gone two days.

The searchers make their way by unwinding great balls of cord fastened at the entrance of the particular cavern they are exploring. When the cord gives out they drop paper.

Ashley, a native of Paxton, Ill., is a college man and a geologist of note, but badly crossed eyes cause him to be sensitive of his appearance, hence his life is spent largely in the cave.

COURT UPHOLDS FINDINGS OF TRIAL JUDGES

Overrules Exceptions Taken By Sacco-Vanzetti Counsel.

REFUSES WRIT OF ERROR.

Counsel Announce Intention of Carrying Case To U. S. Supreme Court.

BOSTON, August 19. — Canadian Press. — The full bench of the Massachusetts Supreme Court today overruled the exceptions by the Sacco-Vanzetti defense counsel to decisions by Justice George A. Sanderson of that court and by Judge Webster Thayer of the Superior Court and refused to grant a writ of error.

The decision was announced just after nine a.m., by the Supreme Court Recorder, with whom the justices filed it yesterday.

The exceptions were to the refusal of Justice Sanderson to grant a writ of error and the refusal by Judge Thayer of new trial, revocation of the sentence, and a stay of execution. Arguments of these exceptions were made last Tuesday before four justices of the Supreme Court, sitting as a full bench.

These legal steps by the counsel for Nicola Sacco and Bartolemeo Vanzetti, whose respite from execution for murder expires at midnight on August 22, were based chiefly on allegations of prejudice on the part of Judge Thayer, who presided at the trial, and whose previous refusal to grant a new trial was upheld by the Massachusetts Supreme Court last April.

Will Apply for Writ

Cousel for Sacco and Vanzetti announced today that they will apply to the United States Supreme Court for a writ of certiorari in behalf of the condemned men. It will be based on points involving the "due process" clause of the United States Constitution, they said.

Word of the decision was carried to the two condemned men in their cells in the state prison at Charlestown by Michael Mussmann, of the defence counsel, who afterwards stated that Vanzetti had become insane. Shortly after Mussmann's visit, Sacco, Vanzetti and Celestino Madeiros, under sentence to die at the same time for another murder, were removed to the death house. They showed no outward sign of physical or mental trouble as they walked with the guards through the corridor.

Upon leaving Vanzetti, Mussmanno called newspapermen into Warden Hendrey's office, and, with the Warden present, said Vanzetti took the news very badly. He kept shouting, 'I knew it, I knew it. Get a million men, get a million men. Who is making all that noise?"

The attorney added: "Sacco took the news quietly. He was eating when I got there. When he saw me he stopped. I told him that I was sorry to have to tell him bad news about the court decision. "Well, we expected it. I want to write a letter to my boy,' Sacco said."

Sympathizer Fined.

TORONTO, Aug. 19 (Canadian Press).—A fine of fifty dollars was imposed by Magistrate Cohen in the police court to-day on Paul Rawlinoff, one of a number of Sacco-Vanzetti sympathizers who were pasting a printed appeal on street posts and buildings last night.

Guard Resumed.

NEW YORK, Aug. 19 (Canadian Press).—Police Commissioner Warren to-day ordered the resumption of the police guard at public buildings and subways, beginning to-night. New York was placed under the greatest police guard in its history, following the subway bombings on August 5. The guard was discontinued after Sacco and Vanzetti were given a twelve-day respite on August 10.

Bible Home Work Given By Minister

WARSAW, Aug. 19.—Mr. McClary of the Presbyterian church gives questions about the Bible to his people nearly ever Sunday evening. Last Sunday he asked them to find two consecutive books in the Bible where the last two verses in one book were repeated at the beginning of the next book.

A few weeks ago the question was "Which book in the Old Testament was written to a woman?"

Rewards Totalling $40,000 Offered For Recovery of Missing Fliers.

CONTINUOUS APPEAL.

Question Broadcast Constantly By Radio Stations—No Response Received.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 19 (Canadian Press).—The jinx which preceded the take-off in the $35,000 prize Dole flight continued in its wake to-day. Out into the far-reaching expanse of the Pacific went the appealing call of the radio, aided by searching aeroplanes, destroyers, and submarines in quest of the two lost aeroplanes, Miss Doran and Golden Eagle.

James Dole, Hawaiian millionaire, who put up the prize for the race, today opened his purse again, this time to offer $20,000 for the recovery of the missing planes and their occupants. To this amount, William Mallosha, Michigan millionaire, who entered the Miss Doran in the race, added $10,000 for the recovery of the occupants of the Miss Doran, dead or alive. George Hearst, publisher of the San Francisco Examiner, also offered $10,000 reward, $5,000 for the rescue of the occupants of each missing plane.

But the trackless wastes of the Pacific were silent to the appeal of the agencies of modern communication. All day yesterday and through the night the question was radiocast: Where are Miss Mildred Doran, attractive 22-year-old Michigan school teacher; J. A. Pedlar, pilot of her monoplane; Lieut. V. R. Knope, her navigator; Jack Frost, pilot of the Golden Eagle, and Gordon Scott, his navigator.

Every pilot in the Pacific kept constant watch for the ill-fated planes or their crews, but no trace of them was heard.

WASHINGTON, August 19 (Canadian Press). — Two sumbarines have been ordered from the Island of Hawaii to investigate reports of an "object in the water" on the route of the Dole Hawaiian flight, in which two planes are missing, Rear-Admiral McLean, commander of the submarine division, reported to-day to the Navy Department.

Admiral McLean's message said the submarines S15 and S16 had departed for San Francisco to search for the missing Golden Eagle and Miss Doran planes, and that en route they would investigate the reports of an "object" having been seen in the water.

FLINT PRAYS FOR FLIERS.

FLINT, Mich., August 19 (Canadian Press). — Stopped abruptly in the midst of a joyful celebration following radio reports telling of the discovery of Miss Mildred Doran, a native of Egansville, Ont., and Auggy Pedlar ,missing Pacific fliers, Flint turned to prayer to-day when it was learned that the reports were untrue.

"Let every resident of Flint remember Mildred Doran and Auggy Pedlar in their daily prayers, and pray for their safe deliverance," was the statement issued by the local Ministerial Alliance. The organization of ministers also announced special prayer services to be held in the churches of the city on Sunday.

UNITED STATES' NAVY CONTINUE INTENSIVE PATROL OVER PACIFIC IN SEARCH OF MISSING AVIATORS

Miss Doran Rumored Found in Bay on Island of Maui, Hawaii.

JAPANESE GIVE AID.

Reward of $20,000 Offered For Discovery of Both Planes.

HONOLULU, Aug. 19 (Canadian Press).—A spirit of depression settled upon this city yesterday as news continued lacking of the Dole flight plane, Golden Eagle, and the two men it bore away from Oakland, Calif., on Tuesday, in the great race to Hawaii over 2,400 miles of ocean.

The joyous welcome was stilled to Art Goebel and Lieut. W. V. Davis, of the Woolaroc and Martin Jensen and Paul Schluter of the Aloha, who landed from the skies Wednesday afternoon to win first and second of the Dole prizes.

The Golden Eagle was manned by Jack Frost, pilot, and Gordon Scott, navigator, both of Los Angeles.

Offer Reward.

A reward of $10,000 for the discovery of the occupants of either lost plane or $20,000 for the discovery of the occupants of both planes was announced by James D. Dole, Hawaii magnate, who posted $35,000 in prize money for the race.

The naval tug Sunnadin and the mine sweeper Pelican started back over the course the planes should have followed, one patrolling 15 miles north and the other five miles south of the great circle route used by shipping to the mainland. They will continue to hunt for the planes until it is necessary to return to Pearl Harbor to replenish provisions and fuel.

Continue Search.

All celebrations and joyous demonstrations over the successful flights of the Woolaroc and the Aloha planes were ended or postponed until the safety of the missing fliers was assured. The city's attitude was one of extreme anxiety, sympathy and hurt surprise, it having been felt generally that complete preparations, inspections and examinations virtually had eliminated the possibility of tragedy.

Goebel said that he would not fly back to the mainland. He made arrangements to ship the Woolaroc to San Francisco next week.

"I will admit that I am a little disappointed," said the winner of the first prize. I wanted to fly back after I had rested a few days, but my backers at Hollywood did not approve of the plan."

Faith in himself as pilot, in the ability of Navigator Davis, in the monoplane Woolaroc and especially in the army radio beacon, promoted Goebel to favor returning to California in the aeroplane.

Accompanied by Lieut. Davis, Goebel went to Wheeler Field to inspect his plane and to make arrangements for its shipment by steamer. The two airmen then made plans to sail for California next week.

Notwithstanding the long air voyage without sleep, Goebel and Davis arose early yesterday morning.

"It's funny that I'm not tired," remarked Goebel. Then he smilingly admitted that he and Davis had attended a private dance a few hours after the flight.

Unshaven, eyes filled with tears, his trembling hands revealing his anxiety, William F. Malloska, backer of the Miss Doran plane, still declared his belief the plane and its crew might be found momentarily. In his husky voice he said:

"I tell you it makes a man feel queer, this thing does. Wednesday just knowing you would see the plane come in with the rest—and now——" he paused.

"There is just one thing that could have happened to prevent them from being picked up some place," Malloska resumed, "that is, if the plane caught fire.

"Yes, they carried fire extinguishers. But if that happened, some one would have heard of it, so we can go on waiting hopefully."

Afloat At Sea.

Malloska asserted his belief that the crew was afloat at sea, admitting that the plane's gasoline must be exhausted. He declined to hazard a guess whether the crew would be found nearer to the islands or the mainland, saying that either might be possible.

"That boat can't sink," he declared with emphasis. "It can float forever. The plane was especially designed for such an emergency. It is a land plane but built to float."

The United States lighthouse service joined the search for the missing planes. The lighthouse tender Kukui, at present on a construction trip around the Hawaiian Islands, was off the north coast of Lanai yesterday morning, and was expected off the south-west coast of Molokai Island later in the day. The ship carried wireless.

One hundred and twenty sampans —Japanese fishing craft—belonging to members of the Japanese Fishermen's Association, were ordered out.

Large numbers of sampans are expected to operate from other islands also in supplementing naval and civilian efforts.

Bertaud Expected To Hop Off Saturday

ROOSEVELT FIELD, N.Y., August 19 (Canadian Press). — After a survey of the runway, which now is a sea of mud, Lloyd W. Bertaud yesterday announced that Saturday would be the earliest date which could be considered for a take-off on his non-stop flight to Rome with J. D. Hill in the monoplane, "Old Glory."

"Old Glory" remained in the hangar at Curtiss Field all day while mechanics tuned up the motor. A flight to test the radio equipment has been scheduled for to-day at noon.

ANNUAL SOCIAL AT ENNISMORE

Hundreds Enjoy Good Things Served By Ladies of St. Martin's Parish.

MANY AMUSEMENTS.

The annual social held at Ennismore, under the auspices of St. Martin's church, took place yesterday, and was very successful. Despite weather conditions which promised rain, there was a large crowd, numbering about twelve hundred, coming up to the good patronage of previous years. Friends from the city and from the surrounding parishes were present, and enjoyed the excellent fowl supper provided by the ladies, served in the hall and on the lawns, from tables spread with white cloths and decorated with flower-filled vases.

Paper streamers in bright colors festooned the hall and decorated the outdoor booths, and overhead lights provided illumination for the grounds. There were sales of fancy work and useful artitcles, of ice cream and chocolates and cigars, a "Bingo" game and a "milk bottle" tourney, with the useful containers providing targets for more or less expert marksmen.

Mrs. Daniel Kennedy acted as general convenor, with the following ladies and boy helpers assisting:

MANY WOMEN ARE SCIENTISTS

Are As Numerous As Men at B.A.A.S. Meeting in Leeds.

FORMERLY BARRED.

LEEDS, Eng., Aug. 19.—(Canadian Press.)—"If the meeting is to be of scientific utility ladies ought not to attend." This was written in 1832 by Canon William Buckland, when he was president of the British Association for the Advancement of Science.

When the British Association gathers at Leeds on August 31 for the 97th annual meeting there will be at least one woman to every man in an attendance which, it is estimated, will exceed 2,500. "The number of women taking part in the programmes of the Association is undoubtedly, increasing," the secretary of the "B.A." says. "It is especially noticeable in such sections as education, psycology and botany."

Despite Canon Buckland's opinion, women soon gained entry and the records of the Association show that women were present at the meetings of 1838. "That year," said the secretary, "it is recorded that they were prohibited from attending the section on zoology on account of the nature of some of the papers."

To-day there is no sphere of the "B.A." to which women are forbidden entry. At the Leeds meeting no fewer than 21 women will read papers, while the Duchess of Atholl (Parliametnary Secretary to the Board of Education) will preside over the education section.

A new departure will be the holding of special sessions of various sections interested in textile subjects. The Textile Institute of Manchester is co-operating with the "B.A." in these sessions.

FRANCE TO USE RHINE POWERS

Will Build Canal System With Seven Locks To Aid Shipping as Well.

BILL PASSES SENATE.

NEW YORK, Aug. 17. — With a view to making the Rhine navigable between Bale and Strasburg and in order to utilize the difference in the river's level between these two cities for the production of water power important construction works have been begun.

According to advices received by the Bankers Trust Company of New York from its French Information Service, the Grand Canal d'Alsac will be built, which will be fed by the waters of the Rhine, but whose gradient will be ten times less than that of the river. The canal, open all year round to the large Rhine barges will have seven locks with a hydro-electric plant attached to each, utilizing a fall of about thirteen meters.

The project recently voted by the French Senate concerns the erection of a weir and electric plant above Kembs. The state is to advance the funds for the building of the weir as well as for the Rhine dams. This money will be refunded in eight instalments as the plants begin operations, the company to whom the concession is granted, Societe des Forces Motrices du Haut-Rhin, paying annuities based on the power produced. The government will have a representative on the company's board.

France's Rhine fleet, turned over to her by Germany, is now composed of 2 passenger boats; of 375,000 metric tons of barges, tanks and cranes, and 35,000 tons of steam tugs of 34,000 total horse power. There are 27 additional steam tugs of 12,000 total horse power which were bought or built by France during the war.

France's share of the Rhine shipping during the year 1926 was 1,620,000,000 metric tons out of a total of about 10,427,680,000. As far as the harbor of Strasburg is concerned, out of a total of 3,572,593 tons, the French boats handled approximately 2,713,642 tons.

WINNIPEG WHEAT.

WINNIPEG, Man., Aug. 19. — (Canadian Press.)—The wheat market was dull yesterday following the first hour's activity and liquidation by long interests forced prices downward. Later support from Chicago houses and local traders caused a recovery which brought prices back about half way from the dip of 1½c. Closing prices were 1 7-8c. to 1 5-8c. lower. Closing prices were 1 7-8c. to 1 5-8c. lower, Oct. $1.49 7-8, Dec. $1.46 ¾, May $1.51 bid.

Temperatures in Saskatchewan and Manitoba were rather low during the night, one point, Kamsack, Sask., reporting 32 degrees, but warm weather prevailed yesterday. Export business out of Winnipeg market continues small.

Coarse grains were dull. Barley and rye remained firm, but flax eased off a little and oats were inactive.

Demand for cash wheat is mostly for straight grades, with the exception of No. 3 Northern, which is being bought because it looks cheap at 6c. under the October option. A large order for No. 2 Northern put that grade up 2c. at the time.

More than 600 persons are believed to have been poisoned by an Italian woman named Toffana, who lived in the 17th century. She was apprehended and executed.

76-Year-Old Groom Keeps Wife One Day

LONDON, Aug. 19.— (United Press.) — Seeking assistance in winning back the love of her 76-year-old mate, a tearful girl bride visited Marylebone police court.

"One night, and then he threw me out," she said in response to a question.

"Just like a cave man. He was. Before the marriage he was all smiles and consideration. He used to say to me I was boss and he obeyed me like a child and then we were married."

"Maybe he's in his dotage," suggested the judge.

"I'm not so sure," replied the bride.

COURT TO GIVE OUT DECISION THIS MORNING

Petition For Writ of Error ni the Sacco-Vanzetti Case.

ASK FOR RESPITE.

Would Take Case To Washington Should Verdict Be Adverse.

BOSTON, Mass., Aug. 19.—(Canadian Press.)—The decision of the full bench of the Massachusetts supreme court on a petition for a writ of error in the Sacco-Vanzetti case and on exceptions taken by defense counsel to rulings of Justice George A. Sanderson of the supreme court and Judge Webster Thayer of the superior court will be made public this morning.

The four justices constituting the full bench in this instance completed the writing of their decision yesterday and delivered it to the official recorder of supreme court decisions. The recorder told the newspapermen that he would not give it out until 9 o'clock this morning. He added that the decision would cover about five typewritten pages.

Arguments on the exceptions by Arthur D. Hill, chief defense counsel, and Attorney General Arthur K. Reading were made on Tuesday before Justice Henry K. Bradley, presiding; Edward P. Pierce, James D. Carroll and William C. Wait. The exceptions were to Justice Sanderson's refusal of a writ of error and to Judge Thayer's refusal of a new trial, a revocation of sentence and a stay of execution. At the close of the arguments defense counsel petitioned the full bench for a writ of error.

Go To Washington.

Should the decision be adverse to Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti, whose respite from execution for murder expires at midnight on August 22, defense counsel have indicated that they will begin action in the United States supreme court. Their plan is to file a petition for a writ of certiorari with the clerk of the supreme court at Washington.

Michael A. Mussmane, Pittsburgh's attorney associated with the defense, said yesterday that he would take this petition to Washington. At the same time it was considered probable that defense counsel would ask Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes of the United States' supreme court, who is at his home in Beverly, for a stay of execution.

A move was made yesterday in behalf of Celestio Madeiros, whose statement that a gang with which he was associated committed the murders of which Sacco and Vanzetti were convicted has won him several respites from execution for another murder in order that his testimony might be available. His counsel, Joseph Linhares, asked Governor Alvan T. Fuller to appoint an expert psychiatrist to determine whether Madeiros is of sound mind. His latest respite expires at the same time as that for Sacco and Vanzetti.

In the governor's absence, Lenhares left the request with his secretary Herman A. MacDonald, who told him that the question of Madeiros' sanity already had been referred to Attorney General Reading. President Carmona of Portugal has sent an appeal to President Coolidge for commutation of the sentence of Madeiros, a New Bedford man of Portuguese extraction, who was twice convicted of the murder of James E. Carpenter, cashier of the Wrentham National Bank. His second trial was granted on a technicality and thereafter Governor Fuller refused a petition for commutation of sentence.

"Feeling Fine."

Dr. Joseph I. McLaughlin, state prison physician, on his daily visit to the prisoners yesterday found Vanzetti in a cheerful mood and, as he said "feeling fine." Sacco said he was not feeling very well.

Dr. McLaughlin said that Sacco probably had eaten too heartily after ending his prolonged hunger strike and that this had affected his digestion. Warden William Henry said that there was no trouble with the mental condition of either Sacco or Vanzetti.

Vanzetti's sister, Miss Luigia Vanzetti is due to arrive in New York to-day on the Aquitania.

OLD MASTERS

So nigh is grandeur to our dust,
So near is God to man,

The youth replies, "I can."

The cause is believed to have been spontaneous combustion.

The loss is only partially covered by insurance.

INSTITUTE HOLDS PICNIC IN CAVAN

Attendance Good at Annual Social at Home of Mrs. Earle.

MILLBROOK, Aug. 19.— The Women's Institute held its annual picnic on Wednesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. H. A. Earle, Fourth Line Cavan. The attendance was good, the weather favorable, and a very pleasant time was enjoyed.

The wide verandahs gave opportunity for a number of the members to sew at piecing a quilt, while enjoying social intercourse, the younger folk, meanwhile, entertained themselves playing at ball and other games.

The sports' programme included the following:

Little girls' race, 5 and under—1 Aileen Russell, 2 Wilma Armstrong.

Boys' and girls' race, 10 and under—1 Elwood Fallis, 2 Allan Earle.

Girls 15 and under — 1 Marian Earle, 2 Margaret Larmer.

Girls 15 and over—1 Ruth Thorndyke, 2 Vaneta Ingram.

Button hole contest—1 Mrs. Wilbert Lunn, 2 Mrs. Robert Brown.

Supper was served at this point, providing a pleasing interlude, the daintily-decoratde tables being laid on the lawn, and a satisfying menu provided.

After the tea hour the races, which completed the list of sports were:

Ladies over 25—1 Mrs. R. Brown, 2 Mrs. O. Larmer.

Ladies under 25—1 Ida Attwool; 2 Mrs. A. Fallis, 3 Mrs. Archie Lunn.

The formal vote of thanks extended to Mrs. Earle for her gracious hospitality was moved by Mrs. T. H. Aiken, treasurer of the Institute, and seconded by Mrs. Will Armstrong, who holds the office of secretary.

ADVERTISE IN THE EXAMINER

Non-Union Miners Driven From Work

STEUBENVILLE, Ohio Aug. 19 (Canadian Press). — Non-union miners were driven from their work in two strip mines yesterday, one near here and the other near Cadiz, and in another instance 10 men mysteriously disappeared from their work.

The mines from which the workers were ejected were the Tafa Mine near Cadiz and the Winston Dear mine near here. At the Harmon Creek Mine near Cadiz ten non-union workmen were reported to have left their work Wednesday night after a party of men said to have been union sympathizers visited their boarding house. Their absence was not discovered until they failed to report for work yesterday.

CONTINUES FLIGHT.

DETROIT, Mich., Aug. 19 (Canadian Press).—Belief that Captain Frederick A. Giles, British aviator, dropped Chicago from his itinerary and continued on to Omaha, Neb., the second scheduled stop on the proposed journey to Wellington, N. Z., was expressed by John C. Rosenwarne, backer of the flight, when he learned of the failure of the aviator to arrive at Maywood Field, Chicago, last night.

Captain Giles, who hopped off from here at 3.30 p.m., had enough gasoline in the plane to carry him 1,300 miles, Rosenwarne said.

Should the flier have cut Chicago from his schedule, it is believed he would arrive in Omaha about 10 p.m., central standard time.

POOR PROSPECTS FOR APPLE CROP

Unfavorable Weather Reducer Prospects For Heavy Commercial Yield.

OTTAWA, Ont., August 19 (Canadian Press). — The prospects for a big apple crop in Eastern Canada were not quite so good on August 1 as they appeared earlier in the season, whereas the conditions in British Columbia have improved, a report issued by the Department of Agriculture states. The report says:

"The early prospects for a heavy commercial apple crop has been materially reduced in the eastern fruit provinces owing to continued unfavourable weather conditions, which have caused the rapid development of scab and insect injuries. On the other hand conditions have been more favourable in British Columbia since July 15th when the weather turned warm and having sufficient irrigation water the early estimate is expected to be maintained. Although the crop in Nova Scotia, Quebec, and Ontario has been reduced, it still shows an increase over last year, while British Columbia is about 20 per cent. Less than the heavy crop of 1926. Present prospects indicate a commercial crop of 100.5 per cent., or 2,999,000 barrels, compared with 2,984,230 barrels in 1926 and 90 per cent. of a five-year average of 3,327,600 barrels."

British Columbia is expected to have 1,049,000 barrels, Nova Scotia 1,150,000, Ontario 650,000, Quebec 120,000, New Brunswick 30,000.

Stonington Maine, August 19. —The prettiest ankles and calves in all the summer colonies of the Penobscott Bay region danced with happiness when they were tapped winners of a row of more than 200, their owners concealed by a partially lowered curtain on the stage of the Deer Isle town hall.

DELORO TROOP

MARMORA, Aug. 19.—Monday saw the return of the 1st Deloro Troop of Boy Scouts from their ten-day camp at Crow Lake, and while all were glad to be home, the camp was not broken up without regretting that a few more days could be spent there.

The camp was run on partly a troop system and partly on a patrol system; all hands helping the first and last two days, with the other six days being handled by each patrol on alternate days. Among some of the meals prepared by the patrols there were roast beef and vegetables, porridge and bacon, and Irish stew. Not one meal but would have been enjoyed by the most particular person, and as cooks the Deloro Troop certainly can hold their own with anyone. Perhaps the magic art of the people who loaned some of the dishes and pans remained with them.

Monday and Tuesday were really the initiating days, each patrol taking its turn at camp duties for the first time ,and the two patrol leaders learned practically the art of running a camp on a patrol basis. The patrol off duty practised up on tests they had to pass, and twice a day the whole troop went into the water for swimming instruction.

On Wednesday the troop marched to Marmora after lunch to pay their respects to the late Mr. R. Laycock.

Lashing and knot practice filled the day for Thursday, with some signalling and first aid testing in the afternoon. On Friday morning, the troop erected a twenty-foot single lock trestle bridge over an artificial stream dug on the beach. In the afternoon a patrol competitive treasure hunt was held, the Bull patrol winning by half a minute. Some tracking was also tried, and a very clever trail was very cleverly followed.

The following is a sample of the camp routine.

6.00—Duty Patrol, rise.
6.30—Troop rise.
7.00—Unfurl Flag.
7.30—Breakfast.
9.00—P. T. Drill and Signalling.
9.30—Lashing and Knots and Bridge Building.
p.m.
10.30—Swimming Instruction.
11.00—Patrol Meeting.
12.00—Dinner.
1.30—Tracking Practice.
2.30—Treasure Hunt.
4.00—Swimming Instruction.
4.30—Patrol Meeting.
5.30—Supper.
7.00—Flag lowered.
7.15—Games.
8.30—Council Fire.
10.00—Light Out.

The day was closed around the council fire, when the troop gathered round to talk over the day's doings, to sing and to listen to some chapters from "Boys of the Otter Patrol." Those who were invited to the council fire certainly enjoyed it, from the starting ceremony of lighting the fire to the final dousing of the dying embers. To close the end of the week, a weiner roast was held on Saturday night and only three applicants could be found for the last four weiners. The feast was then topped off with a couple of ice cream cones and the next day, being Sunday, an extra half hour was allowed to sleep in the morning.

The most important accomplishment of the camp was the learning to swim by eight of the Scouts, one of whom, John O'Neill ,on test, swam a distance of forty feet. With only the week to learn in, this not only shows great willingness to learn on the part of the boys, but also a real effort on the part of Roland Cheeseman, who was in charge of the swimming and signalling instruction of the troop. During the week the following completed their second class tests: Patrol Leader N. Smith, Second L. Paquet, Scouts John O'Neill, George O'Neill, C. Robertson and S. Smith.

MINING IN THIS DISTRICT.

The announcement of the first shipment of lead to be made soon from the new mine near Lindsay, presumably at the Burnt River, is another material indication of the extent and wealth of the Precambrian area of which this district is a part.

Sixty years ago the country north and east of here was known to be mineralized. Discoveries were made in Peterborough and Hastings Counties long before Northern Ontario was dreamed of, and before geologists had traced and mapped out the boundaries of that vast region of immeasurable wealth from central Manitoba to Labrador.

Impressive deposits of lead, binc and graphite have been uncovered in the northern part of Peterborough County, and coming nearer home, findings have been made rather recently which may eventually prove valuable.

The yields of copper and gold in the North are so heavy that ony the exceptional prospects are receiving attention, but some day mining history may be repeated in the Central Ontario rocky areas.

NEARBY HILLS JUST AS GREEN.

The scenery is more expansive at Wasaga, more rugged at Pointe au Baril and more natural at French River and Temagami; manners and modes are perhaps a shade smarter at Bigwin, and there may be more sparkle at Bala, but for all their charms these famous summer resorts in Ontario present few advantages over the attractions within easy motoring from Peterborough.

Back from Belleville, Cobourg and Port Hope through Tweed, Marmora and Peterborough is nearly all the variety of scenery and playground that Muskoka, Georgian Bay and Algoma can offer.

The contiguous corners of Hastings and Peterborough Counties are not far from Algonquin Park, and our own remote townships have most of the features of landscape which one sees on trips al the way north to Cochrane.

But nearer home we have ridges and valleys, lakes and woods, in whichever direction our fancy may lead us. Over the hills of Otonabee and Northumberland to Lake Ontario or straight east to Tweed and Kingston are roads of infinite delight.

You will journey many hundreds of miles before finding vistas as pleasing as those near home. Indeed the most picturesque scenery will likely be found near the end of your traveling—the Peterborough end.

A FAST CURE FIGHT.

The Toronto evening papers are indulging an ancient, private enmity in a controversy over the effects of what is called the fasting cure.

Because of the articles The Telegram publishes daily on diet, fasting and health, The Star all but charged its rival with responsibility in the death of the Toronto woman who prolonged a fast into a fatality, and the feud has been waging desultorily and more or less warmly since then.

The editor of The Telegram must himself be a devotee of the diet cut, otherwise he could not survive the frequent apoplectic outbursts which he flings at his stenographer on he paces up and down his office emoting and emitting his famously furious editorials. Such frenetic authorship must be reciprocally homocidal unless the author safeguards himself by some compensating temperance, such as the no-breakfast plan or the occasional three-day fast.

The editor of The Telegram, if he needed any assistance, and he never does, might quote the recent declaration of Sir Arbuthnot Lane, the eminent English doctor, endorsing the opinions and convictions of those who are today emphasizing the curative value of diet, in diminished diet and no diet, in treating many diseases.

Any practice supported by Sir Arbuthnot Lane cannot be laughed off by The Toronto Star as smugly as The Toronto Star sneers at The Toronto Telegram's counsellor on fasting.

EXTEND THE IDEA.

It would be hard to over-estimate the value to our growing boys and girls of the programme of summer pastimes arranged by the playground supervisors during the summer vacation.

No parent, even in these days of ever-increasing danger from street traffic, need have an anxious moment concerning the safety of his children while they are under expert supervision on the playgrounds.

In the variety of pastimes that find a place on the programme of the supervisors, there is abundant provision for all tastes.

To see hundreds of these children, ranging from five to seventeen years of age, engaged in vitalizing sports is sufficient to justify our optimism for the manhood and womanhood of the future.

Even the supervisors seem infected by the delight of the children, instilling in them enthusiasm and genuine interest in their exacting labors.

As well as the recreative aspect, the spirit engendered by these games must be reckoned as part of the assets of the playgrounds. The boys and girls are taught to be modest winners and graceful losers. In other words, they are being inculcated with the ideals of British sportsmanship.

To the Board of Education, great credit is due for this extension of the activities formerly sponsored by the Playgrounds Association.

But the playground idea is too good to be confined to one side only of the Otonabee. Despite the fact that there is a large school population there, East City has no school playground comparable to those in use at King Edward, Central and Queen Alexandra Schools.

If the Board could arrange to have a similar playground with duly qualified supervisors in attendance, the members would confer a boon on the children of that somewhat neglected quarter.

ADULTS MAY LEARN.

Professor E. L. Thorndike of Teachers College, Columbia University has been engaged for the past two years in a study of the psychology of adult education, and the results of his enquiries should be gratifying to those who are anxious to make up the omissions of their school days. Professor Thorndike conducted experiments in which persons 25 years old and over, averaging 42, were compared with persons 20 to 24, averaging 22, in their ability to learn acts of skill and acquire various forms of knowledge. He reported to a meeting in Cleveland of the American Association for Adult Education that the chief reason why adults seldom learn a new language or a new trade is not the lack of ability but the lack of desire or opportunity.

Professor Thorndike found that in learning to write with the wrong hand, the old and the young made equal improvement in the quality or legibility, but the old gained less in speed, 18 letters per minute from 15 hours of practice as compared with 35 letters per minute for the young. On the whole the old gained about three-fourths as much as the young. In learning Esperanto, an artificial language constructed on logical principles, the old learned about five-sixths as fast as the young. But groups learned more rapidly than children. In learning reading, spelling, arithmetic and other elementary school subjects, adults of 42 progressed about five-sixths as fast as adults of 22. Both groups probably learned faster than they would have learned the same things as children at the age of 12, for they learned more per hour of study than do children who are comparable to them in brightness.

Extensive experiments with adults learning algebra, science, foreign languages and the like in evening classes, and with adults learning typewriting and shorthand in secretarial schools, according to the professor, support the general conclusion that ability to learn rises till about 20, and then, perhaps after a stationary period of some years, slowly declines. The decline is so slow (it may roughly be thought of as one per cent. per year) that persons under 50 should seldom be deterred from trying to learn anything which they really need to learn by the fear that they are too old. And to a lesser degree this is true after 50 also.—Ottawa Journal.

THE NEW AGRICULTURIST.

Belleville had a good closeup of the progressive Southwestern Ontario farmer and his family and his motorcar yesterday. The impression was that of solid intelligence, wealth and interest in the life about them. The Kent, Essex and Lambton farmers who visited this city and stopped for lunch indicated the new farmer of today, the man on whom rests much of the burden of the future of this Province and of the Dominion for that matter.

The new farmer possesses the love of the old time farmer for the land, from which nothing can drive him, but he has also had put to his hand all the wealth of scientific knowledge issued from Departments of Agriculture, Provincial and Federal, something which the farmer of years ago did not possess. Farming to reach its due place must be marked by progress and by initiative and by expert knowledge, and this the farmers in the excursion to Ottawa indicate they are seeking.

But more than this these farmers are type of the men so much needed in the world today. They are following a "broadening out" policy, which brings them into touch at close quarters with not only agriculture in other parts than those places which they inhabit, but with the myriad interests in a new country like Canada which has its burden of problems crying for solution. Sympathy for those facing problems whether on the farm or in the city or town is bound to result, and a saner view of issues before the people is assured.

Now, these farmers no more need broadening out than any other class, but they are progressive enough to see their duty to understand the problems other than those of their own immediate circle and district. All classes need the broadening out with its inevitable understanding and development of interest and sympathy, for only in this way can the future be made clear for not only the agriculturists, but for the manufacturer and the consumer.

These men, with their families, their modern conveyances and their signs of keenness and interest might be considered ideal citizens. Indeed the evidence of the agricultural representatives of the three counties is to the effect that "broadening out" is showing in their own immediate environs with clearest evidences. A glimpse of the members in the motorcade would be proof of that healthy development.

He is a wise man who knows he can learn from others and who knows enough to put himself in the way of increased knowledge. That is what men of the Kent, Essex and Lambton type are doing. In consequence they are improving the condition of agriculture, making their home and county surroundings better and providing greater opportunities for their families.—The Belleville Ontario.

THE OUT-OF-TOWN SHOPPER.

What happens to the out-of-town shopper when he arrives in town is a question with which business men of many communities are dealing as a major problem in this day of the motor car and clogged streets. They are discovering that pre-empted parking space has the effect of turning a cold shoulder upon the desirable visitor.

In a report on this subject setting forth methods adopted by various communities to solve the problem, the Civic Development Department of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce says:

"The conclusion toward which the past experience of merchants points is that in dealing with the problem of encouraging the trade of the automobilist, the first consideration should be to reserve for patrons the space in front of shops by making local merchants and business men park elsewhere and by having all loading and unloading done at the rear of buildings, or outside of business hours. If the streets are too narrow for parking on both sides and existing construction does not permit loading and unloading at the rear, it would be good and far-sighted economic policy for the merchants to work for street widening and other town planning features so that wherever possible the main streets which are shopping centres should permit parking at an angle of 45 degrees on both sides of the street.

"When a city or town is already too built up to permit substantial broadening of streets the most convenient arrangements for customers are regulations which permit parking for not less than two hours within easy walking distance of the shopping centre, free parking space in the unused interior of business blocks, on vacant lots or in convenient downtown garages."—Canadian Grocer.

MONTREAL GRAIN AND PRODUCE.

MONTREAL, Que., August 19 (Canadian Press). — While the foreign demand for Canadian grain was quiet on the Montreal market yesterday, a certain amount of business was done in American hard wheat with the Continent and the United Kingdom. The domestic trade was slow and the values were unchanged.

Prices for all lines of millfeed were firmly maintained under a continued good demand. The trade in standard grades of rolled oats was fair and the undertone was steady.

The flour market was without any new feature of note. Prices for spring and winter wheat grades were well maintained under a quiet inquiry.

The undertone to the cheese market was again easier and prices were reduced a fraction.

A feature of thte butter trade was the further weakness, and values were reduced ¼c per pound. This was attributed to the falling off in the demand. The receipts were 1,274 packages.

The egg trade continued active and firm. The receipts were 1,712 cases.

CHICAGO GRAIN.

CHICAGO, August 19 (Canadian Press). — Wheat experienced wild and erratic fluctuations yesterday, with prices averaging lower with the heavy tone in the Winnipeg market a pronounced factor. At the finish, hicago wheat showed a net loss of 1c to 1⅜c, corn ⅛c lower to ½c higher, oats declined ¼c to ⅜c, and provisions varied from 2½c decline to 10c advance.

All grains futures weakened in the late trading. Offerings increased on all bulges and outweighed the general demand, which continues slow. Early bullish reports from Canada affecting wheat were offset later by an easier tone at Winnipeg.

There was not enough foreign buying to check the selling, and while there was a strong rally at one time on short covering, the market reacted quickly when buying ceased.

Weather conditions in the Canadian North-West again was a topic of the trade. Reports current yesterday were conflicting. There were reports from some sections that frost and low temperatures were doing considerable damage to the late crop wheat, while other advices were to the effect that in many sections the damage by frost has been greatly exaggerated.

The corn market showed stubborn resistance to pressure, and prices averaged higher on continued cool weather over the belt, which was regarded as delaying maturity of the crop.

Oats were firm early, but eased later with wheat and on profit-taking by recent buyers.

Provisions were somewhat firmer on scattered buying.

A Thought For To-day

WHY BURDEN YOUR FRIENDS?

Why burden your friends with your personal problems to ask your associates to listen to your business troubles?

But how it helps!

If you cannot seem to ste anything but muck in the world, why daub others with the dirt?

How it harms!

Why parade your doubtful and pessimistic thoughts in public Why not park them in your private office?

If you will not tell a helpful story, laugh a little and smile a lot, the best thing for you to do is to remain in seclusion until you can come out of your cage fit for companionship.

There are times when I am so full of business troubles that it is almost impossible to be decent and, when these hours hit me, I hide out, which is not a half-bad idea.

After an hour or two in my own companionship, my disagreeable nature is more than I can stand, but I stick it out, all alone, until my nature is so objectionable that I can no longer stand it, then I come out and meet my friends, but they seldom see this nature.

You, of course, are always agreeable, you never feel cross, of course not. You seldom get grouchy, so my suggestions do not apply to you, but if you do get ugly once in a while, try going into seclusion and soon you will hate yourself so much that you will be glad to meet and greet your friends in the right way.

LOCAL FIRM ASKS FOR TARIFF CHANGE

Printers and Publishers Also to Appear Before Tariff Board.

Canadian printers and publishers will have a field day before the tariff board at Ottawa on Thursday, September 22, which date has been set aside for the hearing of some half dozen separate, yet inter-related, applications arising out of the publishing business.

Of these the widest in scope is that by George F. Chipman, editor of The Grain Growers' Guide, Winnipeg, for removal of customs tariff and sales tax on materials, supplies and equipment entering into the production in Canada of magazines, including, of course, magazine paper. A somewhat similar application set for hearing at the same date is that of Reid Press Limited for the "free listing" of high priced printing and lithographing presses, cutting machines, bronzers, etc. Requesting an increase in the customs tariff on lithographed and printed articles, the reference in the name of the Canadian Lithographers' Association will be considered for a second time, while a first hearing will be given to the application of the Canadian Nashua Paper Company Limited of Peterboro for a reduction of duty on cambric imported for gumming purposes, for ultimate use in the manufacture of paper boxes and containers. Several of these applications are of far-reaching significance, and it is possible that the hearing may extend into Friday, September 23.

On Monday, September 26, at 2.30, the board will consider the application of Canadian Western Cooperage, Vancouver, for an increase in the tariff on staves and headings for wine and spirit barrels.

Wheat Swings Down While Corn Goes Up

CHICAGO, Aug. 19. — (Canadian Press.)—Wheat took an easy downward swing to-day, influenced by weakness in Liverpool and easiness in Winnipeg, following reports of improved weather conditions abroad and in the Canadian Nodthwest. There was considerable free selling at the start, wheat opening unchanged to 3-8c. lower and subsequently declining a little more.

Unseasonably cool weather over the corn belt gave a life to corn prices, which started unchanged to 5-8c. up, but later eased off a little all around. Oats followed the action of corn and provisions reflected the firmness of the hog market.

Opening prices were: Wheat, September 1.41 1-8, December 1.45 7-8. Corn, September 1.12½, December 1.16 3-8. Oats, September 47 5-8, December 51 1-2.

Stock Prices Continue Upward Move At New York

NEW YORK, Aug. 19.—(Canadian Press.)—Stock prices continued to move upward to-day under the leadership of high grade industrials. Week end realizing sales and occasional "bear" selling slowed up the advance now and then, but offerings generally were well absorbed and a flock of new records established.

Easy credit conditions, an anticipated increase in farm wealth and expectations of a normal upturn in business after the Labor Day holiday, were the chief factors stressed by those working for higher prices. Pools were again active in a number of specialties in which favorable divi. dend or merger developments are believed to be pending. United States Steel common, which sold as low as 129¼ in last week's break, was in brisk demand above 37. General Motors, selling ex-dividend, touched 227, equivalent to a gain of about three points, while the new stock ran up from 113 3-8 to 115. General Electric was in brisk demand, moving up more than four points to 128 by early afternoon.

Kirkland Lake itself lost two at 188, Tough Oakes was down 2¾ at 30¾, and Noranda lost 25 at 23.00; Hollinger slumped 40 at 17.50. International Nickel Is Feature At Toronto

TORONTO, Ont., August 19 (Canadian Press). — International Nickel was the feature stock of this morning's busy session of the Toronto Stock Exchange. In a turnover of almost 6,000 shares, Nickel led the way upward to a hesitant list, closing at noon with a point and three-eighths gain at 67¾. McColl was a strong follower, touching 46 and closing at noon at 45, up one from yesterday. The third big stock of the morning, Amulet, climbed 55 cents at 5.20.

The liquor stocks, except Carlings, were quiet. Carling advanced 1¼ to 28⅞. Walker and Gooderham eased slightly. Oils tended easier, British-American, the steadiest, closing unchanged at 26⅝. Abitibi gained almost another point at 108½. The regular list was fairly steady and quiet. Canadian Pacific rights appeared, changing hands at 4.00. In the active banks, Imperial gained two at 250.

TORONTO FIRM LOSES $59,000

IN AUTOMOBILE SALES.

TORONTO, Ont., August 19 (Canadian Press). — The Commercial Finance Corporation of Toronto is involved to the extent of $59,000 and not $100,000 in the bankruptcy of R. H. Raynor, motor car dealer of Picton and Belleville, who is charged by the Corporation and others with fraud. G. W. Grady, the Corporation's manager, stated to-day that the company had backed Raynor in the wholesale purchase of automobiles, for which they would receive from Raynor trust receipts covering eighty per cent. and cash covering the remaining twenty per cent. of the cost of the cars.

"The loss in our case is fully covered by a bond," he said, adding that the only ones losing it would be the insurance companies.

FRED DAVEY LOSES FOOT

INJURED BY TRAIN.

OSHAWA, Aug. 19.—Although suffering from loss of blood and from severe shock, five-year-old Fred Davey, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Davey, 65 Harold street, who had his right leg severed below the knee when run over by a freight car on Wednesday afternoon on Bruce street, is not in a critical condition, and unless complications arise will recover.

When he was at first admitted to the operating room at the hospital it was feared that it would be necessary to amputate above the knee, but Dr. H. W. Trick and Dr. C. O. Miller, who were in attendance, were able to save the joint. Yesterday the wee laddie was resting quietly and appears to be gaining strength.

No adult eye witnesses of the mishap have yet been found and it is doubtful if there were any. A young lad, Cyril Gladman, with whom the injured boy was playing at the time says that Freddy had his foot caught while trying to kick a stone to the top of the rail while the train was passing. It appears that the boys had been throwing stones before the arrival of the shunter which was hauling a string of cars and proceeding towards Ritson road. All but the last car had passed it is stated by Cyril, when Freddy attempted to place a stone on the track so the wheels would pass over it. The stone did not stay as he placed it and at the last second he tried to kick it into place.

The accident is being investigated by the claims department of the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. and Mrs. Davey formerly lived in Peterborough, where the injured boy was born.

DRIVER THROWN OUT OF HIS CAR

Bert Cowan Has Narrow Escape When Wheel Breaks On Hill.

AUTO UPSETS IN DITCH.

Breaking the front left wheel of his car, half-way up Sanderson's Hill, on the Chemong Road, last night, Bert Cowan lost control of his automobile, which rolled into the ditch and completely overturned.

Thrown out of the car, which was open at the top, Mr. Cowan escaped the serious injury which must inevitably have befallen him had he been in a car with a closed top.

The vehicle was badly damaged, and the services of a wrecking car were requisitioned this morning to convey it to the city.

The young man, who is a son of H. B. Cowan, of Farm and Dairy, was returning to camp at Chemong Park after having taken some relatives to the city.

The clouds of dust from the unusually heavy traffic on the Chemong Road last night added to the usual difficulties of driving over the busy thoroughfare. No less than three cars found their way into the ditch during the evening. Careful drivers last night made a practice of stopping completely after passing more than four cars in quick succession—a precaution which the opaque curtains of dust rendered far from superfluous.

DIES FOR DEATH OF HIS MOTHER

Eugene Bigaouette Pays Penalty For Murder at Quebec.

RESIGNED TO FATE.

QUEBEC, Aug. 19 (Canadian Press)—Eugene Bigaouette, murderer of his mother in the fall of 1925, paid the penalty on the scaffold today. For some days he had been resigned to his fate and this morning, from his cell to gallows, he walked with a firm step and met a speedy death. From the moment he mounted the scaffold until he was pronounced dead, seven minutes elapsed.

Until seven o'clock last night, the condemned man did not know the result of the appeal made to the Governor in Council. At that time, he was informed that he was to mount the scaffold today, as the appeal had failed. He showed no signs of emotion when told of the failure of his last appeal for clemency. This morning, when told that all was prepared and that it was time for him to leave the cell, he cried bitterly.

The scaffold had been erected within the prison walls and between two wings of the jail. From outside the prison it was not visible. Hangman Ellis was early on the scene and shortly before the execution again tested the gallows.

Within full view of the river and with a grey sky overhead, the scene was a sinister one. In the prison yard there was a large cordon of guards and prison officials. A few minutes before the entrance into the place of execution of the procession which would bring Bigaouette, a cat mounted the steps of the gallows. It was this same cat which a few minutes later had to be driven away from the hanging body of the dead man.

At two minutes to eight, the cortege, headed by Sheriff Cleophas Blouin and Governor Carbonneau, came from the prison into the yard. Following the Sheriff and Governor came the Chaplain, reciting the prayers for the dying. Then came Bigaouette, clutched at each shoulder by a warder.

Doctors Brousseau and Garneau preceded the condemned man and the procession was brought to a termination by two brown-robed Franciscan Fathers, who had assisted at the Mass. Alleyn Taschereau, K.C., who was the first counsel for the condemned man, was also a member of the group which accompanied Bigaouette to the steps of the scaffold.

Hangman Ellis and his assistant first mounted the gallows. Then came the chaplain and Bigaouette, still held by the two warders. Not one sign of emotion was visible in the countenance of the murderer when, as he was standing immediately under the noose which was to send him to his death, the chaplain spoke to him.

"Remember what I told you," Canon Beaulieu said to him. "Ask God to forgive you all your sins."

Bigaouette shrugged his shoulders and said no word, and when his confessor put the crucifix to him, he kissed it as though he hardly realized what he was doing.

Standing with his eyes fixed on the grey walls of the prison and with his back to the river, Bigaouette, by turning to the left, might have seen the window of the cell in which he had awaited death so complacently. He did not look. He seemed in a daze and with great speed, Ellis clapped the black cloth over the head of the murdered while his assistant strapped the feet.

Hangman Ellis drew the lever, the trap beneath the feet of Bigaouette opened, and the man who murdered his mother paid the extreme penalty of the law.

BRITISH LABOR IS ANTI-COMMUNIST

Will Not Discuss Removal of Ban For Three Years.

LONDON, Aug. 19.—(United Press.)—Communists in Great Britain have suffered another blow from labor by the decision of the National Executive of the Labor Party that the question of lifting the ban on communists cannot be debated at the National Conference for another three years and that communists cannot attend as delegates. British labor is alive to the peril of communism, though not so much from a national viewpoint as because of communist determination to capture labor machinery and oust the present leaders.

ALL HAIR DYES CONTAIN POISON

Henna Is Only Safe Substance, Says a New York Doctor.

COAL TAR PRODUCT BAD.

NEW YORK, Aug. 19.—A warning that virtually every hair dye in existence, with the exception of henna, has poisonous properties was sounded by Dr. Oscar L. Levin, of this city, in an article published yesterday in the Medical Journal and Record.

Most dangerous of all, a survey by Dr. Levin indicated, is a coal tar produce which goes by the forbidding name of paraphenylenediamine, which was thought quite a remarkable discovery because it turned graying hair a beautiful dark brown and was easily absorbed by the hair instead of merely coating it. Repeated use, however, in several cases resulted in an intense itching of the scalp face, and ears and the affection often spread to the whole body.

Even worse results have come from the metallic dyes, in which combinations of copper, silver, tin, bismuth, cobalt lead and iron are included, Dr. Levin pointed out.

Spasms of the blood vessels, blood changes, marked anaemia, loss of weight and even temporary loss of sight are some of the symptoms of metallic poisoning from hair dyes, he said.

"Vital organs may become affected like the kidney, liver, heart and the lining of the intestines," Dr. Levin said. "Often, after repeated doses of the dye the patient will complain of a general weakness which may be followed by paralysis and even death. In cases of lead poisoning, we get the so-called 'black line of the gums' and in the case of silver the skin may turn a permanent slate gray color."

TWO MEN HAVE BROKEN NECKS

Both Injured By Dives Into Shallow Water.

ARE RECOVERING.

TORONTO, Aug. 19. — Two men with broken necks are now in the General Hospital. They are David Anderson, 541 Eastern Avenue, who was injured while diving at Frenchman's Bay last Saturday, and Irving Hoffman, aged 19, of 263 Grace street, who suffered a fracture of the spine while diving at Bronte, about a month ago. Hopes are held out for their recovery.

Anderson dived from a motor boat into shallow water, striking his head on the bottom of the bay in doing so. He returned home. He rested Sunday, and worked all day Monday. On Tuesday, however, he felt pain, and fearing that there was something amiss, he called at the General Hospital. The X-ray examination showed that his neck had been fractured in two places, but that the spine was not injured. He was admitted to the hosptial, and, according to the hospital authorities, is progressing favorably. The usual plaser cast has not been resorted to in Anderson's case.

Hoffman's injury is more serious than that suffered by Anderson. He has been in bed a month now, but the hospital authorities say he is well on the way to recovery.

FOREST FIRES RAGE IN SOUTH FRANCE

Many Acres of Pine and Oak Have Been Destroyed.

PARIS, August 19 (United Press). —Fire over a 120-mile front has raged in portions of the French Riviera from Marseilles to Nice during the past five days, destroyed villages, and scores of villas, and it is reported to have cost five lives.

About 16,000 acres of pine and oak have been destroyed.

Continued drought was hampering the efforts of firemen and soldiers to check the flames.

Despatches from Bastia, Corsica, to-day said forest fires were raging in several places on the island, and that nine towns were threatened with destruction.

Commerce and Transportation Building

The Commerce and Transportation Building, Limited, has purchased the plot of land at the northeast corner of Bay and Front Streets, Toronto, Ontario, with 213 feet frontage on Bay Street by 156 feet frontage on Front Street, upon which to erect a modern fireproof ten-story office and store building of the most approved type of construction, with a rental area of approximately 105,282 sq. ft. As part of and attached to this building and occupying the interior of the lot there will be a six-story garage for the storage of 416 automobiles, containing an area of approximately 33,057 sq. feet of floor space. Situated in the transportation district of the city, within a short distance of the Canada Steamship Lines docks, diagonally across the street from the New Union Station, into which all the railway entering Toronto discharge passengers, and immediately across the street from the proposed new Canadian Customs House, within half a block from the proposed C.P.R. Hotel, containing over 1,000 rooms, this building will constitute one of the principal buildings in the City of Toronto. A portion of the new building will be occupied by Bowles Lunch, who have signed a thirty-year lease; a branch office of one of the largest Canadian banks, and terminal facilities and waiting-room for the principal bus lines entering Toronto. The international importance of the institutions located in and near the building, and the accessibility of this building to all sections of the city and suburbs, insure a steady and increasing demand for office space of the type which the new building will provide.

FOR six blocks the driver of the car had tried to pass the boy on the bike. Every time the road seemed clear of jaywalkers, street cars and brick wagons, the boy, by design or accident, swerved across the motor car's path.

Finally there was an opening.

The driver "stepped on it" . . . . And just then the boy decided to cross the street—in front of him. Then it happened.

Life seems to be a perpetual race between education and disaster.

Probably by the time cyclists and pedestrians have learned how to co-operate with drivers of motor cars, we shall find ourselves in the middle of the aeroplane era, with a brand new set of problems.

But meanwhile . . . . you boys who ride bicycles, won't you try to make the highways safer, won't you try to ride in a straight line, use your hand to signal when you're going to stop or turn, and carry a tail light at night? Atta Boy!

NEW BRUNSWICK STOCK COUNTRY

Dr. Creelman Expects To See It Shipping Live Stock In Near Future.

GOVERNMENT ACTIVE.

FREDERICTON, N.B., Aug. 19 (CP).—"New Brunswick ought to be a great stock-raising country, and I foresee the time in the not too distant future when New Brunswick will be shipping out pure-bred live stock to the other parts of Canada and to the United States," says Prof. G. E. Creelman, who for 20 years was President of the Ontario Agricultural College at Guelph, and is now President of the Canadian Society of Technial Agriculturists. He has just completed an exhaustive survey of agricultural conditions in New Brunswick extending over six weeks.

Dr. Creelman is regarded as one of the outstanding agricultural authorities in Canada and his services were secured for the survey of conditions in New Brunswick through E. W. Beatty, K.C., President of the Canadian Pacific Railway, who was requested by Hon. J. B. M. Baxter, premier of New Brunswick, to nominate the most outstanding independent expert obtainable to make a complete report on agricultural conditions. For the past six weeks Dr. Creelman has been travelling about New Brunswick, unostentatiously visiting every section of the Province and looking into the agricultural situation. His formal report will not be made for some time, but before leaving for Ottawa Dr. Creelman gave the first and only interview in connection with his visit.

"Generally speaking your Agricultural Department is going along in the right way," said Dr. Creelman,e who praised the work that is being done by many of its branches. "Every good centre is being reached and the only thing that holds back development in the extreme remote places is lack of funds. I know that New Brunswick has no money to waste, but it seems to me that the annual Agricultural appropriation might be increased by $100,000 at this time and so reach more people. What New Brunswick wants is not the spending of large quantities of money on any project, but publicity everywhere," declared Dr. Creelman, who added, "the province is now ripe for a general agricultural campaign."

He urged that farming be taken seriously and carried on scientifically in New Brunswick. "If this is done," Dr. Creelman said, "I do not see why New Brunswick should not come into its own as a farming country." So long as money continues to be made from potato growing, there is not much chance to get farmers who have been prospering by growing potatoes to change to other things extensively. Dr. Creelman thinks, nor is there much likelihood of having farmers living along the seacoasts give up fishing; but the farmers who have been dependent upon their woodlot, which is now becoming depleted, are the ones who are in difficulty. Dr. Creelman finds, and he suggests that it may be possible to move these families to suitable available agricultural land and have pulpwood or timber grow up again on the land which would thus be left untenanted.

Dr. Creelman was much impressed with the potato production of New Brunswick. "I don't want to be too enthusiastic," he said, "but I have never seen potatoes grown, cultivated, fertilized and kept clear of weeds as I have in this Province." Potato growing, he said, has been developed to its highest point of efficiency in New Brunswick. "True, they have some better years than others, but on an average where the price ranges from $1 to $7 per barrel, these people are doing well."

LOCAL COLOR PA SSING FROM CA NADA'S POETRY

SOME NATIVE POEMS.

OTTAWA, Aug. 19 (By Canadian Press).—Recently a discerning critic pointed out that Canada's younger poets are less strongly influenced by the "genus loci," or spirit of place, than were the men of the 1860 group whose stanzas have won permanent place in English literature. Canadian poetry is reaching an experimental stage in its development, where sophisticated thought supplies the inspiration hitherto sought in Nature, and it may be that in the immediate future lyrics rich in local color will be deplorably few.

Yet even so Canada will have been well and nobly sung, for there is scarcely a district in the country which has not been idealized by a native master of word-music.

While the mountains and prairies have had their poets, the forests, rivers and pasture lands of Eastern Canada have also been most fortunate in this regard. A very creditable anthology could be compounded of the poems which drew their inspiration from the Laurentian hills, which stretch into the northern wilderness beyond Ottawa and Montreal.

It would contain some of the best lyrics of Archibald Lampman, Duncan Campbell Scott and Arthur S. Bourinot, as well as much fine work by minor singers. "A Vista" and half a dozen other splendid pieces by that modest Ottawa poet who hides his identity under a nom de plume would be found between its covers. Its contents would be not mere descriptive verse, but stanzas which exhale the atmosphere of the austere and ancient hills.

Bliss Carman has immortalized the Grand Pre country and the tidal rivers of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. The Tantramar marshes and the river islands of New Brunswick have made rich tribute to art through the poetry of Charles G. D. Roberts and Theodore Goodridge Roberts. The fertile farmlands of Canada's oldest province have contributed largely to the charm of Henry Drummond's habitant songs.

Nor has the Great Lakes district been in any way neglected; Scott and Lampman responded to its influence, its rhythms move in the work of William Wilfrid Campbell and Ethelwyn Wetherald.

These senior poets did for Canada what the Canadian landscape painters are now so finely undertaking. Even if their successors oppose the influences of physical environment and give us vers libre full of remote abstractions there will still be a rich treasury of Canadian poetry that is distinctively national because its composers yielded themselves to the wiles of the "genus loci."

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

God's Great Promises

The International Uniform Sunday School Lessons for Aug. 21: God's Great Promises—I Chron. 17: 1-12.

BY WM. E. GILROY, D.D.
Editor of The Congregationalist.

Text: I Chron. 17:9-12.

Now it came to pass, as David sat in his house, that David said to Nathan the prophet, Lo, I dwell in an house of cedars, but the ark of the covenant of the Lord remaineth under curtains.

Then Nathan said unto David, Do all that is in thine heart; for God is with thee.

And it came to pass the same night, that the word of God came to Nathan, saying,

Go and tell David my servant, Thus saith the Lord, Thou shalt not build me an house to dwell in:

For I have not dwelt in an house since the day that I brought up Israel unto this day, but have gone from tent to tent, and from one tabernacle to another.

Wheresoever I have walked with all Israel, spake I a word to any of the judges of Israel, whom I commanded to feed my people, saying, Why have ye not built me an house of cedars?

Now therefore, thus shalt thou say unto my servant David, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, I took thee from the sheepcote, even from following the sheep, that thou shouldest be ruler over my people Israel:

And I have been with thee whithersoever thou hast walked, and have cut off all thine enemies from before thee, and have made thee a name like the name of the great men, that are in the earth.

Also I will ordain a place for my people Israel, and will plant them, and they shall dwell in their place, and shall be moved no more; neither shall the children of wickedness waste them any more, as at the beginning,

And since the time that I commanded judges to be over my people Israel: Moreover, I will subdue all thine enemies. Furthermore I tell thee, that the Lord will build thee an house.

And it shall come to pass, when thy days be expired that thou must go to be with thy fathers, that I will raise up thy seed after thee, which shall be of thy sons, and I will establish his kingdom.

He shall build me an house, and I will stablish his throne for ever.

and purposes. But unlike many people in the modern world, he did not keep his religion and the rest of his life in separate compartments. In his best moods he realized the nature of his sins, and he deplored them. The hypocrite, or the man who has religion lacks perception, keeps his sinfulness in a separate compartment, and is never greatly worried, because of some discrepancy between his practice and his profession.

There are people who do not seem to notice that they live in fine and beautiful houses, while the church that they attend is shabby and disreputable. Often those who spend the most upon themselves and upon their homes are least willing to spend upon making the church clean, beautiful and attractive.

David Wanted Temple.

David was troubled that he dwelt in a house of cedar while the Ark of the Covenant was still in a tent. It did not seem to him fitting that that which symbolized the presence of God should be less worthily housed than himself. So there came to him the idea of building a temple. It seemed a worthy idea and the man who originated it naturally ought to have been the man to carry it out. But God is represented as opposing the fulfillment by David of these plans and the postponement of the building of the temple until it shall be built by one of David's sons.

How did this revelation come? Nathan the prophet at first approved of David's plan, and then we are told that the same night the word of God came to Nathan. How did the word of God come to men of old? Was it through a dream, or was it in some such way as the word of God comes to men today—by reflection upon God's purposes? We must remember that in reading the Bible we are constantly in the atmosphere of eastern imagery and expression. To read it with a literalistic, prosaic mind is to miss alike its background and its significance. At any rate it became clear to Nathan that David should not build the temple and the reason for delaying his plans is interesting. David was a man of war, his hands were bloody with constant battle, and it is instructive to note that though these wars were represented as for the safeguarding and upbuilding of the nation, war itself is represented as a wrong and deplorable thing.

It is worth while to meditate upon this distinction so long ago expressed, for the distinction is not always by any means clearly marked in our modern life, and in the obscuring of the distinction lies the great weakness in relation to the problems and prospects of world peace.

The simple matter of fact is that church and school have been altogether too largely exploited in connection with military things. It would be a profound gain if these institutions that inherently have to do with peace and civilization could be kept free from the desecrating environments of war and and bloodshed. For we must not forget that war is bloodshed. It is the terrible business of killing, and as such it is opposed to all the finer instincts of man as well as to the decrees of God.

When Force Is Justified.

The fact that even war and killing may be sometimes necessary to prevent some deeper evil does not alter the truth and value of these considerations. In fact, it only does a great deal more to obscure the distinction which this ancient writer recognized as so important.

We would justify the use of force in restraining a sick person who was in delirium. The average man would shoot down even his own brother if that brother in a fit of madness were endangering the other members of the family and that were the only way to deal with the situation.

There are times when war and force may be necessary, but it makes a great difference whether we regard them in the light in which we would regard the use of force in these cases specified or whether from justifying them in extreme cases of necessity we come to dress them up in tinsel and glory.

Only in the last resort, when with agonizing effort everything has been done to maintain peace, is war in any sense justifiable, and even when war would be justifiable because of such an extreme situation, it should be remembered that the whole plans and purposes of God, as the plans and purposes of all good and righteous men, are toward the establishing of a warless world. It is of very little use to study a lesson such as this with its keen and element of discrimination unless we apply its truth clearly and fearlessly to our own time.

CAT HELPS OUT.

LYNN, Mass., Aug. 19 — A campaign to rid the county of rats has found an ally in the person of a tiger cat that daily captures at least two large rodents from a dump between the tracks of the Narrow Gauge Railroad and the Lynn Way boulevard. Railroad workers about the Commercial street crossing have watched the cat daily as it returned with two rats between his teeth, one on either side of its chops.

Medical Journal Comments on Paper Written by Dr. J. W. McCullough.

PONTYPOOL, Aug. 19.—The annual Field Day held in the Memorial Park on Wednesday was a huge success. It was held under the auspices of R.B.P. No. 1063, L.O.L. 82, and Memorial Park Society.

Supper was served on the grounds by the ladies and the ice cream booth was well patronized. The L.T.B. fife and drum band from Oshawa supplied the music for the day, which was much enjoyed.

The play was well given and was considered one of the best put on by amateurs in the hall for some time. After the play a large number enjoyed the dance till the small hours of the morning. Music was furnished by Byams 3-piece orchestra from Millbrook.

Some of the young people attended the weiner roast held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Willis Whiteside on Thursday evening. It was given in honor of her two sisters who are spending their vacation with her. They are Miss Myrtle LeMay of Toronto and Miss Lottie LeMay of Buffalo.

SMALL TOMATOES FALL FROM VINES

Warsaw Gardners Puzzled By Loss of Fruit—Wolf in Dummer.

WARSAW, Aug. 19.—It is reported that in many gardens tomato plants bloom and small fruit are formed, but in a very short time they drop off.

A large wolf was seen in North Dummer by Milton Drain. The animal was attacking a sheep.

On Monday some of the pigs brought to Warsaw to be shipped became unruly and got into John Cooper's garden doing considerable damage.

Farmers find their summer plowing rather hard, after the pelting rains on grain crops. Soil which has been well scuffled, however, is loose, and holds the moisture for the crops. Some fields of corn that were very slow at first are doing well now. The corn looks strong and healthy.

Much of the oats cut is excellent. Some, however, generally of the later sowings, is badly rusted.

Barley is generally good. Some report they never put their binders into better.

SAINT and SINNER

By ANNE AUSTIN

Bob Hathaway apparently made no further effort during the next few weeks to discourage the swiftly developing affair between Cherry and Glenn Andrews. To Faith it seemed that the two—her sister and her husband—had come to a sort of armed truce. Cherry was friendly toward him, in her sprightly, casual manner, but she no longer made love to him under the guise of sisterly affection. And for this Faith could not help being grateful.

As for Faith herself, she had tried valiantly to make use of the "greatest gift" which George Pruitt had given her. She tried, as he had made her promise, to walk, talk, act, think like a woman who knows that she is beautiful, lovable and beloved. Perhaps George's presence in her home aided her more than she knew to play the role. For in George's eyes always there glowed the steady flame of his love for her. Sometimes when her courage faltered and she would have sunk into the old slough of inferiority to Cherry, George seemed to fling his tenderness about her, as if it were a radiant mantle. But he asked nothing in return, except the privilege of painting her. And when at last he permitted her to look at the picture he was painting it seemed to Faith that he had painted not only her and Cherry's child, but that radiant mantle of love and tenderness with which he had so unselfishly enveloped her. He had made her look even more splendid, physically, than she was—a tall, gracious, queenly woman, with great, serene, benignant eyes, and strong, noble features; a woman in whose arms there was inevitably a child.

"You've made me a saint, George, and I'm the weakest of sinners," Faith cried, in a low, choking voice.

"I've painted you as I see you," George replied gruffly, for he could never look on her tears unmoved. "The thing is good, Faith. I hav you to thank for giving me back m belief in myself as an artist." And h raised her hand to his lips.

George had worked late, puttin finishing touches to the picture, bu neither of them realized quite ho late it was, until Cherry's high, moc ing laugh rang out.

"Whoops, my dears! What a touchin scene! I fear we are not wanted her Bob! Which shall it be, brother-in-law Swords or pistols?" Cherry giggle plucking at Bob's sleeve.

Faith shrank a step away fro George, who had straightened abrupt but in her face there was no flush guilt. Instead she was quite pale an calm as her brown eyes rested steadil on the lowering face of her husband He stood in the doorway to the sun parlor, his head thrust slightly forward and down, his hands clenched at his sides.

"The picture is finished, dear," Faith said unhurriedly. "I've just seen it for the first time. Won't you come and look at it?" She ignored Cherry, who had darted to George's side.

"I was just thanking Faith for having given me back my faith in myself as an artist. I hope you will agree with me that her time hasn't been wasted," George said, in his usual friendly manner, entirely unembarrassed.

"You talk like a book, George, darling!" Cherry giggled. "But oh, it's a perfect love of a picture! Hurry! Bob! Just look at the curls on my baby's head! The little lamb! Isn' she too adorable? You look like at saint, Faith. But then you are a saint you know, although rather a naughty saint, letting this Don Juan kiss your hand!"

Mother Proud Son Died For Sisters

FORT WILLIAM, Aug. 19.—"If this drowning of my three children is a lesson to others, it is worth the sacrifice," said Mrs. Howard yesterday morning, when thanking all the citizens for their great kindness and sympathy in the loss of the three Howard children drowned on Saturday last. "It would have been a worse blow to me if one of the children had returned home alive and the other two had been brought home dead. I am glad that Gordie (Gordon, the 17-year-old son) jumped in to try and rescue his two sisters," and the Spartan mother, with tears in her eyes, smiled proudly, as she spoke."

DRESS

By MARY MARSHALL

It is usually only those who occupy the top and bottom rungs on the financial ladder who snap their fingers at the prevailing mode. Those below do it from necessity; those above, when they do it, do it from choice. They feel that they can afford to ignore fashions as set by others; those on the bottom rungs that they cannot afford to do otherwise.

The position of the woman who has so little to spend on her own clothes that she can never choose anything merely for the sake of beauty or fashion or individual taste is one that no one envies. But the woman who can afford to let her own individual taste prevail over the ready set standards of fashion is in a position that most women might envy. These women are the women who may actually set the fashion—or at least very materially influence the dressmakers in doing so.

When Mrs. Clews appeared at some prominent social gathering in Paris this summer wearing an artificial chrysanthemum not on her shoulder but at the center of her bodice instead, the fact was considered sufficiently important to cable news of it to this country. Something really happened—women talked about it—and some of them appeared thereafter wearing artificial flowers not on the shoulder but in the center of the bodice. Probably Mrs. Clews had no intention of starting a fashion when she appeared that day with her chrysanthemum in a new place, and with most women it would have been a matter of no moment whatever.

Sometimes several women of influence in fashion hit upon the same innovation at about the same time. Without knowing it, or having talked the matter over, they co-operate to change the current of fashion in some way or other. I have seen a number of well-dressed women recently wearing their artificial flowers in this new position and they may not have had the slightest idea that they were following the fashion set by Mrs. Clews. After all there is no reason why we should always go on wearing flowers on our shoulders.

It isn't what you pay for trimming but how you use it that makes a frock effective, and I will let you know exactly how to use a yard of six-inch ribbon to make the most effective trimming for an overblouse that I have seen in a long, long time. I got the idea from an informal little evening frock recently bought in Paris. If you want the pattern and directions just send me a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 20, 1927

Astrologers read this as a confusing and a disconcerting day for that reason it is wise to desert serious affairs and to enjoy healthful recreations.

There is a sign affecting farmers, which may be disturbing to them and for this reason it may be difficult to transact business with them.

All through the year astrologers have foreseen discontent on the part of agriculturists, but those who are wise will have conserved their crops. Food prices surely will rise, it is foretold.

There may be a slump in real estate in certain places and especially in summer resorts at this time, but the seers prognosticate profit ultimately in lands everywhere in the United States.

Movement of population to Florida and California is predicted by the seers who, even at this early date, foresee many winter troubles for cold climates.

Again the high cost of living is to be widely discussed and to cause heated protests, which will have an effect on political issues, it is forecast.

There is fair promise for all who have courage in business enterprise is to be rewarded and young men are to reap abundantly, for scientific training is to count for much.

Whatever pertains to the air will continue to be of great interest to investors and inventors. It will be recalled that at the beginning of the year astrologers prophesied amazing development in aviation.

Intellectual progress will be marked and honors are to be awarded to educators.

American universities are to be overcrowded in the autumn when the problem of how best to absorb the great number of students will be widely discussed.

Certain manufacturers are to be suddenly exceedingly busy in supplying unexpected demands, it is foretold.

Persons whose birthdate it is should beware of all forms of litigation in the coming year, which should be fairly prosperous.

Children born on this day may have ups and downs. They should be careful about making friends, for they may be subject to treachery.

FASHION NOTES.

ABOUT PARASOLS

By Hedda Hoyt.

(United Press Fashion Editor)

NEW YORK, Aug. 19 (United Press).—The parasol, a long-neglected factor in feminine fashions, has again become prominent due to the warm mid-Summer days. It has been years since parasols have been carried upon city streets and it probably will be years before they are considered essential for townwear again. The sunshade of today is primarily a resort item. Due to the present vogue for semi-tailored costumes, sunshades also have taken on more tailored stylings although color schemes and diversified handle treatments are decidedly emphasized.

Straw Parasols.

One of the most attractive and popular parasols of the season is the model made of woven straw either in multi-colored pattern or with a neutral background enlivened with bright floral patterns. Most of these models are flat rather than rounded and handles are of painted wood and slightly longer than the handles of last year. These straw models are particularly attractive when straw shoes, handbag and hat are carried out in matching straw shades.

For sportswear what could possibly be more attractive than the leather parasols which one occasionally sees at seashore resorts and country clubs? They are lighter in weight than one would expect and are excellent for shedding both rain and sunrays. Some leather models resemble in coloring the Japanese oiled paper sunshades.

Cretonne parasols are also important this season due to the vogue for hand-blocked and printed effects in dress linens. Plain colored taffeta parasols are also important with such shades as green, orchid and yellow leading above others.

Long crocked handles of painted wood are used on some models, the handles being of the same shade as the parasol. In some instances the ribs are gilded. Animal head handles are also popular, dog, parrot and duck's heads being most in demand. Oftimes the animal head is fashioned so that the mouth opens at the pressing of a spring. Ears, likewise, may be manipulated so that they will sway backwards and forwards.

The cane umbrella is well liked for resort wear. Here, the umbrella folds and fits into a wooden cane which may be used as a walking stick.

HINTS ON ETIQUETTE.

1. When passing your plate for a second helping, what do you do with your knife and fork?

2. Where should you put your coffee spoon, after stirring the sugar into your beverage?

3. Should the prongs of your fork be faced up or down when you finish your meal?

The Answers.

1. Place them side by side across your plate.
2. In the saucer.
3. Down.

Dignity and grace for beach and water—of woods-green satin, piped and trimmed with apple green, with cape to match.

By HENRI BENDEL
For NEA Service

NEW YORK, August 19.—The pendulum of style in bathing suits for the particular woman seems to have swung back definitely towards modesty this season. Many are longer, with drop-pantalets and not a few have long sleeves.

Just as any excess causes reaction, so the prevalent custom of romping the beach in scant one-piece Jersey costumes hardly two feet long has caused the woman of good taste to appreciate bathing suits of a different kind.

Many Demands.

The smart woman who summers at Newport, Southampton or other resorts of distinction, demands much of her bathing suit. It must be appropriate for the water—its weave and style determine this. It must, however, have the same swank as her frocks—the same individuality, too.

I have used taffeta or satin for most of the bathing suits for my Newport shop. I find both of these materials satisfactory for the water and at the same time adaptable to seasonal fashion touches.

Dark shades, such as fuschia, ibis, Continental blue, maroon or jungle green take pipings or appliqued designs in lighter shade for trimming. Black stands on its own smart cut or may have sun-burst or other tucked or stitched designs. Accessories give dash to the black suit, and for these I have fashioned pairs of gaudy kerchiefs one of which gives a bandit touch as it swathes the hips; the other ties the hair.

Three lines are extremely important in bathing suits this season — necklines, hemlines and waistlines. Square necks, crew necks and deep V's are all popular.

The uneven hemline I find just as useful to give swaying grace to satin bathing suits as to evening frocks. Belts are popular on suits, but they usually just miss the regulation waistline by an inch upwards or downwards.

One black taffeta model is piped diagonally from shoulder to hemline with rainbow silk. A knotted scarf of matching silk ties at the neck. With it a raffia sun-shade and sandals carry out the rainbow colors.

The suit shown today carries dignity and grace—two rather difficult things to get into a bathing suit. Woods-green satin fashions it, piped and trimmed with apple green. Though sleeveless, its neck and cut are charmingly conservative.

Cape to Match.

As do many of the finer bathing suits this season, this model has its own cape of matching material to make it an effective ensemble. Beach shoes, scarf cap and bathing stockings all harmonize, for accessories are all-important on the beach as in the drawing room.

Suits for the woman who prefers pastel shades call for more elaborate design and trimming. I have fashioned some with tiered skirts, with Eton jacket effects and jabots. Changeable silk taffeta is the best material for these dressy little suits. But restraint is the keynote to a successful bathing suit, whether it be black or pale pink.

Japan Captures The First Davis Cup Match

OHTA BEATS CROCKER 3-1

Divide Two Openings in American Zone Davis Cup Final.

STRENUOUS FINAL

MONTREAL, Aug. 19 (Canadian Press.—Canada and Japan split the two games in American zone Davis Cup final round here yesterday afternoon. Yoshiro Ohta defeated Willard Crocker 6—4, 3—6, 10—8, 6—3, in the first match. Jack Wright of McGill University, Canadian singles champion, provided a decided upset in the second when he cut and chopped his way to victory over Takeichi Harada, ace of the Japanese team, in three straight sets. The score was 6—3, 6—3, 8—6.

Wright fairly scintillated on the court as he dashed confidently about return in the cross court fire of Harada. The Japanese star could not fan Wright's cut and failed to lift his returns in the first two sets. In the third Harada had more success in handling Wright's chops and led 3—1 as Wright appeared to lose control of his racket. But the Canadian champion rallied and took four games in a row to lead at 5—3, only to weaken again, and Harada carried the court to 6—6 on clever placements to Wright's backhand.

Wright smashed through on his own service and broke through on Harada's by rushing to the net in the final game, lobbing as Harada attempted to get up and scoring on the Japanese player's errors overhead.

Today Wright and Crocker play Harada and Toba in the doubles.

MONTREAL, Aug. 19. — Japan captured the first match in the American zone Davis Cup finals with Canada here yesterday afternoon, when Yoshiro Ohta, Japanese singles champion, defeated Willard F. Crocker in a four-set match, 6—4, 3—6, 10—8, 6—3.

Long before 3 o'clock, the time the match was scheduled to begin, the stands were filling and when R. N. Watt, chairman of the Montreal Davis Cup committee, took the umpire's chair for the first match there were 2,000 people on the grounds.

Garnett H. Meldrum of Toronto, president of the C.L.T.A., is official referee; John M. Miller, president of the Q.L.T.A., in charge of linesmen and ball boys, and Gordon Hulme in charge of ushers.

In the first match of series Willard Crocker, for years Canada's first singles player, was opposed by Yoshiro Ohta, champion of Japan. The latter is making his first appearance in Davis Cup tennis.

Both men were warmly applauded when they came on the courts and again when Umpire Watt introduced them to the spectators and announced that Willard Crocker would serve first.

HAVELOCK WINS TRENT LEAGUE

Defeats Tweed 7-5 in Sudden Death Game at Deloro.

MARMORA, Aug. 19. — Havelock earned the right to meet the Bay of Quinte champions in the Intermediate series through their win over Tweed at Deloro on Thursday by 7 to 5 in a keenly fought, sudden-death game. Havelock's late arrival was responsible for a late start. About two hundred witnessed the game.

The batteries were Caesar and Quinn for Havelock and Clark and Houston for the Easterners. Both pitchers showed good form., Clark having eleven strikeouts to Caesar's ten. Armstrong had to retire in the third owing to knee trouble, Bailey being brought into the game.

Nothing materialized until the fifth when Havelock chalked up four. With Caesar safe on Geraldi's error, Bailey singled, Jack doubled, scoring Caesar. Turnbull struck out. Hooper's lucky home run brought in Bailey and Jack ahead of him. Sexsmith flied to Thompson, Campney struck out.

Havelock increased their lead in the seventh. Turnbull singled. Hooper singled and reached second on Wagar's error. Sexsmith went out to catcher. Campney singled, scoring Turnbull and Hooper. Yutil was out at first. Quinn hit to pitcher. Tweed retaliated in their half, Thompson scoring on Geraldi's bunt.

In the eighth, Havelock scored another run. Caesar doubled. Bailey flied to left and Jack struck out. Turnbull singled, scoring Caesar. Turnbull stole second, but was out coming home on Hooper's hit.

Tweed gathered four in their half. Bosley struck out. Orr singled and stole second. Houston singled, scoring Orr. Clark was safe on Campney's error. Foster tripled, scoring Houston and Clark. Wagar got the solitary walk of the game and stole second. Thompson struck out. Geraldi was safe at first, scoring Foster. Geraldi stole second and Elliott struck out.

Speedily disposing of Havelock in the ninth, Tweed fought hard for a tie, but luck was against them. Havelock thus won the Trent Valley championship for 1927.

DUNCAN WINS IRISH GOLF OPEN

Becomes First Holder of Championship—Score 312 for 72 Holes.

IDEAL WEATHER

PORTMARNOCK, Ireland, Aug. 19 (Canadian Press). — In conditions which every player characterized as unparalleled in his experience, George Duncan, with a score of 312 for 72 holes, became the first holder of the Irish Open Golf Championship. The winner declared that his round of 74 yesterday afternoon was worthy of comparison with his famous round at Sandwich in 1922 when he just failed to tie Walter Hagen for the British championship. He said, as a matter of fact he was playing better today than in 1922.

The rain and wind defeated practically the entire field yesterday when there were only three rounds under 80. Duncan's concluding 18 holes under the playing conditions furnished phenomenal golf.

T. H. Cotton of Largely Park, finished second with 313 and Jack Smith of Wentworth, 315, was third. Archie Compston, unattached, took fourth place with 317, and W. Nowlan, Portmarnock, 319, was fifth.

Bill Mehlhorn, unattached United States professional, finished the 72 holes in 324.

LEAGUE GAMES ARE POSTPONED

Stormy Weather Plays Havoc With Major League Baseball Schedules.

YANKEES WIN 5-4

NEW YORK, Aug. 19 (Canadian Press).—Rain played havoc with yesterday's baseball schedule. All National and International encounters were called off, while one American league game, Boston at Detroit, was postponed.

Featuring the three contests that were played were two 12-inning struggles, one at Chicago where the New York Yankees triumphed, 5 to 4, and the other at St. Louis where the Browns downed the Washington Senators, 6 to 5. In the third game the Cleveland Indians broke their losing streak and the Athletics' winning streak by winning a pitchers' battle, 2 to 1.

The winning run at Chicago was scored in the twelfth when Ted Lyons issued a pass to Gazella with the bases loaded. It was the third straight victory for the Yanks over the White Sox, the second extra-inning game in two days and the second in a row credited to Wiley Moore, who has been called upon twice as a relief pitcher.

Koening started the final rally with a hit and moved up on Ruth's sacrifice. Gehrig was purposely passed and after Meusel fanned Lazerri beat out a hit to Kamm, filling the bases. Lyons then walked Gazella, forcing Koening home with the winning run.

The White Sox landed on Shocker in the first two innings for the lead but the Yankees came from behind and tied the count by bunching hits.

Melille's sacrifice fly with one out and the bases loaded settled the St. Louis-Washington contest, Sisler scoring the winning run. Walter Johnson started for the Senators but was relieved in the seventh by Braxton, who in turn was relieved by Marberry in the 12th.

At Cleveland, Bishop's error allowed Cleveland to score the winning run in the eighth inning.

TENNIS NEWS.

Following is the draw for the Y.M.C.A. Senior tennis tournament, for the singles club championship of 1927:

G. Huffman vs C. Crease; B. Granik vs G. Burchill; K. Cobsen vs W. Stewart; J. Wilson plays winner; R. Bates vs C. Thackeray; H. Elcombe vs E. McGee; C. S. Cummer vs J. E. Smith; T. Miller vs R. Sturgeon; C. B. Adair vs J. S. McGiffin; G. H. Hooper vs C. S. Thompson.

First round games to be played off by Thursday, August 25th. Tournament players will have preference on courts.

Here are some of the outstanding figures in the recent Canada Women's Athletic Federation meet at Toronto Varsity Stadium. On the left at the top is shown Ethel Catherwood of Saskatoon, the sensational high jumper who was instantly labeled by the crowd "The Saskatoon Lily," leaping the bar at five feet, and establishing a new Canadian record. The old figure was 4 feet 9½ inches made by Miss Eva Dawes, a 15 year old Toronto girl last summer. Miss Dawes was barred from the championship competition Saturday by a new age rule which bars girls under 16 years from championship events. On the right at the top is shown Miss Grace Conacher, the versatile Toronto girl athlete, winning the hundred yard hurdle championship in 15 seconds flat, a new Canadian record. Miss Conacher outclassed her field and won by ten yards. Below is shown a line up of champions: On the left "Young Joe" Wright, the famous Canadian single sculler; in the centre Miss Ethel Catherwood, Canadian javelin and high jump champion and record holder, and on the left George Young of Toronto, the "Katalina Kid," winner of the famous Catalina Channel swim, and favorite for the C.N.E. Wrigley 21 mile swim at the C.N.E. on Aug. 31.

SURE TO WIN D.C.R.A. MEDAL

King's Prize Winner Gets 104 Out of Possible 105.

TWO GET 103 MARK

CONNAUGHT RANGES, Ont., Aug. 19.—Shooting under practically ideal conditions, Lieutenant Desmond T. Burke, the Governor-General's Footguards, Ottawa, scored a possible 35 in the final range of the first stage of the Governor General's Match at the D.C.R.A. meeting here yesterday afternoon. Burke's total score for the first stage is 104 out of a possible 105 and there appears to be no question that he has won the D.C.R.A. silver medal for the highest competitor in the first stage. Official examination of the tickets has not yet been completed, but no other competitor appeared to have any chance to equal Burke's record shooting in the match.

There were two 103's, scored by Major W. E. Swaine, 1st Battalion, Canadian Machine Corps, Kingston; and Private T. R. Davis, the 72nd Seaforth Highlanders, Vancouver, B.C. 102's were scored by C.Q.M.S. A. Parnell, Montreal; Sergeant F. Walton, Hamilton; Sergeant P. E. Cleal, Toronto; and Sergeant S. Dawson, the G.G.F.G., Ottawa.

Official scoring gives the Coates match to the Governor-General's Foot Guards, Ottawa, with a score of 382, out of a possible 400. Second place goes to the 72nd Seaforth Highlanders of Canada, Vancouver, with 380, only two points behind. Third to the headquarters Esquimault Garrison Rifle Association with 377, and fourth to the Ottawa Highlanders.

Announcement of the team scores in the McDonald "Brier" competition shows the P.L. and S. Highlanders, Hamilton, as leaders with a total of 379. Second place went to the G.G.F.G., Ottawa (A team) with a score of 378. Third to the 48th Highlanders, Toronto (A team) with 373, and fourth to Esquimault Garrison R.A. with 372. Next in order were H.Q. M.D. No. 2, Toronto, with 370; Royal Hamilton L.I., Hamilton, 369, and 90th Winnipeg Rifles, also with 369.

Wednesday's revolver competition was won by Major J. Jeffery, R.C.R., Kingston, with Lieut.-Col. A. G. Styles, 1st Regina Rifles, second, with scores of 55 and 54, respectively.

The miniature rifle sweepstakes at 50 yards was won by Sgt. A. Carter, Toronto Regiment, with a score of 50, and at 100 yards by Sgt. A. J. McCabe, P.E.I. Highlanders, with 49.

The Imperial Cadet Cup, awarded to the cadet making the highest aggregate in the tyro, MacDougal, Walker, Bankers and Cadet matches, was won by Cadet Lieut. E. Matchett, Hamilton C.I.C.C., with a total of 232.

The Gooding junior prize awarded to the boy or girl under 21 years of age on August 16, 1927, from any part of the British Empire or any English speaking country, was won by Cadet Lieut. G. E. Matchett, Hamilton, C.I.C.C., with a score of 232. He gets a gold medal. The silver medal went to Gent. Cadet J. L. McAvity, R.M.C., Kingston, who scored 229.

Pte. J. E. Regan, 16th Scottish Victoria, will probably have the highest total for the grand aggregate prize, with C.S.M. W. A. Hawkins, Q.O.R., Toronto, second. Three members of the G.G.F.G., Ottawa, are probably next in order, with tied scores. Those are: Lieutenants H. W. Bishop and D. T. Burke and Corpl. W. J. Livingstone.

Miss Kathryn Prescott, Sussex, N.B., got a 98 in the Governor General's match first stage, and is practically certain of a place in the final stage.

Alex. Carrick Beaten At Nineteenth Hole

WINNETKA, Ills., Aug. 19. — Alex Carrick, of Scarboro was eliminated from the western junior golf championship yesterday morning by Paul Jackson, diminutive Kansas City, Missouri player, 1 up on the 19th hole. The game in the quarter finals round was a thrill all the way through.

Carrick put up a gallant match against the "show me" boy, after being three down at the half, and came back to even things at the sixteenth and take the seventeenth for a lead. Then he lost out when he got into a trap on the eighteenth and lost the hole to even up the match. Jackson took it easy on the first extra hole, and made it par figures. Carrick had an eight foot putt for a half. The ball hung up on the lip of the cup but failed to drop in.

The card:

Carrick—Out—444 455 654—41.
In—355 365 436—40—81

Jackson—Out—544 444 552—37.
In—356 465 555—44—81.

Extra hole—Carrick 6, Jackson 5.

BELMONTS HAVE STRONG LINE-UP

Play Kingston Here Tomorrow in O. S. A. Semi-Finals.

FAST GAME EXPECTED

The first game of the semi-finals of the Ontario Softball Association will be staged tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock at James Stevenson Park when the Belmonts meet Kingston. This should be a great struggle between two good teams as Kingston boasts the best team in years to represent them, while Peterboro is of the same opinion.

Kingston papers claim this year's team to be far superior than the one that represented the Limestone City last year, and figure if the Petes aggregation are of the same calibre as last year, the Limestone crew should win out. Peterboro are a lot stronger than last year as is proven by the fact that the Belmonts put out the Lockworks, who had practically all of last year's Firemen team, with the addition of a couple of players to strengthen the team, Smith being one and Waddell another.

Manager Haskell announced today that he would send in "Hap" Harrison to stop the Kingston gang, with Carruthers and McLean in reserve. The rest of the team will be: Frick, 1b; Batten, 2b; Holyman, ss; Hall, 3b; Ash, rf; Green, cf; Delahaye, lf; Haskell, c.

The game is called for 3 p.m. sharp at James Stevenson Park, and it should draw a bumper crowd. The admission is 25c and includes the grandstand.

WHIRLWINDS WIN FROM PICKED TEAM

Defeat Harry Cassan's Nine 15-13 in Exhibition Match.

CAMPBELLFORD, Aug. 19. — On Tuesday evening, Aug. 16, a very interesting game of softball took place at the Exhibition Park, the opposing teams being Dr. O'Hara's Whirlwinds and Harry Cassan's picked team. The game was called t the end of the third innings, owing to darkness, with the score 15-13 in favor of the Doctor's team, according to the official scorer. It was reported that the captain of the Doctor's team presented the umpire with a lolly-pop before the game with the promise of an ice cream cone. The line-up:

Cassan's team—G. Phillips, p; W. Seeney, c; H. Cassan, 1b; W. Sarginson, 2b; N. Lloyd, 3b; H. Cassidy, rf; B. Ibey, lf; D. Page, cf; R. McArthur, ss.

GORDON SOCCER FINAL SATURDAY

Masseys and Thistle Play This Game To a Finish—Cup To Be Presented.

All soccer fans are excited over the G. N. Gordon Cup Final on Saturday afternoon when the league winners—the Masseys — meet the Thistles at the King Edward Park. Kick off at three o'clock.

Last Saturday both teams put up an excellent brand of the scientific code. In the early stages of the previous encounter the Masseys gained a good two goal lead but fell away considerably to allow the "Jags" to equalize before the final whistle. Many fans stated that it was the best game this season and they anticipate a real battle again to-morrow.

Referee John Ward will handle the whistle and give his rulings as he sees them.

The Thistle executive have not decided on the eleven that will represent them, but they expect to make a few changes. All players associated with the Jags are requested to be at the pavilion no later than 2.45 promptly.

In all probability the Masseys team will be: Fowler, goal; Buchan and F. Wade, backs; W. Logan, Mann and Blowers, halves; Willis, G. Logan, Beggs or Dyer, Laidler and Sharman, forwards; Nicholson, reserve.

Hon. G. N. Gordon, K. C., the donor of the trophy, will present the silverware to the captain of the winning team at the conclusion of the game.

In case of a drawn result after the usual ninety minutes play the Knight of the Whistle was instructed to play twenty minutes overtime.

LAWN BOWLING

Something new in prizes will be awarded to the winners of the weekly bowling tournament to be held at the Brock street greens to-night. Fruit and silverware will be competed for, and a record crowd of both players and spectators is expected. Draw will be made at 7.30 p.m. sharp.

Lyrics Of Life

(By Douglas Malloch.)

IF YOU REMEMBER

Whether the roses bloom or not,
Whether the wildbirds sing,
If I may know I am not forgot,
That will be spring.
Whether the skies are blue or gray,
Whether the sun may shine,
If you are thinking of me today,
It shall in mine.

If you remember me, that is all,
All that I ask of fate,
Whether the shadows rise or fall,
Or soon or late.

Whether the winds shall beat about
My head, or the winds be fair,
I shall not sorrow, shall not doubt,
If you but care.

Whether the world be cold or kind,
Whether men praise or blame,
All that I ask is just to find
One man the same.
All that I need the whole day through,
Whatever the day may be,
Is to remember, and know that you
Remember me.

Uncle Wiggily

To-day's Bedtime Story

By Howard R. Garis

(Copyright, 1927, McClure Syndicate.)

UNCLE WIGGILY'S RHEUMATISM PIE

"How is the pain now, my dear?" asked Uncle Wiggily's rabbit lady wife as she tucked the bed clothes closer around him to keep him warm.

"Oh, id's bedder," he answered, for he not only had rheumatism but he had a cold in his pink, twinkling nose because of falling in the brook a little while before when rescuing Mr. Skip, the grasshopper.

"And how is your sniffle snuffle?" asked Mrs. Longears.

"Oh, thad's bedder, doo," the rabbit gentleman replied, talking in this funny fashion because of his cold. "I'll be all ride, by dear," he went on. "Don't worry aboud be. You were sayding someding aboud wadding sugar for a gake as I hopped up do the bungalow a liddle while ago."

"Yes," laughed Mrs. Longears. "I did need some sugar to finish a cake I started not knowing I was all out of the sweet stuff. You couldn't go, I couldn't go and not one of our forty-leven little rabbit boys or girls, and not even Baby Bunty, was here to go to the store for me."

"So I suppose there will be no cake?" asked Uncle Wiggily, speaking better now that he was warm in bed, and his snuffles not so bad.

"Unless that ridiculous grasshopper friend of yours does as he says he will, though I don't see how he can!" chuckled the rabbit lady.

"What did Mr. Skip say he would do?" Mr. Longears wanted to know.

"He said he would bring me a pound of sugar so I could make the cake," and the rabbit lady laughed again. "I told him he could only carry a few grains of sugar at a time from the store. He would be a year and a day fetching me a pound by a crumb at a time."

"Yes, I suppose so," agreed Mr. Longears.

"Still he said he would get the sugar," went on Mrs. Longears. "It is all nonsense, of course, but——"

Just then there was a noise out in the kitchen and a voice called:

"Groceries!"

"That sounds like Mr. Skip now," said Uncle Wiggily.

"With one little grain of sugar, I suppose," said Mrs. Longears. "I'll go thank him, anyhow. But I can't make a cake until I get a whole pound of sugar."

Uncle Wiggily, from his bedroom, could look out in the kitchen. He saw the green grasshopper gentleman skip in and up to the table. On it the kind little chap laid down a grain of sugar.

"There you are!" he chirped. "I told you I'd bring it!"

"Oh, but my dear Mr. Skip!" exclaimed Mrs. Longears. "Of course it is kind of you, but one crumb of sugar for a cake——"

"Wait!" cried the grasshopper in a jolly voice. "You have beheld absolutely nothing as yet! Look!" With one leg he pointed to the open door and Mrs. Longears, looking out, saw the air thick with grasshoppers, some flying and others skipping with long jumps. Each grasshopper carried in his jaws a crumb, or grain, of granulated sugar. One after another the kind insects flew or hopped into the bungalow kitchen and laid their cargo of sugar down on the table until there was more than a pound made up of thousands of tiny grains.

"Will that be enough for your cake?" asked Mr. Skip.

"Oh, plenty!" said the rabbit lady.

"Well, there you are!" chirped Mr. Skip. "I told you I'd get you the sugar and I did. I knew I would need help so I called together my ten thousand grasshopper friends, jumping and flying, and we brought the sugar from the store. Now, Uncle Wiggily, I have repaid you for rescuing me from drowning in the brook," went on Mr. Skip.

"You have more than repaid me," murmured the bunny.

Then the grasshoppers, ten thousand and one of them, counting Mr. Skip, hurried away and while Mrs. Longears baked the cake Nurse Jane Fuzzy Wuzzy made a pie for Uncle Wiggily. She made it of sugar and spice and everything nice. And so hot with spice was it that Mr. Longears called it his rheumatism pie, for it cured his pain almost at once. And as his cold grew better he knew he could go adventuring once more.

This he did, and if the electric fan doesn't blow talcum powder in the eye of the needle and make it stick the pin cushion I'll tell you next about Uncle Wiggily and the cricket.

It will be a sad sort of a story in parts, but there is a jolly, funny part, also, so everything will be all right, I guess. At least I hope so.

SENATOR FAVORS BOXING LAW REPEAL

Will Bring in Bill in New York Legislature—Game Not Clean.

NEW YORK, August 19 (United Press). — Declaring that the prize-fighting game had failed to clean the house as had been promised, State Senator Alfred J. Kennedy has indicated he would introduce legislation next winter to repeal the Walker boxing law.

The Senator said he was acting solely in the interest of clean sport, and that he counted on considerable aid from the members of his party.

"Every important bout that is now staged has something about it that makes it look suspicious," he stated. "The impression is gaining ground that the sure-thing gamblers have control of the game."

Theatres

AT THE CAPITOL.

RICHARD DIX IN "KNOCKOUT REILLY."

The good looking Richard Dix is starred in a cinema tale of the squared circle, appearing as "Knockout Reilly," in the picture of the same name, now running at the Capitol Theatre. He is supported by the pretty Mary Brian, as Molly Malone, and gives a fine presentation of the role of the man framed by a rival and coming back finally to give the same rival a double "knockout."

The pictures of prizefights which bid fair to run the old-time western films off the screen, if they continue to be presented with such prodigality as has been the case lately, had a late production in this story. The fight is more thrilling than most on account of the personal element interjected at the last moment, and the fact that Reilly appears to be fighting for revenge, as well as for honor, when he knocks out the champion heavyweight, Mike Agerra.

Reilly earns the hatred of his rival through Molly's love for him, and Agerra beats him up when Reilly interferes with the other man's love affair. Then Reilly takes two years to learn the art of fistic combat, only to be framed later by Agerra and sent to prison for a year. When he emerges to find his mother washing hotel floors he is ready for another combat with the victorious champion, and it is the staging of this episode that finishes the picture and gives it a satisfactory conclusion.

There is also an excellent comedy and the usual run of good short reels.

PLAYERS CHOSEN FOR U.S. CUP TEAM

Tilden, Williams, Johnston, Hunter to Play in Davis Cup Matches.

NEW YORK, Aug. 19 (Canadian Press).An experienced team consisting of William T. Tilden, II., and Richard N. Williams II., Philadelphia; William M. Johnston, San Francisco, and Francis T. Hunter, New Rochelle, N.Y., was named yesterday to defend the Davis Cup on September 8, 9 and 10 at Germantown, Pa. The United States has held the trophy, representing the world's team tennis championship for seven years.

George M. Lott, Jr., of Chicago, and John Doeg, Santa Monica, Calif., the country's outstanding younger stars, were named as alternates and will stay with the team throughout the matches for practice and experience.

Except that Hunter replaces Vincent Richards, who has turned professional, the team is the same as that which won from the French last year. The foreign challenge is expected to come from France again this season. The non-playing captain of the United States team will be Charles S. Garland, chairman of the selections committee of the United States Lawn Tennis Association, which announced the cup defenders following a series of trials at Forest Hills, N.Y.

Tilden is the ace of the team for the eighth successive year. Until last September, when he lost the final match to Rene Lacoste of France after twisting a knee, Tilden had never been beaten in Davis Cup singles. Johnston, likewise has lost only one singles match, to James O. Anderson of Australia in 1923.

HERE'S TO YOUR HEALTH

BY DR. FRANK McCOY

"The Fast Way to Health"

LEARNING FROM EXPERIENCE

You will find the experiences of others to be of great value in your study of health problems. Millions of people have lived, made mistakes in living habits, and developed diseases which you can prevent in your own case if you will but profit by their costly experiences.

Most of the truths I am giving you in these lessons have been gathered from the experiences of thousands of patients, the benefit of which you may have without being forced to live through the same mistakes and suffer the same bad consequences.

Personal experience is a great teacher, but knowledge procured that way often costs more than is necessary. For instance, if we learn to eat the right foods only by making mistakes, it will take all our lives to learn how to live.

Moses knew centuries ago that milk and meat made an indigestible combination, and yet how few have profited by the teaching of such a simple and easily proved fact.

It should not be necessary for a child to grow up repeating bad habits over and over again until he becomes debilitated and enervated at maturity, when he first learns that he has been making serious mistakes all his life.

People who are smart enough in business, and even those who are philosophers or inventors, will readily admit that overeating is harmful and yet, perhaps, they have gone through their whole lives without once having tried to curb their appetites or cut down their food to a sensible amount.

Overeating is equally as bad for one as for another. The only difference is that some people do not notice the bad effects as quickly as others. Those who are not troubled with digestive disturbances from overeating during early life will surely reap the harvest of bad effects later on.

How often people refer, in this way, to some friend who has just died at the prime of life: "It was so surprising—he had never been sick before in his life, and seemed such a healthy man." That "seemed such a healthy man" brings out an important point. No man can be truly healthy who is daily committing dietetic errors, and under-exercising. Disease will insidiously develop in the body of such a man, whether or not it shows in outward symptoms.

When your doctor tells you that gluttony is the source of all of your infirmities—the fountain of all your diseases—he is not only giving you his own private opinion, but the accumulated wisdom of the ages.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

QUESTION: M. D. writes: "I had sleeping flu or sickness five years ago. Since then I have been left a nervous wreck. My age is 25. I am not able to work with strangers, but I do housework at home. I eat well, also I am still sleepy. My eyes take turns of staring up—have not control of them. Can anything be done to help me?"

ANSWER: Your nervous system may have been injured by the fever which you probably had five years ago. Such cases usually respond very quickly to the fasting cure. The reason for this is that impurities which have been collecting around the injured nerve cells are quickly thrown out. Brain or nerve cells injured years ago by the burning effect of a fever will sooner or later be the nucleus for the start of a collection of inert cells or toxic substances and then such symptoms as you are having will begin to manifest themselves.

QUESTION: M. B. C. writes: Please advise me what to do for chronic osteomyelitis in femur. Has been fine since last operation two years ago, till lately, and now it is cold and painful. I have to take aspirins at night to get sleep. Will they affect it any?

ANSWER: It is useless for me to attempt to give you any definite advice through the columns of this paper for a condition as serious as yours. Of course, you will be helped in every way through adopting a sensibly planned diet, but the special treatment for your case would depend upon a correct diagnosis which, of course, cannot be given by mail. Theoretically, all sedative or hypnotic drugs are harmful, but there are cases when the least harmful ones like aspirin seem to be necessary to relax the body in order that one may get needed sleep.

Irish Hearts

By MOLLIE MALONE

"IRISH HEARTS," with May McAvoy, is a Warner Bros. picturization of this novel.

SYNOPSIS

Sheila Kildare and her father emigrate to America from Killanmaul, Ireland. They follow Emmett Murtough, to whom Sheila is betrothed. Neither Kildare or Murtough will hold steady jobs and Sheila goes to work as a waitress. She makes friends with the family of Rory O'Shea, a professional boxer, whose kindness interests her. Murtough joins a bootlegging gang and is involved with a cabaret girl. The gang plans to unload $150,000 worth of contraband.

At Clarice's invitation Murtough joined a party of two men and two women in evening dress and as the drinks began to be served more and more rapidly, Murtough's tongue was loosened. One of the women was particularly anxious to know "the inside" of "bootlegging" and professed the utmost admiration for the men who dared law and death to engage in it.

"It's really as romantic as in the days of the real pirates," she said. "Just think what men must go through to unload ships at sea and all that."

"Oh, there's lots of excitement if that's what ye' mean," Murtough said, "but there's not so much danger on the water as there is when the stuff has to be driven over land. At sea there's a chance of being caught by a revenue cutter, an' they'd blow ye' to pieces if ye' didn't come to, but on land ye' run up against not only the government men, but hi-jackers an' grafters an' the local police an' state police too. Everybody's against ye' on land. Why, only tonight—"

"Emmett!" Clarice squeezed his hand in warning but the Murtough was flattered by the attention of the woman who was listening so intently and the mood for boasting was on him. He told the story of the hold-up by the "agents" and the graft that was paid to them. He put himself in the shoes of Devlin and he let it be known with many reiterations, just how clever he had been in realising that the tactful method of paying out a little money was better than to stand a chance of a real arrest and the confiscation of the automobiles and cargo if it proved that the men were honest enforcement men.

"And who do you work for," queried one of the men to whom the recital seemed endless and boring.

"Mannie—", Clarice stopped him at the word.

"Emmett, they don't care who you work for, they're just interested in the fun you have."

"That's true, but I wondered if it was for one of the big gangs about which we read in the papers. That was all," explained the guest. It was plain that this was the truth for the woman who had shown such a deep interest added that they were from the West and just "slumming" through the night clubs. The host of the table called for a check and with polite farewells to Murtough and Clarice they left. Shortly afterward the manager told the girl that she could go home.

"Where shall we go," Murtough asked when they were on the sidewalk. "I'd like a couple of more."

"Let's go down to Corrigan's and I'll eat a sandwich. I'm hungry. They don't let us girls eat there, no matter if we're invited."

Murtough was at the danger line. He had enjoyed an audience and now he wanted to talk, he wanted to be thought the big man, the man who was in big business and who was to make thousands. Clarice played up to him as she always did and by the time Murtough had escorted her to her home, Clarice had learned definitely, not only that Emmett worked for Mannie Clocker, but the names of the men who were associated with him, and last but not least the news of the arrival of the ship with its $150,000 cargo. Murtough had boasted gloriously of the part he would play after the landing and Clarice learned all the details which had been revealed at Clocker's landing station. This was more news than the mysterious "Gus" could possibly want, she thought. When would "Gus" call at the Castle for the information and how soon would he pay her the $5,000 he had promised?

CHAPTER X

Idle Boasts Are Boomerangs

Emmett Murtough was a sick man when he awakened that evening. Not only was he ill physically, but he recalled with no little misgivings that he had talked a great deal the night before, and he could not remember how much of importance he had divulged. He feared that he may have revealed details of Clocker's plans which, he learned, would be punished only as the head of the bootleg ring knew how to punish. Dismissal and a sound thrashing by a couple of thugs was the usual portion with a warning to stay out of the vicinity of Clocker's district. Emmett decided to quiet his conscience by calling for Sheila at the restaurant.

Sheila was delighted to see him. The change in Emmett had pleased her mightily and she was anxious in turn to do all she could to help him in his ambitions, ambitions which he had confided while he was lying at her home injured. Sheila gaily invited him to take her for a walk through Central Park after her work was finished at Nick's.

She chattered happily, told him in all detail about hearing the announcement of the fights at the Garden round by round, speculated upon the marvels of the radio, and Murtough forgot his fears and recounted his night drives along lonely roads. With an Irishman's true blarney he painted the sky with bright stars and described the eerie night scenery as he sped by in his "express" truck.

The West End Club dance was to be held on the next Saturday night and Murtough promised her a glorious time and told her of the elaborate plans he had heard were being made for the affair. Everybody in the district would attend and even the Mayor and the Governor might drop in for a little while. It was to be broadcast also as one of the important political functions of the fall.

"Ah, Emmett, an' there's a change for the good come over ye here recent," said Sheila softly as they turned their steps back toward the entrance of the Park at the Circle. "Ye are softer an' gentler than ye' used to be when I first come over here."

"'Tis due to you entirely," responded Murtough, carried away by the spell of her presence. "'Tis due to you and nothing else."

"I'm glad, for sometimes I felt that maybe I was a bit strong-headed to be quarreling with you an' father all the time about yer business. After all, Emmett, ye are a man an' I guess perhaps ye know yer own business best at times."

"I'm doing well now, Sheila, but I want to do better yet."

"An' do ye think sometimes of the question ye asked me back there in Killanmaul just before ye came away?"

"Indeed an' indeed I do. 'Tis only that I want ye should have what ye should be having before we go to the priest," he said.

"I believe ye, Emmett, an' as I told ye, if when ye have made good as ye wish, ye put the question to me, I'll give ye my answer."

"But why can't ye promise now, Sheila?" he pleaded.

"Would ye want me to; wouldn't ye rather be free an' with no strings tied to ye' until ye have done what ye wished?"

"Give me yer promise now, Sheila. It will help me to get on for I'll be thinking all the time of ye' an' that ye are waiting an' hoping for me to make good."

"Then I do, Emmett," she said simply, and turned to his arms there in the shadows of the trees. They were silent until they reached Sheila's home, Sheila content in having done what she believed was not only her duty to the boy who had come from Killanmaul, but what her love dictated.

Emmett was not so sure as his mind reverted to his other associates. Sheila would undoubtedly learn the truth about his "business" some day; if they were married by that time there was little that she could do about it, but if they were not, Emmett knew full well the scorn with which she would treat a law-breaker. Could he take the chance? He had, as a matter of fact, so that was all there was to it. But there was Clarice, and he surmised that she might be a spiteful creature if she was aroused and might make him trouble if there was cause. These complications, however, must be faced as they came, he decided.

Clarice hugged the information Murtough had poured out to her breast like a "fence" miserly guarding precious stones until he could find a buyer.

OUTLINE OF SCIENCE — CCLXIII—Science in the World War—Part XI. — by MAX HAHN

ONE OF THE AERIAL STUNTS FAMILIAR TO EVERY WORLD WAR AVIATOR IS THE LOOP. AIRMEN SAY THIS TRICK IS COMPARATIVELY SIMPLE, ALTHOUGH IT NEVER FAILS TO THRILL THE SPECTATOR. PUSHING THE JOYSTICK FORWARD, THE AVIATOR DIVES UNTIL HIS SPEED IS ABOUT A FOURTH MORE THAN USUAL.

WHEN THE PILOT GRADUALLY PULLS BACK ON THE JOYSTICK UNTIL THE PLANE STARTS TO EASE OVER ON ITS BACK.

AND IN THIS PICTURE YOU SEE THE COURSE TRACED BY AN AIRPLANE IN LOOPING. WHEN AT THE TOP OF THE LOOP THE ENGINE IS THROTTLED DOWN TO RETARD THE DIVE. THE INSTRUCTOR ALWAYS CAUTIONS HIS PUPIL ABOUT JERKING THE JOYSTICK BACK SUDDENLY. THAT PUTS A STRAIN ON THE WINGS WHICH MAY CAUSE COLLAPSE.

SPECIAL STAMP FOR AIR MAIL

Post Office Authorizes Issue For London-London Flight.

VERY FEW ALLOWED.

LONDON, Ont., Aug. 19.—Canada's first air mail will be carried by Capt. Terry Tully and Lieutenant Medcalfe when they take off from this city next week on their 3,900-mile hop to London, England. Announcement was made at flight headquarters yesterday that the postal authorities at Ottawa had sanctioned the issuance of a special stamp and have prepared a special cancellation die to be used on the small and select package of letters that will go into the specially constructed Canada post-office air mail bag. The stamps were designed and engraved by Ray Lawson's artists in London, and are being held here last night under bond given to the post office department that the stones will be destroyed and that not one of the stamps will be released except in the manner authorized.

The stamp is of the double width, similar to the Confederation two-cent issue, and is in two colors. In light green are portraits of the upper section of the globe, with the coast of Canada at the left and the British Isles at the right. Between is a hand-engraved replica of the Stinson-Wright monoplane, and on either side of the plane are thumb-nail photo engravings of Tully and Medcalfe. The surmounting inscription is "London, Canada, to London, England." The arbitrary price marks required under the regulations is shown as twenty-five cents.

The Governor-General and Premier King have both arranged to have letters carried under this air mail stamp to King George in London, England. A select few additional letters will also be carried, but the quantity of mail must be rigidly limited to avoid excess weight. The inscription on the cancellation die to be used in the London Post-Office will be "Air Mail, London, Canada, to London, England, 1927."

Start for New York Delayed

Unavoidable delays have been encountered at the Stinson factory near Detroit, where the machine is now being put through its final tests before delivery. Tully wired yesterday afternoon that final adjustments have compelled him to delay another day his start for New York City. He now believes that he will leave Detroit for New York at 9 o'clock Saturday morning, and that he will be over London at about 10 o'clock. He will proceed to New York without stopping, and after having his instruments precisely adjusted will come back to London, reaching here, he says, perhaps on Sunday, but not later than Monday morning.

Yesterday it was finally decided that the name of the plane shall be the "Sir John Carling," to honor the memory of one of London's most distinguished citizens, and will be formally christened on reaching its home air port here, probably on Monday, the ceremony being performed by the young son of Col. Innes Carling, of this city, the boy being a great grandson of Sir John.

WEDDING BELLS.

HAYWARD—CALBERRY

An interesting wedding took place Thursday, August 18, at 588 Aylmer Street, when Rev. Dr. Brown united in marriage Morgan Edgar Hayward and Isobel Mary Calberry, both of this city. The happy young couple, after a few days spent up the lakes, will take up residence on Barnardo Avenue, Peterborough.

ACKERMAN—CURTIS.

A pretty wedding was solemnized at St. Andrew's Manse, on Thursday afternoon, August 18, by the Rev. J. W. Gordon, when Lila Gertrude, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin W. Curtis, Peterborough, became the bride of Mr. Donald Yerex Ackerman, eldest son of the late Mr. and Mrs. D. E. Ackerman, of Picton, Ont.

Among the many beautiful gifts received by the bride was a silver tray given by the staff of the Royal Bank, where the latter was employed, and a silver tea service, the gift of the groom.

After a dainty luncheon Mr. and Mrs. Ackerman left by motor for their cottage at Lake Papinau.

MURDERERS MAKE ESCAPE

Two Men Shoot Their Way Out of Pittsburgh Jail.

WOUND TWO GUARDS.

PITTSBURG, Aug. 19.—With the stage setting even more dramatic than that of the Biddle brothers in their escape in 1902, two first degree murder prisoners late yesterday walked to freedom from the office door of the Allegheny Camp jail in the down town section and escaped in a waiting automobile.

The fugititves are Paul Jawarski, convicted murderer and leader of the robber gang that dynamited the armored pay cars near the Coverdale mine last March, and his pal, John Vasbinder, both awaiting electrocution.

Armed posses are in pursuit. These include citizens, county detectives, state police and private detectives.

The Biddles made love to the warden's wife, got the keyes from her, stole some horses and fled. The two who escaped yesterday received guns tossed by an unidentified two-gun visitor, rushed down a corridor and shot Harry Riger and John Hanlon, guards, through the shoulders when they attempted to stop the prisoners. Then the fugitives and their confederate, guns in hand, walked into the jail office and covered Paul Beiswenger, the bookkeeper.

Demand the Keys.

"We are going to leave here, so don't interfere," said Jawarski. "Give us the keys, throw up your hands and don't shout, or we will kill you."

To make their demands more emphatic the three fired several shots in the office. Mrs. Annie McFrederick, the jail missionary worker; Mrs. Margaret Kylor and her daughter, Mrs. G. J. Vetter, were the other occupants of the office. Bullets whizzed and the women ducked behind desks, barely escaping wounds.

Having forced the bookkeeper to give up the keys, the desperadoes, guns in hand, walked to the massive door gates facing Ross street, opened them and walked down the dozen steps to the street through a large crowd, attracted by the shooting inside. Sight of the automatics awed the spectators, and none dared interfere. The fugititves walked perhaps fifty feet, stepped into a waiting car and escaped in the dense traffic.

Guards Not Seriously Injured.

Warden John McNeil was out of the city on his vacation. The two guards were not seriously injured.

Just as the men walked out someone telephoned to police headquarters a riot call. When the police arrived the fugititves had had a start of five minutes. The automobile in which the prisoners fled was identified by its license number. It is owned in Woodlawn, Pa.

Jawarski was arrested in connection with a payroll holdup of the Pittsburg Terminal Coal Corporation. He confessed to this and other robberies in which the guards were killed.

Jawarski also confessed to participation in the Coverdale holdup in which an armored car and one carrying guards were blown up and a $104,000 payroll stolen.

Jawarski took the keys from Beiswenger as he left the jail.

Beiswenger had no time to step on the button in the floor which would sound the riot call.

HANGINGS MARK THREE FRIDAYS

AUGUST 5, 12 AND 19.

MONTREAL, Aug. 19 (Canadian Press).—The first three Fridays of August, 1927, proved days of expiation for murderers in the Province of Quebec and also created a record for successive hangings. Justice was served in like manner on the scaffold on three occasions.

On Friday, August 5, George Merle was hanged at Montreal for the murder of Andre Marrelle. Both were French.

On Friday, August 12, Alexander Lavalle, 73, was hanged for the murder of his daughter. The execution took place at Three Rivers.

To-day, Friday, August 19, Eugene Bigaouette was hanged in Quebec City. He killed his mother two years ago.

OSHAWA HERE NEXT SATURDAY

Will Play the Petes in First of Home and Home Series.

FOR LEAGUE TITLE.

The Petes swing into action on August 27, a week from to-morrow. Their opponents will be Oshawa Motors, and the stake will be the championship of the Lakeshore League and the right to continue further in the quest for the Ontario Senior title. The first game will be played here, at James Stevenson Park, and the return game will take place in Oshawa on September 3.

The Petes have been practicing faithfully for these games, for which they have waited all season, and the fans will be pleased to see them play in a real league contest, which seems always to have more attraction than a mere exhibition game. There should be a big crowd over in the old park to see the old rivals clash.

ROYALS PLAY ON SATURDAY

Meet South Oshawa Juniors at Exhibition Park To-morrow Afternoon.

IN JUVENILE SERIES.

To-morrow's game, Royals vs. South Oshawa, will be well worth the walk to the Exhibition Grounds. These kids (the O.B.A.A. Juvenile series age limit is under eighteen on May 1) play a real snappy brand of baseball. Last Saturday, in Oshawa, they battled for eleven innings before the home team won out, thirteen to twelve. Plenty of hitting and running in that for anybody.

This game will get away to-morrow afternoon at three o'clock, and there should be a large crowd in the stands. The little fellows always put their hearts right into the game, and a hard fought contest, from start to finish, is promised.

CLOTHES LEFT BESIDE FENCE PROVE PUZZLE

Man's Entire Outfit Has Been Discarded Near Railway Track.

POLICE NOTIFIED.

No Clue To Owner Found — River and Lake Both Close To Place.

Baffled by the mystery of a heap of clothes which they saw lying for three days alongside the fence adjoining the railway track about a mile and a half south-east of Birdsall, the C.N.R. officials of that area have appealed for aid to local representatives of the Provincial and County Police.

The clothes, which were found on both sides of the fence, consist of a grey coat, blue trousers, a grey shirt, a sand coloured cap, sand coloured stockings, and black boots, and were first noticed on Monday by the engineer in charge of the freight train popularly known as "The Manifest."

Finding the clothes still in the same place on Tuesday and Wednesday, he communicated his suspicions to the station agent. The agent, unable to offer any attempt at solution, sent a message to County Constable R. C. Smith. Mr. Smith, searching the clothes, discovered part of an envelope which had evidently been used as a record of hours worked by their former owner. The fact that the entries indicate a ten-hour working day militates against any theory that the clothes belong to any of the section hands of the railway, whose normal day is of eight hours. Nothing else was found that could offer a clue to the identity of the owner of the clothes. On the back of the coat is a rent that seems to have been made in crawling under a fence similar to that beside which the clothes were found.

After satisfying himself that no immediate explanation of the problem was available, Constable Smith bundled up the clothes and placed them in the keeping of Provincial Constable N. F. Maker on his return to Peterborough.

Beyond the swamp, less than half a mile away, is the River Ouse. About the same distance to the south-west is Rice Lake. To a man bent on self-destruction and at all familiar with the locality, there would be little difficulty in making his way to the water without encountering anyone to stop him.

On the other hand, it is possible that the clothes have been discarded by a vagrant who, legally or illegally, obtained possession of another suit.

So far as the police have learned, nobody is reported missing in the neighbourhood of Birdsall.

CHILDREN'S WORK TO BE EXHIBITED

Handicraft of the Playgrounds Girls To Be Shown at Fair.

Arrangements have been made whereby the best examples of the needlework, card work, fancy sewing and raffia-made frames and cushions—the work of local girls in the school playgrounds under supervisors appointed by the Board of Education, will be placed on exhibition at the Fair next month.

The work, much of which is of remarkably high quality, was laid out on benches for public inspection at the Field Day held at Nicholls Oval on Thursday afternoon. Since then many insistent requests have been presented that the work should be retained by the school authorities for exhibition and adjudication next month.

After due consideration, Public School Inspector Alexander Mowat yesterday notified James Abraham, general supervisor of the playgrounds, that the exhibition of the pupils' work would be permitted.

The playground instructors in the fancy work were Misses Ethel Rowe, A. Batten and M. McDonald.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 20.—(Canadian Press.)— Wheat cutting in Western Canada will not be really general for another ten days at least, and in many districts it will be fully two weeks, stated the fifth crop report published by the Manitoba Free Press to-day.

A bomb expert examined the package and found it to be a harmless radio battery charger.

JUDGE REFUSES HABEAS CORPUS

Won't Allow Counsel For Sacco and Vanzetti To Appeal.

VISIT SUPREME COURT.

BOSTON, August 20. Canadian Press. — Arthur D. Hill, chief counsel for Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti, said to-day that he had been informed by Elias Field, associate counsel, that Justice James H. Morton, Jr., of the Federal District Court, had refused to issue a writ of habeas corpus, and also had refused Field permission to appeal to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals.

Field visited Justice Morton at his home at West Port yesterday and applied for a writ which was sought in an effort to stay the execution of Sacco and Vanzetti, whose respite expires at midnight on Monady.

Hill said that he had written a letter to Governor Fuller and that he expected to go to Beverly to-day to see Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes of the United States Supreme Court.

In his letter to the Governor, Hill asked for a further respite in order that the case may be dealt with by the Supreme court of the United States."

Counsel Visits Court.

WASHINGTON, August 20. Canadian Press. — Counsel for Sacco and Vanzetti was at the office of the clerk of the Supreme Court when it opened this morning for the purpose of filing a petition for a review. It developed that the attorney was unable to present the record and he went into a discussion with court officials to develop whether a petition for a review could be filed in the absence of such a record showing the court proceedings in the lower courts. Representatives of the clerk advised him that the petition could not be filled without the record, but the discussion proceeded.

It was finally decided that they could not file a petition for a review of their conviction of murder in the Supreme Court today because the papers presented were held to be not in satisfactory form:

Highest temperature yesterday 74 degrees; lowest last night, 53 degrees.—W. B.

SUDDEN SILENCE AFTER MESSAGE FROM AVIATORS

Two Men Searching For Missing Planes Sent Out S.O.S.

TAILSPIN CAUSE.

No Word Received From Dallas Spirit Since Nine Last Night.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 20 (Canadian Press).—An errand of mercy and rescue apparently was at a dramatic and sudden end, and vast reaches of the Pacific were being combed to-day for Capt. William P. Erwin and Capt. A. H. Eichwaldt, pilot and navigator respectively of the rescue plane Dallas Spirit. The plucky pair started from Oakland yesterday to wing their way over the unused lanes of water between here and Hawaii in an effort to "spot" the missing Dole flight planes, Golden Eagle and Miss Doran, or their five occupants.

Whether fate intervened or their radio equipment went out of order is not known, but at 9.02 last night, following a message flashed into the offices here of the Associated Press, "E.O.S. (extraordinary service) tailspin," then silence, as swiftly as lightning cleaves the sky came a cry for help from Erwin and Eichwaldt. Lulled into security by the pleasant greetings received over many hours, the A. P. operator, suddenly electrified into action, began writing furiously. Here is what poured into his ears:

"Went into tailspin. Came out O.K., but sure scared. Sure was close call. Bill (Erwin) thought it was all off but we came out of it. Lights on instrument board went out and it was so dark that Bill couldn't see the S.O.S. tailspin."

He heard no more.

It was a stunning climax to a noble undertaking. The A.P. operator gasped, handed his copy to the editor, and turned back to his instruments. Feverishly he whirled the dials of the radio, listened for some further sign from the air. There was no response.

Set May Be Wrecked

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 20.—Emory Bronte, navigator of the plane which Ernest L. Smith flew from Oakland to Hawaii, declared that a tail spin could have thrown the radio set of the Dallas Spirit out of condition.

"A hundred things could have happened in a tail spin to disable the radio," he declared, "but if the plane went into two spins consecutively it looks as though they might have gone into the water."

Flare Seen by Ship

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 20 (Canadian Pres).—A message received by the Federal Telegraph Company early today from the tanker West Sequana, approximately 250 miles west of this city and 70 miles north of the great circle route to Honolulu, said that it had sighted a flare and was standing by until daylight. The flare was not repeated, the message said.

A second message from the steamer added the information that the flare was distinct and was seen about three miles off the starboard bow by the mate and the lookout.

The Federal Telegraph Company maintained communication throughout the night with the West Sequana, which was maintaining its position. The flare lasted half a minute, the radio operator of the steamer said.

TWO ELECTIONS CAUSE FERMENT

Political Pot Boiling in Irish Free State at Present.

VOTE ON WEDNESDAY.

LONDON, Aug. 20 —(United Press) —Political ferment has reached fever pitch throughout the Irish Free State and the result of the two by-elections necessitated by the murder of O'Higgins and the death of Countess Markiviecz, which will be held on Wednesday, is awaited with the most intense interest.

The Government is confident of winning both elections which would ensure a majority of one in the Dail what ever the future attitude of John Jinks might be.

Jinks, a member of the National League Group, saved the Cosgrave administration from defeat the other day by not turning up to vote against it with his party which resulted in a tie. His resignation from the party has been accepted.

HAMILTON FEELS OFFICIAL NEGLECT

Not Mentioned in Princes' Programme Or In Souvenir Booklets, Etc.

HAMILTON, Ont., Aug. 20 (Canadian Press).—"What is wrong?" asks the Spectator, apropos of what seems to be either remarkable modesty on the part of Hamilton, or neglect on the part of Canadian officials. The newspaper points out that the Princes and Premier Baldwin stopped over only five minutes in Hamilton; that not the slightest reference was made to Hamilton in the official programme issued at Ottawa; that Hamilton was not included with other cities in the films of Confederation jubilee celebrations; and that a handsome booklet on Canada issued by one of the railways, ignores the city.

TANKER SIGHTS NOTHING WHERE FLARE NOTICED

Is Circling Spot Where Lookout Said He Saw Something.

SHIPS SEEK OTHER PLANE.

Many On Way To Position of Spirit of Dallas When S.O.S. Sent Out.

SAN FRANCISCO, August 20. Canadian Press. — The tanker West Sequan, which reported at midnight that it had sighted a flare on the surface of the Pacific, sent a message to the Federal Telegraph Company, at 6.06 a.m., Pacific time, that it had sighted nothing, but was circling in the vicinity in which two of its crew reported a flare.

The vessel, en route from San Francisco to Shanghai, halted for six hours to remain in the vicinity. The message said that the ship would continue circling for another hour, and then, if it found nothing, would continue on its course. Meanwhile ed draft early to-day to a spot aped draft earl yto-day to a spot approximately 590 nautical miles west from San Francisco, where the aeroplane Dallas Spirit last night sent out an SOS call after it had gone into two successive tail spins. The radio of the plane was silent after the frantic distress calls and it was believed that the plane had fallen into the sea.

Batteries Upset?

Radio experts said the power lines feeding the instrument board of the plane also fed the power tube filaments in the rad set. If the plane went crashing headlong toward the water storage batteries would have overturned and probably ripped away the connection with the instrument board. If the plane was sent into an easy forced landing the radio set would go out as soon as the drooping antenna struck the water.

Hawaiian Waters Searched.

HONOLULU, August 20. — Canadian Press. — Mercantile ships and naval seaplanes early to-day had searched nearly all Hawaiian waters without finding the slightest trace of the Miss Doran and the Golden Eagle, the Dole race entrants, three days overdue in Honolulu, and without doubt either wrecked or helpless.

Discovery Reported.

HONOLULU, Aug. 20.—(Canadian Press.)—The signal corps here intercepted two messages said to be from an unidentified vessel saying that the missing plane Golden Eagle had been found. The messages were partly undecipherable. The signal corps had no idea whether the messages are authentic.

No Trace Found.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 20.—(Canadian Press.)—A radiogram received by the Federal Telegraph Co. at 8.39 a.m. from West Sequana said that the vessel had given up the search for the Dallas Spirit and was proceeding westward. The vessel said no trace of anything had been seen.

Ferguson Announces Intention to Decline Federal Leadership

In His Own Best Interests and Best Interests of Country, He Says—Consideration of Matter Forced On Him By Frequent Mention.

PLANS TO RETIRE FROM POLITICS IN THREE YEARS, WHEN HE IS 60

Sufficient Scope For His Activities In Province of Ontario—Many Matters To Be Carried Through To Success He Points Out.

TORONTO, Ont., August 20. — Premier Ferguson has spoken. His hat is not in the ring. The Dominion Conservative Party now must look elsewhere than to Queen's Park for its guiding star.

"I have definitely made up my mind," Mr. Ferguson said yesterday, "not to be a candidate for the Dominion leadership."

"But when they get you out to Winnipeg," it was suggested, "they may persuade you into accepting it."

"I can't be persuaded," was the Prime Minister's emphatic statement.

So that's that!

Mr. Ferguson's rejection of the Federal leadership — for there is little doubt but that it was his for the "Thank you!"— was stated only a few hours after a very representative party delegation, it is understood, had waited on him to point out that Dominion needs should have priority over Provincial interests or attachments; that the Winnipeg convention was calling—and so, why not?

"Stay Right Where I Am."

Mr. Ferguson was inclined to put the general situation in a more modest way. "Because," said he, "my name has been frequently mentioned in this leadership connection, there has been forced upon me, naturally enough, some consideration of the question. I have reached the conclusion that it is best for my own interests, as well as the interests of the country, to stay right where I am."

Work Still To Do.

"There is sufficient scope in this Province of Ontario to provide ample room for one's activities. There is a certain amount of work still for me to do here—work the effect of which will not be confined solely to the Province, but will inure to the benefit of the Dominion as a whole."

Mr. Ferguson pointed out that when he formed the present Provincial Government about him certain policies had been drafted to which all members had subscribed, and had pledged themselves to carry through.

"We have brought our mining industry," said he, "to a very high state of development. The same can be said of our timber resources. We have brought Northern Ontario a lot closer to Old Ontario. There are, however, some other matters to be carried through to success. Consequently, I do not feel that I should shirk my share in these responsibilities — that I should leave my part of the task to colleagues who perhaps are making a greater sacrifice than I am in a financial way."

To Retire when Sixty.

Another factor, it is possible, may have militated against Mr. Ferguson's "stepping up."

"I am 57 years of age," he said yesterday. "In three years I'll be 60. I plan to call a halt then and quit this business and let some one else have a chance at it."

Mr. Ferguson does not look all of his 57 years. The job, he says, has been rather "exacting," especially during the past year, and he has had little time for rest. But he is still spry enough to go to his office routine in his shirt sleeves, like Baldwin, and to get sufficient "kick" out of what he is doing as to suggest that when the 60 mark rolls around he will still have his nose to Ontario's grindstone, with the playdays on which he banks at present as remote as ever.

Sets Speculation at Rest.

Mr. Ferguson's attitude toward the Winnipeg convention, and the new Conservative leadership that is expected to result has for months been made the subject of much speculation. It has been talked on the street, whispered in Parliamentary corridors, and shouted from the platform, with opinion about evenly divided. Mr. Ferguson has merely smiled mysteriously and let the others do the talking for him. On different occasions he has skirted the fringe of the question, but it has been a rather wide skirt and until yesterday when he made his long-expected pronouncement the country has been entirely at sea as to what his answer would be.

WON'T ACCEPT OFFICE.

HON. G. HOWARD FERGUSON.
Premier of Ontario, who will refuse leadership of the Dominion Conservative Party if it should be offered him.

RADICAL ARE RETURNED TO DEATH HOUSE

Massachusetts Supreme Court Denies Final Appeals of Their Council.

REMAIN CALM.

Defense To Seek Stay From Federal Circuit Court.

STATE PRISON, CHARLESTOWN, Mass., Aug. 20 (Canadian Press).—Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti were back last night in the cells of the prison death house here from which they stepped hopefully a week ago, a few hours after an eleventh hour respite had saved them from the electric chair. Last night they faced barely three days more of life before that respite will come to an end.

For the past week they have occupied cells in the section of the prison known as Cherry Hill. It was there that word was carried to them that the Massachusetts Supreme Court had denied again the appeals of their counsel. The news was taken to them by Michael A. Mussmano, one of their lawyers. A few minutes later prison officers opened doors of the cell and marched them back to the death cells.

Sacco had been scrubbing his cell during the morning, and it was immaculate when Musmanno appeared outside the bars.

"You're a pretty strong man, aren't you?" the lawyer asked.

"Yes, I think I am," Sacco replied.

"Then I must tell you that the full Bench has turned down the final appeals," Musmanno said.

"Well," was the reply. "We expected it."

Resumes Hunger Strike

Sacco had been eating his dinner, but he stopped abruptly and refused to eat more. He said he wished to write a farewell letter to his son, who visited him Thursday.

Vanzetti took the news less stoically, according to his lawyer. The older man started raving, Musmanno said, and the lawyer declared later that there is "no question" but that Vanzetti's mind is affected.

"I knew it; I knew it," was Vanzetti's reply. "Go and get that million men.

Musmanno said Vanzetti wanted a wireless set in his cell so that he could tell the world his whole story

When Deputy Warden James L. Hogsett and two other prison officers went for the two men a short time later, they found them quiet and, according to the guards, they gave no sign of breaking down as they walked through the prison to the death house, some distance from Cherry Hill. Celestino Madeiros, convicted of another murder but sentenced to die on the same date as Sacco and Vanzetti, was transferred also to the death house. The three men, according to the guards, walked without assistance and there was no conversation during the brief trip.

They were placed again in adjoining cells, the same they occupied before the respite last week. They will remain there until they start their walk to the electric chair, unless another respite halts the execution, now scheduled for some time after midnight next Monday.

Seeks Stay

BOSTON, Aug. 20 (Canadian Press).—Arthur D. Hill, chief counsel for Sacco and Vanzetti, disclosed late yesterday that Richard C. Evarts, of the defence corps of lawyers, had gone to the summer home in Southern Massachusetts of Judge James M. Morton, Jr., of the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals, to ask for a writ of habeas corpus and a stay of execution for the condemned men.

Attorney Hill said he had not been informed as to the outcome of Mr. Evarts' visit to Judge Morton, and added that he did not expect to hear from his associate last night.

He also said Mr. Evarts was prepared to ask Judge Morton for permission to take the petition to the Circuit Court in the event that the judge did no grant the writ or stay.

VICTORIA, B.C., Aug. 20.—(Canadian Press).—The Prince of Wales and Prince George were welcomed as they came off the boat by several thousand people.

The two princes drove along to the war memorial, where the Prince of Wales placed a wreath at the foot of the statue.

Lined up to the east of the statue were a couple hundred war veterans. The Prince went down the line and greeted them individually.

When the ceremony at the war memorial was over the two Royal brothers entered Lieut.-Governor Bruce's car for a spin around the city, after which they went to their hotel.

POLICE RIVALS AT DEATH GRIPS

Patrolman Shoots and Slays Other Officers Over Political Quarrel.

ARREST MILK MAN.

WILLIAMSON, W. Va., Aug. 20.—(United Press.)—Two patrolmen were shot and killed yesterday in a fight with two other officers who have been serving as police under a dual regime for the last three months.

D. W. Deerfield, 45, and Harvey McGuire 40, were shot down in a battle with Julius Lawson and James Kirkpatrick, officers under a rival political city administration.

The shooting affray was the climax of an attempt by Deerfield and McGuire to arrest the driver of a milk truck for improper traffic lights.

The truck belonged to the Hutchinson Milk Company, whose owner voted to oust Deerfield and McGuire, along with the other members of the police department, three months ago. Lawson and Kirkpatrick were members of the department appointed to replace them.

As McGuire and Deerfield started to tag the truck, Lawson and Kirkpatrick are alleged to have opened fire on them.

Deerfield fell with a bullet through his heart. McGuire was shot six times through the body.

As he lay in the street dying, McGuire managed to reach his revolver, and while sinking, fired one bullet, which wounded Kirkpatrick in the leg.

Kirkpatrick and Lawson surrendered to county officials after the shooting.

NOT A PASSENGER ON CUNARD LINER

Andonia Leaves Montreal On a Voyage For England.

MONTREAL, Aug. 20.—The s.s. Andania sailed from this port for London yesterday morning with not a single passenger on board.

All the steamship's passengers had previously been transferred to the other Cunard vessel, s.s. Ascania, which sailed at daybreak Friday morning, while the Andania went back empty.

The reason for this action on the part of the Cunard company is seen in an outbreak of sickness, said to be smallpox, among members of the engine-room staff on the ship's last voyage to Montreal, and although the Andania was given a clean bill of health by the health authorities, the Cunard Line, which has an excellent safety first reputation, thought it wiser to transfer the ship's passengers and send the ship back empty, although the cost of running a 16,000-ton ocean liner is enormous.

PLANE CRASHED.

OTTAWA, Ont., Aug. 20 (Canadian Press).—A Canadian Government seaplane crashed near its base at Shirley's Bay early last night and an occupant of the plane rushed to hospital was believed seriously injured. Meagre reports of the accident received here did not reveal the identity of the injured man, nor state whether he was the pilot or a passenger.

Shirley's Bay is some 12 miles west of the capital, on the Ottawa River.

LABOR STRIKES BLOW AT REDS

No Debate on Their Admission to the National Conference.

THREE YEAR TERM.

LONDON, August 20. — Communists in Great Britain have suffered another blow from Labour by the decision of the national executive of the Labour Party that the question of lifting the ban on Communists cannot be debated at the national conference for another three years, and that Communists cannot attend as delegates.

British labour is alive to the peril of Communism, though not so much from a national viewpoint as because of the Communists' determination to capture Labour machinery, and oust the present leaders.

Next Election.

Meanwhile Labour is actively preparing for the next general election, and at the Blackpool conference, opening on October 3, will reveal what are to be the battle cries. In this connection it is likely that the question of a levy on capital will be scrapped in favour of the executive's scheme for a surtax.

Through the surtax system, it is proposed to levy an average tax of two shillings per pound on unearned incomes of over £500 a year, and it is expected that in this way a total of £85,000,000 could be raised annually for the redemption of the debt expenditure on social services.

The Liberals are already visualizing the Labourites shouting at the next election: "Capital levy is dead. Long live the surtax on property and investment incomes," which may prove a popular cry although Britons are known for their reluctance to admit the principle of confiscation because of not knowing where it would end or what would have to be overcome.

Labour argues that the surtax will get money from people who would have paid under the capital levy statement, but that instead of being paid in a lump sum it would be obtained by instalments.

Other Labour resolutions call for the abolition of the monarchy, the Privy Council, and the House of Lords ,and for the transformation of the state into a democratic republic. However, it is not likely that these will be passed.

The Liberals, meanwhile, are gingering up election machinery ,and are only waiting the industrial inquiry report to complete their programme.

ELECTRIC LIGHTS FOR APSLEY STORE

George Stephens Will Also Illuminate Part of Street.

APSLEY, Aug. 20.—To George Stephens belongs the honor of installing the first electric lighting system in the village. The work was completed yesterday, and his store is now illuminated with six 40-watt bulbs. He will also place three or four lights outside, which will serve to dispel the hitherto dismal and gloomy aspect of the village street at night. Charles Hawkes of Chandos township installed a similar outfit in his house about two months ago which is giving unqualified satisfaction.

The bear cub which for the past two months has been a source of attraction at Stephen's store has been bought by an American tourist and was taken away on Saturday.

Considerable perturbation was caused last week to several owners of boathouses at Jack's Lake when Mrs. Robins, an American lady who owns most of the islands and a great part of the shore line at the lake, sent each of them a peremptory notice ordering them to remove their boathouses within five days, as she claimed they were on her property. The only places to which they could be moved near at hand were on the water, up in the air or on the road allowance. One man moved his into the water, others put theirs on the road allowance, but it is reported that the lady is taking steps to have them moved from there. Results are waited with interest, as the removal of boathouses and boats from the vicinity will adversely affect the tourist trade, this being the road that all tourists travel to reach the lake from Apsley. Some of the boat houses have stood there for years.

Receive Large Order From South America

LONDON, Aug. 20 (Canadian Press Cable).—The heavy iron and steel industry of this country has been heartened by the placing of orders here for 50 freight locomotives for Buenos Ayres railways, 30 of them to be built by the Armstrong-Whitworth Company and 20 by Beyer & Peacock at a reported total cost of £350,000. These orders have had a tonic effect on Manchester and Newcastle, which are most closely concerned therein, and hopes are entertained that these orders are merely a prelude to further similar large-scale foreign orders.

LESSER STATES WORK FOR PEACE

Smaller Countries Are Power Against War Says Count Sforza.

WORLD MEETING.

WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass., Aug. 20.—(Canadian Press.)—The little states created by the partitioning of Europe after the World War form one of the truest sureties for peace in the Europe of to-morrow, said Count Sforza at the Institute of Politics.

Count Sforza, who represented Italy in many of the post-war settlements, said that lamentations that the many small states created by the treaties of 1919 harbor the seeds of war are as absurd as to hold that Switzerland or Denmark started the World War.

"The peace of Europe finds its most loyal guardians in the smaller states," he declared, "so long as they form real and well-defined national enties. The small nations have a deeper concern for peace than is ever the case with the greater ones."

APSLEY ROAD BAD FOR INDIANA 'BUS

Big Vehicle Has To Detour Around One Narrow Spot.

APSLEY, Aug. 20.—A huge brilliantly illuminated motor bus arrived in the village on Thursday evening, causing quite a sensation. Enquiries elicited the information that it had just completed an 1,800 mile trip, lasting four days, from Indiana. It was conveying a party of ten tourists to Loon Lake, but learning the nature of the road into the lake the driver decided to park the bus in the Town Hall grounds, and the tourists finished their journey in cars of a smaller type.

At one point before reaching Apsley, on account of the narrowness of the road it was found necessary to take down a fence and make a detour through the fields. One of the tourists enquired rather pathetically whether they would have to return the same way, and being answered in the affirmative seemed rather perturbed at the prospect.

FLYING SCHOOL MISTRESS IS STILL MISSING

Ideal Weather Over Pacific Offers Greatest Hope For Their Safety.

EXTENSIVE SEARCH.

Captain William Erwin Hops Off From Oakland To Aid Hunt.

SAN FRANCISCO, Calif., Aug. 20.—(Canadian Press.)—Ideal weather over the broad expanse of the Pacific ocean between the mainland and Hawaii last night offered the greatest hope for the safety of Miss Mildred Doran, "flying school teacher" of Flint, Mich., and the four men fliers who have been missing since shortly after the start of the Dole air race to Honolulu Tuesday.

No trace of the two lost planes, the Miss Doran and the Golden Eagle, had been found despite an extensive search which enlisted the aid of naval and commercial vessels, aeroplanes and the radio.

Along the great circle course taken by the Dole racers the weather was reported excellent, with a prospect of a smooth sea for three or four days longer.

This, it was felt, might permit the inflated rubber life boat carried by the Miss Doran, which bore J. A. Pedlar of Flint, Mich., pilot; V. R. Knope, U.S.N., navigator, and the woman passenger to remain afloat while the occupants sent up smoke flares by day and rockets by night in the hope of attracting rescuers.

The Golden Eagle with Jack Frost of New York as pilot and Gordon Scott, of Santa Monica, as navigator, was equipped to land on the water and ride out ordinary seas for an indefinite period.

Captain William Erwin hopped off from the Oakland municipal airport for Honolulu at 2.15 p.m. (Pacific time) in the Dallas Spirit to search for the lost fliers.

The Texas ace was accompanied by A. H. Eichwaldt, of Alameda, Calif., as navigator. They carried a radio set to report to surface vessels in case they sighted the planes or any of the missing quintet. The Miss Doran could not remain in the water longer than 24 hours, in the opinion of aviation experts here. This would have put the occupants of the plane out into the rubber life boat about Thursday noon, assuming that the plane cruised until the gasoline supply was exhausted. If it crashed into a forced landing at sea, or soon after it left Oakland the occupants would just have time to escape with their rubber life boat, providing they were uninjured in the landing.

Support Three Persons.

While the rubber life boat carried by the Miss Doran would support three persons in fair weather, it would be a difficult task to keep the boat afloat in a squall at sea, experts pointed out. Carrying two men and a woman, the boat might hold indefinitely in fair weather, however.

The late John Rodgers, who was forced down at sea while flying to Honolulu in 1925 was not found until he had floated about with his crew of four for nien days. Their craft, however, was a seaplane capable of remaining afloat indefinitely.

Twenty-four submarines, the aviation machinery of the United States' army and navy, and one volunteer civilian flier searched the Pacific until nightfall without success. Added to this force were many commercial ships, with the aeroplane carrier Langley, the aircraft tender Aroostook and destroyers that continued throughout the night to scan the vast waters for the missing planes.

No Trace Found.

No word came, however, after hours of cruising along routes far from the steamer lanes, in to the recesses of remote island harbors and deserted beaches. Failure to find trace of the courageoeus airmen more than 72 hours after they put out in the aerial derby gave rise to more intense efforts on the part of searching forces.

Working out of Honolulu, two score of the navy's ships continued their tireless hunt. Hundreds of Japanese fishing boats co-operated with the navy in searching every cove and bend in the Hawaiian islands.

Two submarines reached the west coast of the island of Hawaii and began a systematic search for the floating object said to resemble a plane, which was reported yesterday to have been seen in that vicinity. Two naval seaplanes departed from Pearl Harbor early to-day under orders to comb the coast of Maui for the missing aviators.

Submarine F-29 continued its progress toward San Francisco along the great circle course of shipping followed by the Dole fliers; the mine sweeper Pelican and the naval tug Sunnadin were 150 miles east of Honolulu on a similar course in the search.

Around the various islands of the group cruised other naval vessels. But no word of the two missing planes and their four men and one girl came to cheer the searchers, or the anxious ones ashore.

GOVERNMENT SHIP IS COSTING MORE

Contractor Charges Less For Big Airship Than Ministry Can Make Sister.

LONDON, Aug. 20.—(By Canadian Press).—One of the two airships now being constructed in England is in the hands of a private firm, while the other, the same type, is being built by the Government. The statement that the ship being built by the ministry will cost at least $750,000 more than the one being built under contract, is made by the select committee on estimates in a special report.

The committee report, "The R 100 is being built under contract for £350,000 for delivery by September 30, this year. The R 101 is being built by the Ministry at Cardington. In 1924 this station was valued at £302,000 and was therefore a place of some substance. It was stated in evidence that the construction of the ship would cost something like £400,000."

To this last sum the committee points out must be added £100,000 for the enlargement of the old shed at Cardington and £50,000 for construction of a mooring mast. This means that even when the mooring mast's cost and also a sum of £145,000 for construction of a new shed are excluded from consideration, the cost of the government airship will be about £500,000. The two ships are of the same size.

Safest Safe Fails; $1500 Is Taken Out

LONDON, Aug. 20 (Canadian Press).—Approximately $1,500 in cheques and banknotes was found missing from the "safest safe in London" recently. The safe is the property of the Golders Green Hippodrome and is placed in the outside of the wall in North End Road, facing the pavement. The road is a busy thoroughfare and the safe is in plain view of every passer-by.

There is little doubt that the safe was opened with a duplicate key. Apparently a duplicate of the official key had been made, and the same was opened during the early hours of a Sunday morning.

OLD BUILDINGS GO; LAND VALUE HIGHER

Devonshire House and Other Ancestral Homes Being Torn Down.

LONDON, Aug. 20.—(Canadian Press).—From the sentimental viewpoint it may be regrettable to witness the disappearance of such ancestral houses as Devonshire House in order to make way for blocks of modern flats and offices. From the point of view of an increase in the rateable value of the Metropolis the change is proving beneficial to an astonishing extent.

When Devonshire House was merely the Town House of the Cavendish family its rateable value, along with the grounds, was just over £4,000. The site of the house and garden is now filled with an hotel, a block of palatial flats, and commercial offices, and the rateable value is £80,000—twenty times as much as it was at the close of the war. There is still much of the ground to be built upon, and when this is accomplished it is estimated that the rateable value will have increased to $120,000.

The rebuilding of Regent street and the widening of the Strand are producing the same effect.

WILLIAM LEESON DROWNED AT WORK

Big Locomotive Crane Falls Into Grand Calumet River.

CHICAGO, Aug. 20.—A search was in progress yesterday and last night for the body of William Leeson, 26 years old, of Peterborough, Canada, who was drowned on Thursday when a 40-ton locomotive crane on which he was working broke from its moorings and fell into the Grand Calumet River, just west of Gary. Two fellow workers on the crane at the time with Leeson jumped to safety. It is believed Leeson's body is pinned under the crane at the bottom of the river.

CONVENTION TO COST $500,000

TORY MEETING.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 20.—Reservation applications by hundreds are being received by leading hotels in Winnipeg from delegates who will attend the national Conservative convention to be held in Winnipeg October 11, according to advices received by C. D. Lindsay, secretary. Arrangements are being made by the committee in Winnipeg to secure as much accommodation as possible at all hotels, but it is quite clear that there will not be sufficient for all the 5,000 delegates and their friends, who are coming, and the housing committee is now hard at work arranging for private billeting.

Hon. Robert Rogers is head of the finance committee and the cost of the convention will be close to $500,000, it is stated here.

WINNIPEG WHEAT.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 20.— Failure of predicted frost to materialize in Manitoba on Thursday night, and promising weather forecasts in all three Prairie Provinces, caused heavy selling in the pit on Saturday, wheat being forced down 2 1-8 to 2 3-8c., Oct. at $1.47⅞, Dec. at $1.44 3-8 bid, and May at $1.48¾ bid. Buying power was limited most of the day, although Chicago houses again took fair quantities.

Outside of a fairly good demand for rye, which is still moving from seaboard, there was little of interest in coarse grains trading.

There was little doing in cash wheat, although local shippers got a nibble of export business. Offerings were light.

JONAH COULD HAVE HAD FOUR ROOMS IN WHALE

The picture Rev. Bellah uses to show how the whale swallowed Jonah

HOW THE BIBLE TELLS JONAH'S STORY

Now the Lord had prepared a great fish to swallow up Jonah. And Jonah was in the belly of the fish three days and three nights.

Then Jonah prayed unto the Lord his God out of the fish's belly.

And the Lord spake unto the fish, and it vomited out Jonah upon the dry land.—Jonah i: 17; ii: 1 and ii: 10.

By NEA Service.

OMAHA, Neb.: Aug. 20.—Scientific proof, illustrated by scientifically prepared lantern slides, has been assembled here by a scientist-preacher to prove that Jonah not only could live in the belly of a whale for three days, but that he did.

There was, in fact; room in the great fish's belly for a three-room and bath apartment.

The scientist-preacher who proves this is a Seventh Day Adventist pastor, Rev. C. G. Bellah, who is field secretary for the church in the middle west.

The Rev. Mr. Bellah has assembled all his information preparatory to a lecture tour of his district in which he hopes to convince the world that the Jonah story, just as it comes from the Bible is fact.

Slides Give Evidence.

"It makes my blood boil," says Dr. Bellah, "when so-called wise men say to me, 'Prove it,' when I preach that Jonah was actually swallowed by a whale and spit out again."

Dr. Bellah, nevertheless, can and does prove it, to his own satisfaction, at least.

To visualize his proof, the preacher-scientist has prepared four lantern slides, which will go with his lectures.

One of the slides shows a cross-section of the whale reputed to be eighty feet long. Dr. Bellah has etched in his visualization of the modern three-room apartment which he says, shows the room Jonah had inside his living cage.

Jonah is seated in the parlor, reading with all the comforts of a home. A chair, table, sideboard and stove occupy the kitchenette and a bed and chair the imaginary bedroom.

In another of Dr. Bellah's slides he shows how Jonah was tossed out of the ship and how he looked just before he was devoured by the sea monster.

In the third slide, Jonah is seen paying his fare preparatory to going on board ship. Slide four shows Jonah being cast upon the shore by the whale.

How Pastor Proves Theory.

His chief proof, however, is the allegedly true story of one James Bartley, the modern Jonah, who was swallowed by a whale and lived to tell the story.

M. P. Courbet, writing in Cosmos—a magazine published in Paris, calls attention to a report that was presented to the Academy of Science by M. Joubin, furnishing proof of concrete cases where the sperm whale caught by whalers had actually swallowed animals, taller and heavier than man.

"The Bible story," says M. Coubert, "is perfectly confirmed by the facts of these points." He then furnishes the concrete case of a man who was swallowed by a whale and lived to tell the tale.

"In the month of February, 1891, the whaler, Star of the East, launched two whale boats with an equipment of men to pursue sperm whale that was observed at some distance.

"The huge creature was harpooned, and wounded to death. While it was in its last agonies one of the whale boats was struck by its tail and shattered in pieces. The sailors who were in the boat were thrown in the water; all but two were later rescued. The body of one was recovered, but the other, that of a man named James Bartley, could not be found.

"When the monster had ceased moving and it was quite certain that it was dead, it was hoisted alongside the ship and the work of cutting it up started.

"A day and a night were devoted to this task. When it was ended the stomach of the whale was opened.

And There He Was.

"What was the surprise of the whalemen to find in it their lost comrade, James Bartley, unconscious but still alive.

"They had much trouble in reviving him. For several days he was delirious, and could not speak an intelligent word. Not until three weeks had elapsed did he recover his reason and he was able to narrate his impressions.

"'I remember very well,' said he 'the moment when the whale threw me into the air. Then I was swallowed and found myself enclosed in a firm, slippery channel, whose contractions forced me continually to slide downward. This lasted only an instant. Then I found myself in a very large space, and by feeling about, realized I had been swallowed by a whale, and that I was in his stomach. I could still breathe, though with much difficulty. I had a feeling of unsupportable heat and it seemed as if I were being boiled alive.

Tanned by Gastric Juice.

"'The horrible thought that I was doomed to perish in the whale's belly tortured me and my anguish was intensified by the calm and silence that reigned about me. Finally I lost the consciousness of my frightful situation.'

"James Bartley, the English papers added, is known as one of the hardiest fishermen at the trade. But his experience in the whale's stomach was so terrible that he was required to undergo treatment on London his return there.

Nevertheless his general state of health was not seriously affected by his accident. The only effect was that his skin was as if it were tanned by the action of the gastric juice.

"The captain of the Star of the East adds that cases where furious whales have swallowed men are not rare, but that this was the first time that he ever saw the victim come out alive.

Dr. Bellah Comments.

'Our theologians who have discarded the scriptural narrative of Jonah and the Whale as a literal account, have treated it as an allegory to be told to little children as bedtime tales for entertainment will have to find some other explanation now in order to stand in with real science," says Dr. Bellah. REGATTA HELD AT M'CRACKEN'S

Many Entries For All Events—Canoe Sailing Race Becalmed.

CLOSE COMPETITIONS.

STONEY LAKE, Aug. 20.—The annual regatta at McCracken's Landing took place on Thursday afternoon, August 18th, with a large crowd present. The weather, which had been rather threatening in the morning, cleared, and was ideal for water sports as the clouds prevented the glare of the sun on the water. From 1.30 in the afternoon boats could be seen coming from all directions loaded with eager young people and their parents and friends, all interested in the events of the afternoon.

The one drawback was the lack of wind for the sailing races, the dinghies, which got off first did not fare so badly, but the canoes were becalmed for the best part of an hour. Of the five entries only two finished under sail, the others became discouraged and paddled home. The dinghy race was very good. Six entered and all finished. Like a flock of great white birds, they started, making the prettiest of all the races.

A long swim from the dock at "Emerald Isle" to the Government landing at McCracken's, a distance of one-third of a mile, brought out ten entries, four of them being girls. All the entries finished in good time. This was one of the most interesting of all the races. The entry list was good and, in proportion to the spectators, the largest in the district for the season. Nine entered the crab race and eight in the men's single canoe. Four crews entered the men's fours, four crews entered the tilting and the tug-of-war. The mixed tandem canoe race was one of the best, with nine entries, and a very close finish.

George Guillett gave a speed boat exhibition with his "Water Baby IV.," and also towed the aquaplane which several young men demonstrated with success.

The tilting, which was the last event, had a finish which was almost a draw, Richie Stubs, who is a past master of the art, and Bob Beal, who was so close a second that the spectators were not certain till the prizes were awarded which man had won. Bob put his foot through his canoe, and he and his paddling partner, Jack Ridpath, were gradually submerged. The contest ended in a hearty handshake and, gentlemen both, the two winners walked arm in arm to receive the prizes. It was an exhibition of good sportsmanship well worth seeing.

In the canoe fours one of the boats manned by McElhiney, Gemmell, Merrett and Roberts capsized soon after the start, causing a mild sensation.

The judges were Messrs. H. E. Ringle, C. H. Porter and T. H. Jones. J. O. McCarthy was the announcer, and Donald Myers the starter.

McCracken's scorns to use a gun to start its events, and is the only regatta on record which can boast of a cow bell as the unique means of announcing the events. McCracken's regatta is a family affair in which nearly all the contestants are well-known to the crowd, and no one lacks the spur of a little personal applause, and one can't help but feel that in that lies the secret of its popularity, for there is no room for any but good feeling and friendliness.

3, Duffus brothers, —. McFarlane and W. Gordon.

The prizes were presented in front of Mr. Choate's store immediately after the regatta by Mrs. H. E. Ringel in her gracious manner. A special prize a handsome manicure set, was presented by the committee to Miss Graham as a recognition of her work.

The ceremony closed with singing the National Anthem, and three cheers heartily given for Mr. and Mrs. Ringel, two popular members of the summer colony, who hail from Cleveland, Ohio. Mr Ringel is chairman of the Regatta Committee and A. F. Choate the secretary.

The committee speak with pride of the fact that no one is asked to contribute to the regatta fund. It is purely a voluntary matter, which each year has proved successful.

RETAIN YOUR VIGOR

This Can Only Be Done by Keeping the Blood Rich and Red

If you would regain your vigor and ambition, keep your blood and nerves in good condition. Anaemia, or thin blood lowers the vitality, starves the nerves and causes a general run-down condition. When the blood is thin the skin loses its color, the shoulders droop and weight is lost. The victim of anaemia loses appetite, suffers from indigestion, headaches and sleeplessness, and is nervous and exhausted after slight exertion. If you have any of these symptoms do not delay but begin treatment now with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and you will be gratified with the prompt improvement in your condition. Among the thousands who have found new health through the use of this medicine is Mrs. Herbert Nagle, Ludlow, N.B., who says:—"I had not been feeling well for some time and was gradually growing weaker. I would take dizzy spells and often faint. I was subject to severe headaches and found it hard to do my work. I took doctor's medicine for some time, but it did me no good and I was still growing weaker. In this condition I began the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and in a short time found they were helping me. I continued the use of the pills for a while longer, and found that the trouble that had bothered me was gone and I was once more a well woman."

Get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills at your druggist's or write The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., and the pills will be sent post paid at 50 cents a box.

WILL MAKE SUN WORK.

Uncounted billions of potential horsepower are going to waste each day, he says, because the sun's rays are not used.

SYNTHETIC GASOLINE.

If pedestrians have been hoping that the supply of gasoline would soon be exhausted, and garage men, if they ever thought of it, hoping just as eagerly that it would not, they will both be interested in the news that the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey has acquired the German secret of synthetic "gas."

The German Dye Trust extracts crude oil and gasoline from coal by the Bergius process, and will place their product on the market by the end of this year. An experimental plant now operated at Merseberg in the heart of the lignite deposits is declared to be a success.

Reports from Berlin estimate that production next year will reach 100,000 tons of refined liquid fuel. The world is said to be on the threshold of a new fuel era, and the often predicted failure of the gasoline supply is shoved centuries into the future. By-products of the crude oil from the refining process may be utilized to produce by synthetic methods every known coal-tar product.

The discoveries in this field of chemistry are considered to be more marvelous than inventions which enable rapid strides in the development of radio, other uses of electricity, and also in airplanes.

HEALTH A PARAMOUNT CONSIDERATION.

Canadians have done so much to improve the health of the community that they will read with interest the opinion of Colonel A. E. Gooderham, President of the Connaught Laboratories, that public health work is only at its beginning. Colonel Gooderham believes that much more can and should be done and that it is essential that the whole body of citizens should co-operate with the doctors, dentists, nurses and interested persons who hitherto have acted as pioneers in such matters.

Science has labored to some purpose to make it possible that every child should have a sound mind in a sound body. But the community has not kept pace with the scientist. Many measures that would prevent disease or remove healthidestroying conditions are being overlooked because the public lacks vision and a realization of the evils that should be remedied.

It is not enough that citizens should vote, pay their debts and live in a wholesome fashion. Patriotism and the spirit of altruism should lead them to take a close, personal interest in social hygiene and in all those matters of outlook and environment that affect the moral and physical well-being of the individuals that compose the nation. If they cannot take an active part in public health work they should find a way of giving practical support to those who are so engaged.—Toronto Star.

SAYS CANADA SETS PACE.

"We have a powerful, energetic nation north of us, and are glad of it", writes Arthur Brisbane in the New York American. "The Canadians are good pace-makers.

"Canada has more miles of railway per capita than any other country in the world. Canadian farmers produced 15,000,000 bushels of wheat sixty years ago. They produced 410,000,000 bushels last year.

"In 1900 Sir Wilfrid Laurier made this prophecy, 'the nineteenth century belonged to the United States; the twentieth will be Canada's century.'

"The more Canada gains, the better we shall be pleased.

"American farmers will be interested to hear that, in Manitoba, Canadian farmers control wheat export in a big 'pool' handling 200,000,000 bushels. The exporters that raised no wheat but got the profit have lost control, and farmers are getting a bigger price for their wheat. Perhaps our farmers will learn something from Canada.

"Everything is coming Canada's way, including the best selection of energetic, valuable immigrants from Europe, the kind this country needs but stupidly keeps out.

"The twentieth century should produce enough for curselves and our neighbor Canada has one advantage, she knows Great Britain is building airplanes, intending to rule the air as she has long ruled the water.

"And unlike ourselves, the Canadians needn't wonder what would happen to their prosperity if war broke out."

NEW ADVERTISING IN AN OLD FIELD.

The man who sets out to build his first house soon realizes that he has much to learn of allied crafts which he has probably always taken for granted. And he becomes commensurately grateful for every scrap of practical advice and guidance he gleans along the way of his experience.

To encourage and meet the needs of aspiring home-builders, the manufacturers of a patented building material are directing an extensive advertising campaign to the preliminaries and essentials of the tenan't undertaking.

These advertisements go back to the problem of financing the work, knowing that many young married couples hesitate at the very outset because of vague misgivings and lack of knowledge of the financial resources and expedients they can command in their efforts to join the landlord class. Where there is knowledge and confidence there should be intelligent action, and such action means purchases of the manufacturer's fabricated building material.

This advertising appears to be a helpful and praiseworthy service, a real constructive service not a mere merchandising that misappropriates an honest but much-abused word .

It also indicates the possibilities of intelligent advertising campaigns that go to the root of selling problems. Imagine the old-time lumberman advertising sashes and doors and scantlings, not to mention the modern idea of getting business by the psychological approach.

These manufacturers of patented building material know that competition fo rthe inelastic dollars was never so keen as today, that the home instinct is as dee pand strong as ever, perhaps, but that it is inhibited by a general impression o fthe excessive cost of building. Hence the new note they sound in their advertisemntse.

Prhaps they will inspire others to attempt to break away from the dullness and stupidity of so much patter that passes for potent, "pulling" advertising today.

CALL THE POLICE.

Residents of Smith Township who are suffering from the depredations of sneak thieves are ill-advised in not laying definite complaints before the Provincial constable.

As regards efficiency and integrity, the Provincial Police of Ontario compare very favorably with any other similar body of men on this continent; but they are not mind-readers, and it is too much to expect of them that in addition to running evil-doers to earth they should be called on also to uncover by means of a kind mental legerdemain the silent docile sufferers at the hands of the lawlessness.

Fear of refrisals from thugs or desperadoes usually lies at the root of the reluctance of law-abiding citizens to state their grievances to the police. Some years ago a number of farmers in Smith suffered considerably through the thieving popensities of a hired man in the neighbourhood. Practically all the losers of poultry and grain had a conviction, amounting almost to knowledge, as to the identity of the plunderer, but no steps were taken on account of the apprehension of the sufferers that damage to their property would inevitably follow prosecution on a charge of theft.

In most cases such fears are groundless. Arson is one of the most serious offences listed in the Criminal Code. The police have their own ways of keeping vigil on the movements of suspected characters. A hint from a farmer that he had reason to fear the results of a midnight visit of revenge to his barn would be sufficient to ensure the keeping of a watchful eye on one who showed signs of being a menace to society.

Not only does a man who finds himself the victim of the activities of chicken thieves owe it to himself and his family to inform the police, but it is also incumbent on him for the sake of the community. It is probably safe to say that the orgy of crime lately revealed at Beeton began with petty pilfering, which unchecked and unchallenged extended its sway, covering with its mysterious terror a whole community, until the heroic fight of a lone, brave man dragged the hideous thing out into the light of day and discovery.

Men who through dislike of publicity or through baseless fears of evil consequences allow the lawbreaker to pursue unmolested his nefarious labor are preparing the way for the subversion of law and order, which means everything to any civilized nation.

THE MEANING OF THE MONARCHY.

The crown as an institution has become visible to Canadians through recurrent visits of the Prince of Wales. And, indeed, this visibility is now an important factor in sustaining the commonwealth of the Britannic nations. Language, history and culture we hold in common with a large part of the United States, though recent traditions and history have differentiated them from us. The steady growth towards complete self-government within the British Dominions has now reached a point where nothing unites us politically but the crown.

The crown is not quite the same as the King. The King is a person, while the crown is an institution. The central factor in our government is an absolutely continuous reality—the crown. This continuity is realized, not in a casual succession of persons, but in a family or dynasty. It is easy to poke fun at ideas and insist that we come to reality only as we touch persons. But the fact is that the education of the expectant king is precisely a process by which he achieves such a personality as will make him a representative institution. Monarchy vested in a royal family expresses continuity as well as change. Electoral headship gives change without continuity. Absolutism in royalty may approach the same condition. But even in absolute monarchies the dynastic sense is so vivid that the feeling for continuity, and the sense of trusteeship for a living whole, dominates the monarch of the moment.

The Prince of Wales is thus among us, not merely as the son of the reigning king, not merely as an individual who will be king, but as the visible presence of the dynasty which in its successive generations serves to embody the successive and universal phases of the commonwealth. Even in the constantly changing form of the institution of the crown, we find epitomized the changes in the political fabric of the commonwealth.

The Revolution of 1688 is now being undone in one or two of its most important features. That revolution established the supremacy of Parliament so as to base the tenure of the throne upon a parliamentary title. This has had serious results. Together with the rise of the party system and responsible government, it involved the rule of the overseas dominions by Downing Street. The British Cabinet, which was in fact and form a committee responsible to the British Parliament, had authority over the dominions. We are now returning to a sounder constitutional policy. The crown no longer administers the dominions by British ministers, but by the King's personal representative and his own ministers. Thus the crown has become something other than an institution governed by and co-ordinated with the British Parliament. The crown represents the whole commonwealth, and is the only form in which the commonwealth becomes visible.

This suggests another phase of our life which gives rise to controversy. As the King's council has in history been differentiated according to legislative and judicial functions, this led in time to a further differentiation between courts which administered British law and those which represented the King, not as King of Great Britain, but as King of the dominions. Gradually there came into being the present Judicial Committee of the Privy Council which determines cases according to the law of the particular part of the overseas dominions which is concerned. The Privy Council's Committee advises His Majesty to dispose of a certain appeal in a certain way. Any suggestion that in going to the Privy Council we are subjecting Canadian courts to a British court is mistaken. We are appealing directly to a Canadian court which is, however, a Canadian court only as Canada is part of the Commonwealth. The Privy Council in its Judicial Committee represents the crown as the bond of the commonwealth, and it includes among its judges supreme experts from the several benches.

To leave all this suggestive but important reality which is also symbolism invisible would be dangerous. Periodic visits of the members of the reigning house serve to bring us face to face with facts.—The New Outlook.

MONTREAL GRAIN AND PRODUCE.

MONTREAL, Que., August 20 (Canadian Press). — The export trade in Canadian grain on the Montreal market yesterday was inactive, there being only a small demand from foreign buyers.

A moderate amount of business was worked in oats in the domestic market, and prices were steady.

The feature of the flour trade was the easier tone that developed for spring wheat grades, and prices were reduced twenty cents per barrel. This was attributed to the reduction in the prices of wheat at Winnipeg.

Prices for winter wheat flour were well maintained under a fair demand.

The undertone to the market for shorts and middlings continued strong owing to the good demand and the small supplies offering. Bran was quiet and steady.

Extreme dullness marked the cheese trade, and prices ruled steady. Receipts were 3,960 boxes.

The demand for butter showed no improvement, and prices were again inclined to be irregular. The receipts were 2,435 packages.

The egg trade was dull and featureless. Prices were unchanged. The receipts were 832 cases.

CHICAGO GRAIN.

CHICAGO, August 20 (Canadian Press). — Wheat showed a heavy undertone yesterday, and prices declined gradually with the market closing near the bottom for the day. Scattered liquidation started early, and became general later, with stop loss selling a factor. At the finish, wheat showed a net loss of 1¾c to 2½c; corn declined 1c to 1⅝c; oats were ⅝c to 1⅛c off; and provisions 7½c to 10c lower.

Weakness in the Winnipeg market, following reports of more favourable weather conditions over the Canadian North-West, with a forecast of fair and warmer on both sides of the international line did much to send Chicago wheat prices to lower levels. The easier tone in Liverpool, following advices of improved condition in Europe, also acted as an incentive to sell.

Observers here, however, are finding more or less frost and rust damage in Saskatchewan, but little credence is placed in these advices because previous reports from that province indicated the district will produce an extremely large crop, despite the frost. Threshing is making fair progress in the American North-West, and is getting well under way in the early districts of Canada. Northern Alberta is regarded as safe from frost. Corn was affected somewhat by the weakness in wheat and there was some selling based on a forecast of fair and warmer weather over the belt. Crop comments were less pessimistic, although the crop is admittedly late over a wide area. Failure of outside buying to develop helped to lower values.

Progisions were easier on scattered selling.

LADY LAUDER INSPIRATION OF SIR HARRY'S LOVE SONGS

Scottish Comedian Was Intensely Devoted to His Late Wife.

HAD GREAT INFLUENCE

Aided Him in His Development From Poor Miner to Wealthy Entertainer.

LONDON, Aug. 19. — (Canadian Press.)—Lady Lauder, wife of the world-famous comedian, died somewhat suddenly after an operation in a Glasgow nursing home. Sir Harry, whose devotion to his wife was intense, was prostrated and was compelled to take to his bed. Their only child, Captain John Lauder, was killed when serving in France with the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders.

Lady Laurier had travelled all over the globe with her husband. With him she had been feted by kings and presidents, and through it all she remained one of the most kindly-hearted and unaffected of women.

Annie Vallance was a humble lass in Hamilton when Harry Lauder, the "halflin' loon" from the Arbroath spinning mill, became a miner and subsequently her husband. She worked in a flax mill at an early age, earning 4s. a week, and it was while she was attached to the Salvation Army that she met Harry Lauder.

They began their married life in a poor miner's cottage, until Harry, with a "soiree" reputation as a comedian behind him, resolved to try his luck on the concert platform.

While he travelled round she lived on in Hamilton on a wage of 30s. a week, on which she had to maintain herself and their boy John. And it was she who consoled him and sent him out afresh when he had been compelled to return to the pits as "a stickit' comedian," which was his mate's jibe for a failure. Then he made his name. She was the inspiration of his love songs, and often helped to write his greatest successes.

It will be recalled that when Sir Harry broadcast for the first time he told his hearers how his wife would be listening-in. And, before closing, he said: "Now listen here, sweetheart, I am coming north to Glasgow to-morrow night. Mind you are there to meet me."

A Thought For To-day

TURN THESE THOUGHTS OVER.

Hundreds are writing me and asking for advice on the way to win, while I daresay that the most of my friends are wasting the very thing that can make them win.

Now what is the only thing that you can call your own, and even this will be gone before you reach the end of this paragraph?

It is the rolling, never resting thing we call TIME. The swift, silent, ghostlike thing that vanishes as soon as you seem to see it.

The time-wasters are the ones who stab their own success in the back.

Now let's turn these thoughts over and see what can be found on the other side.

You seem to feel that Time is going, but Time never goes. Time stays—You go. Time never began and it will never end. Think that over.

Each time your heart beats a wound is struck at your life. Each hour you waste you subtract from your success.

Youth squanders Time. Middle life wishes for more time. Age appreciates the fact that it is futile to try to bring back what is lost forever.

And now I have your mind exactly where I want it.

If you are wishing and working to make a lot of money, you are simply struggling for something that Time will take from you.

If you are ambitious to achieve, that you may help the helpless, and be of service to others, your Time will be extended in eternity.

If you are working for money success, you are a failure so far as Time is concerned.

FROM $4 CLERK TO "BIG FOUR"

Sir Josiah Stamp's Rise in Few Years Remarkable Story.

IN RAILWAY WORLD

LONDON, Aug. 20 (Canadian Press)—Behind the announcement that Sir Josiah Stamp has been elected a director of the London, Midland and Scottish railway lies a story of the romantic rise of a boy clerk in a Government office, earning $4 a week, to one of the pinnacles in the business world. He will succeed Sir Guy Granet as chairman next October, while retaining his position of president of the executive of the company.

Sir Josiah's appointment is all the more interesting from the fact that 18 months or so ago he was in no way connected with the railway. That in so short a space of time he should become not only the head of the L.M.A., but one of "Big Four" in the railway world, is a tribute to his genius as an organizer and a statistician.

Sir Josiah, who is only 47 years of age, entered the Civil Service in 1896 at the age of 15½ as a boy clerk in the Inland Revenue Department.

Before he was 18 he obtained first place in the competitive examination for the second division clerkships, and was appointed to the Marine Department of the Board of Trade. He then earned the modest salary of £70 a year. Soon afterwards he was transferred to the Inland Revenue and at 19 was assistant surveyor of taxes.

In 1914 his own department recognized his remarkable abilities by appointing him, over the head of a hundred other officials, first-class surveyor of taxes. Two years later he was made assistant secretary to the board, an appointment he resigned in 1919 to become a director and secretary of Nobel Industries, Ltd.

Colleagues who have sat with him on various commissions, including the famous Dawes Commission, spoke of him as "our encyclopaedia." He is a man with a passion for facts.

When a reporter spoke to him about his new appointment, he said: "I cannot tell you what I have done. If there is anything worth telling, I must leave that to others. It is true that I have put in a new organization on the L.M.S., and it is now working smoothly."

TRIP UP RIVER INTERFERED WITH

Delay At Lift Locks Cause Of Some Complaint.

Those who took in the water trip up the river yesterday and over the Lift Locks were quite disappointed at the long delay in getting over the Locks. Sailing into the lock at 8.30 and getting out at 11 o'clock marred the pleasure of quite a number on the boat, and kept many American cars at the locks for the two and one-half hours to see the boat go over.

The reason given was the water was shut off at Nassau ,but Mr. Killaly being out of the city on canal business, it was impossible to learn the exact cause to-day.

STUDY OLD WHITE RACE IN ORIENT

TOKIO Aug. 20.—Delegates at a recent scientific congress in Tokio evidenced considerable interest in the origin of a white race now living in Japan, where it seems to have preceded the present yellow race.

Isolated now on the islands of Hokkaido, the race called Tinos, still have a manner of living and a language which show them to be descendants of primitive white men.

The Tino is no taller than the Japanese, but is heavier. His skin is white, though swarthy and his hair is thick and wavy. The eyes do not have the Mongol slant. Some scientists believe them to have come originally from Europe, others associate them with the Polynesians.

The tuna fish originally was caught only as a means of protecting the schools of sardines, which were devoured in large quantities by the tuna.

Feathered Facts And Fancies

CURIOSITY AID TO LEARNING

Pupils Teach Themselves in New School at Cambridge.

LONDON, Aug. 20 (Canadian Press).—There are many kinds of schools for the young in this world. But a "different" one is the Malting House School at Cambridge. There the main idea is to use the force of curiosity for the development of thought and knowledge. The children within invisible limits are allowed to do what they like. There is a multitude of things which the child loves to play or work with—things which would be forbidden elsewhere. There are workrooms, carpenter's shop, and a garden. And there is a sandpit which can be flooded; also a climbing apparatus in which the children can be as agile as monkeys.

Above all, this school has animals. The children pet them and look after them. One of the animals died and they wanted to know why. Quite naturally the children cut up and "looked inside" the dead creature; and this became the first of a series of cuttings-up in which the children discovered that some animals have bones and some have not.

Another instance of the way this school works is the see-saw. Two children are not necessary, for beneath it are hooks on which weights can be hung. The child experiments with the effect of the weights at different distances from the centre, and does not know it is at the beginning of problems in mathematics and physics. From the see-saw to the ordinary weights and scales is a simple transition.

The school's score of pupils are unusually intelligent children, the offspring of professional people in Cambridge. Some of the pupils remain at the school through lunch time, and concoct their own menus. Hence they must write a list for the cook, and may add to the joy of learning to read and write by using the typewriter while the necessity of keeping within the financial allowance per head entails the use of arithmetic. Certain pupils started quite young, before they were three year of age, in fact.

The success of the experiment naturally depends on the skill with which the force of curiosity is guided, especially through that period when the child's curiosity changes from "what is happening" to "what will happen next?" Hence the directors provide varied equipment to ensure acquaintance with a fact at the moment of its interest.

There are teachers, of course. A good deal of interest was roused when the school recently advertised for another teacher, because it was set forth there was need of a teacher who should be a scientist of the first order; and who should not so much teach, as introduce children to science and scientific method. Environment is made the main factor in teaching. It is sought to restrict it however, so that the education of the child shall follow well-defined paths.

The experiment has aroused a good deal of interest in Britain and educationists are eagerly waiting for definite results.

It is claimed the bodies of locusts contain a high percentage of nitrogen, phosphoric acid, and potash.

Lyrics Of Life

(By Douglas Malloch.)

JUST DIRT

Something black on Father's shirt.
"Goodness me, what's that?" "Just dirt."
Isn't that just like a man?
Get them tidy, if you can,
Watch their laundry, clean their ties,
No one else would otherwise,
Then beneath a car they crawl,
"What's that spot?" "Just dirt, that's all."

Water's not a bit of use,
Tons of soap won't get it loose;
And a rag and gasoline
Only seems to turn it green;
Dynamite won't take it out,
But it's nothing to worry about.
Father gives that grin of his,
"It's just dirt, that's all it is."

When I think of all the days
I've fought dirt, and all the ways,
All the years I've had to rub,
Sock and boil and scrape and scrub,
Just like every other wife,
If you asked me, "What is life?"
All that scrubbing I'd recall,
And I'd say, "Just dirt, that's all."

Uncle Wiggily

By Howard R. Garis

To-day's Bedtime Story

(Copyright, 1927, McClure Syndicate.)

UNCLE WIGGILY AND THE JOLLY LOBSTER

Uncle Wiggily was sitting on a cushion of dried seaweed at the shore of the ocean one morning, when, all of a sudden, the rabbit gentleman felt a tug at his coat tails from behind. Having just hopped from the summer shell cottage where he was spending his vacation at the beach, Mr. Longears wanted rest and quiet for a little while. So he gently said:

"Hop away, Baby Bunty. I can't play with you now. And I can't go adventuring."

"This isn't Baby Bunty," spoke a laughing voice.

"Well, Jingle or Jangle, Tumble or Bumble, Scooter or Tooter—whoever it is, please hop away," begged Uncle Wiggily, not bothering to turn around to see who was pulling his coat tails. For the rabbit wanted to watch the ocean waves to make sure they did not roll up the sandy beach far enough to wet his toes.

"Please hop away," begged Uncle Wiggily.

"I'm neither Jingle nor Jangle, nor Tumble nor Bumble nor any of your little rabbits!" chuckled the voice.

"Who are you then?" asked Uncle Wiggily in surprise as he turned. He saw a queer creature with big, pinching claws, much larger than those of the crab. The creature had a flippy sort of tail that folded beneath him.

"I am the jolly lobster!" said Uncle Wiggily's new friend, and the rabbit gentleman knew the lobster was a friend, though those big claws could pinch very hard if need be. "Yes—Ha! Ha! I am a jolly lobster, and I want every one else to be happy! Ha! Ha! Let's hear you laugh! Ho! Ho!" he begged the rabbit.

Now Uncle Wiggily really had nothing at which to laugh. And, though he was as good natured a rabbit gentleman as you could find if you traveled up hill and down dale for a week and a half, still he did not see how he could laugh, chuckle, snicker, giggle, chortle, guffaw, burst out or do any other things which, in cross word puzzles, mean to show merriment.

But still, you know how it is, when you hear any one else laugh and they tell you to be jolly, whether you see anything funny or not, you just naturally give way to mirth. That's what Uncle Wiggily did, and soon he and the jolly lobster were laughing away there together on the beach as if they had read a thousand funny papers.

The rabbit gentleman laughed until the tears came into his eyes, and the lobster chuckled until his hard shell claws rattled like dried peas in a tin pan, until at last Uncle Wiggily asked:

"But why are you so jolly, Mr. Flip Tail? What are you laughing at?"

"That's just it," answered the pinching creature from the sea. "I haven't a thing to laugh at, which makes it all the funnier that I should be tickled. Ha! Ha! Isn't that the best joke you ever heard of?"

And though Uncle Wiggily could not quite see it, he had to laugh again, especially when the lobster pinched him gently in the soft ribs. But at last the rabbit asked:

"Surely there must be some one thing that strikes you as funny to make you so jolly. Can't you think what it is?"

The lobster thought for a moment and then said:

"Well, how's this? A friend of mine, another lobster, wants to be red in color, instead of the dark green we lobsters always are. He thinks red is mush more stylish. He saw some red lobsters once in the window of a lobster palace and he has been wanting to be like them ever since. So today he is going to turn red and I have to laugh when I think of it."

"But look here!" suddenly cried Uncle Wiggily, "does your friend know that the only way a lobster can turn red is to be boiled in hot water?"

"Yes, he knows that," answered the jolly chap. "That's another funny part of it. 'Ha! Ha! Ho! Ho!'"

"Yes, but say!" cried Uncle Wiggily, much excited. "Does your friend know that if he lets himself be boiled so he can turn red it will kill him and he will never be stylish or anything else any more? Boiling makes lobsters red, it is true, but it kills them. Does your friend know that?"

"Why, no, I don't believe Bill ever gave that a thought!" said the jolly sea creature. "It probably never occurred to him. And by this time he is most likely in the pot. He said he'd be boiled about 9," and the jolly lobster looked at his watch. "It's nearly that now."

Uncle Wiggily jumped up from the bunch of seaweed. "Come on!" he cried to the pinching chap. "We may be in time yet! Let's try to save Bill from being boiled!" They hurried off down the beach together, and what happened next will be told in the story after this which I am going to name Uncle Wiggily and stylish lobster.

PLANES LIKE LINDY'S ORDERED FOR JAPAN

COMMENDATION FOR BOARD OF WORKS

A Suggestion Where a Dangerous Spot Can Be Remedied.

The Board of Works of the City Council has probably ironed out more street and pavement difficulties this year than has been done for a long time. Little annoying holes in the street, bad crossings, such as Charlotte, Simcoe, and Hunter Streets, the corner of Monaghan Road, and Charlotte Street, and numerous other defects that have been remedied could be mentioned.

It is just possible the C.P.R. crossing on George Street ,through representation made to the company, will be made passable in a short while.

All the above is appreciated by a citizen calling at The Examiner this morning, who wished to give a suggestion to the Council, and did not know where to drop it.

The lady states she sprained her ankle once previously on the bad spot at the corner of Brock and George Streets, and that this morning she tripped and turned her ankle at the same spot.

Possibly the Board of Works has this corner in mind for early attention, and if it has there is one lady who will be extremely grateful.

WHAT'S DOING ON CHARLOTTE STREET

Options Being Taken On a Number of Properties.

During the past week a gentleman was in the city seeking options for a client on a number of properties on the north side of Charlotte Street, Rubidge Street West to Pack Street. He secured options on several properties, and intimated in case the purchase was completed the buildings would be torn down, and modern buildings erected.

Just for whom or for what purpose could not be ascertained.

The body of the normal person has about 620 muscles. One-fourth of all the muscles are in the neck and face.

Judges and Referees Appear At Session

NEW YORK, N. Y., Aug. 20. — (United Press). — All referees and Judges in the Metropolitan District have been ordered to appear before the Tuesday meeting of the New York Athletic Association by William Muldoon, veteran member of the body, to discuss the "fouling evil." Muldoon believes that unless something is done to solve the problem, the art of fighting will be lost.

Since the debated Paolino Delaney bout several fighters have refrained from hitting body punches because of the danger of being disqualified for hitting low.

YE OLDEN DAY.

BELFAST, Ireland, Aug. 20.—The recent discovery of two ancient sun dials in Ireland are said to prove that daylight saving was in vogue hundreds of years before the twelfth century. The old Irish hour varied, the daylight hour in midsummer being 80 minutes, in winter 40 minutes.

FRENCH TRADE.

PARIS, Aug. 20.—During the first nine months of 1926 France's trade with other countries aggregated 39,243,000 francs for imports and 36,297,000 francs for export. Trade with colonies of her own amounted to 5,048,000 francs for imports and 6,411,000 for export. The visible balance shows a deficit of 2,946,000 francs for foreign trade, while trade with the colonies shows a surplus of 1,363,000 francs.

The Low-Swung Body

with no loss of headroom or road clearance

McLAUGHLIN-BUICK for 1928

THE dream of every automobile manufacturer—to build a body low swung for beauty and for road-ability, without loss of head-room or road-clearance—has become reality in McLaughlin-Buick for 1928.

McLaughlin-Buick engineers achieved this lower effect, not by the makeshift of smaller wheels with their increased tire wear, but by a complete re-designing of bodies, and by an entirely new and exclusive principle, the double-drop frame. The tallest McLaughlin-Buick now stands but 70 inches high, yet McLaughlin bodies are roomier than ever before.

As you lounge in McLaughlin-Buick's comfort-tailored seats, you sit deep inside the car, with plenty of room above your head, and plenty of leg-room and shoulder-room as well.

Moreover, you experience this comfort over any roads, at any speed. For McLaughlin-Buick's lowered centre of gravity increases McLaughlin-Buick's wonderful riding ease—and Hydraulic Shock Absorbers, front and rear, give it even greater smoothness.

And the low-swung body plays its part in the enthralling beauty of McLaughlin-Buick's Fisher bodies, for it adds an expression of fleetness to their fashionable grace.

See the low-swung body as McLaughlin-Buick builds it, and you will see at once why McLaughlin-Buick is the industry's accepted leader in beauty, luxury, performance—and especially in value.

EFFICIENCY AND ECONOMY SOUGHT BY NATIONAL REVENUE HEAD

Hon. W. D. Euler Has Re-organized this Important Branch of Government.

OPERATES IMPARTIALLY

Drastic Action Taken by New Minister to Correct Many Abuses Found.

By MARTIN LIVINGSTON

Now that the Department of National Revenue of the Dominion of Canada has clearly demonstrated a definite improvement in efficiency in the comparatively short space of time it has been under the administration of Hon. W. D. Euler, it is fitting to consider the basic policy which is responsible for the smooth reorganization being accomplished in this highly important division of governmental activities.

A thorough personal analysis of the department itself, and of the chief characteristics of the Minister who heads it, convinces me beyond a doubt that it can be summed up in a few words—the department has been removed as far as possible from politics and placed upon a strict business basis.

In no other department of the government is there greater need for a business-like administration, for the Department of National Revenue is the all-important source of the Dominion's income. In fact, aside from the comparatively limited revenues derived from the postoffice department, it is practically the only income-producing branch of the government. All other departments are concerned only with the spending of national monies. But the Department of National Revenue, embracing as it does the Customs, the Sales Tax collection and the Income Tax collection, furnishes probably nine-tenths of the funds with which the vast machinery of the national government is kept running.

A Business Institution.

After all, the government is, strictly speaking, a business institution operated on a stupendous scale, and resembling in many ways our great mercantile enterprises which are co-operatively owned. The citizens of Canada are the stockholders, and, at the same time, comprise the great majority of the government's "customers" in the sense that the Dominion derives most of its income from them. In place of merchandise, as citizens we buy service from Canada, Limited, and pay for it in the form of taxes and duties. It stands to reason that, like any successful business enterprise, Canada must collect its bills. If it does this efficiently, the country has enough income to meet its expenses, and to pay its citizens "dividends" in the form of national improvements of various kinds. And, too, this same efficiency can increase the revenues to the point where they will exceed the governmental expenses, in which case the citizens can benefit again through lowered "prices"—reduced taxes.

Following out this idea, the Minister of National Revenue is the credit manager or collection manager of the business institution we call the government. If his department is lax and permits the government's "customers" to evade the payment of their bills, or to take illegitimate discounts, the great national business suffers. To meet its expenses the business, like any mercantile institution, must increase its charges—or taxes and duties—to those citizens who do pay their bills to the government legitimately.

Thus we find that you and I are directly interested in knowing that the Department of National Revenue is tending to business efficiently, and performing its duties impartially. We see that if we pay our sales taxes and customs duties as business men, as well as our income taxes as individuals, and everyone else does the same, the revenues coming from the natural increase in national prosperity must quickly reach a point where taxes can be reduced, and we are directly benefited.

On the other hand, if we pay our proper duties and taxes, and through government laxity, our neighbors or competitors are able to evade theirs, then we are at a disadvantage. Not only does it then become likely that taxes will remain unchanged or be raised, to make up for this loss of revenue, but as business men, we realize our competitors who do not pay their proper taxes and duties have an illegitimate source of profit which gives them a distinct advantage over us.

Therefore everyone is vitally interested in having the Department of National Revenue function efficiently and impartially. Efficiency can only be achieved with business-like administration; and impartiality, of course, means the elimination of politics and political favors.

Policies Followed.

Those were the guide-posts which confronted W. D. Euler when he was chosen to take over the Customs, or Department of National Revenue as it is now known. They were the policies which he decided must be followed to successfully reorganize the important department placed in his charge. The Customs department had given cause for criticism for years; it had been charged with playing politics, conferring special favors, condoning under-valuations of imports, laxly refraining from the enforcement of sales tax and income tax collections, and with sufficient inefficiency to invite scandal. The government administartion realized that drastic action must be taken, and looked around for a big enough man to handle the job. Matters were in such chaotic condition that very few capable men were willing to tackle it, for it looked like a thankless and hopeless undertaking.

Very likely Premier King's selection of W. D. Euler was due in a great measure to his long personal knowledge of the latter's characteristics and personality. They were both born in Waterloo county, Ontario, and were intimately acquainted. The Premier has undoubtedly had ample opportunity to watch the career of Billy Euler from a farm boy to the high station of Member of National Parliament. He was thoroughly cognizant of the shrewdness and integrity which had marked the success of his friend Euler in his various business enterprises and he knew the qualities of determination, common sense and fairness which had carried the farm-boy through to the culmination of his boyhood ambitions—a seat in Parliament. So it is not strange that when it came to picking a man to assume the disheartening task of putting the Customs Department in order, he knew instinctively that W. D. Euler "had the goods."

Mr. Euler took hold of the job with the understanding that he would have the thorough co-operation of the Premier and of Parliament—and he got it. The Premier gave him a free hand to reorganize as he saw fit; Parliament voted the appropriations he found necessary to ask for in order to have the department function properly, and also made possible the changes in the customs and tax laws which he recommended for efficiency and enforcement. They backed him up in every way because they had already learned to have utmost confidence in his sincerity and ability.

Despite his active part in politics, and his years in public life, W. D. Euler has never been a politician. There is a marked distinction, and he has none of the qualifications of your professional politician. He is an intelligent, matter-of-fact, business-like speaker, but not an orator. He has a strong sense of national pride, but never has been what is termed a "flag-waver." He has a host of friends of long standing in his own constituency, and a proportionately large number in government circles at Ottawa, yet he has never been a "glad-hander." He has always gone about the discharge of his duties without flourish, and with his eye on the main issue—results; and always without a taint of playing to the grandstand. He still is mentally embarrassed to some extent by praise and is ever inclined to dodge accolades, even when he knows they are deserved.

With the insight into his character, it can readily be seen that in administering the affairs of the Department of National Revenue, there would be no overshadowing influence of politics, either in the selection of personnel or in the granting of special favor which would in any way violate the intended impartiality of the customs and tax laws. He showed his fairness by recognizing that a large portion of the department employees were honest and capable, and that for every one who had to be weeded out of the service, there were many others who were worthy and dependable. Instead of making wholesale changes in personnel, he gave every employee an opportunity to show his worth. The misfits and bad eggs soon came to light and were rapidly replaced with applicants who were chosen solely on their qualifications for the work.

Three Branches.

When Mr. Euler found that the efficiency of the department required that a good deal of the authority formerly centered in the Minister should be delegated, he arranged to divide the department into three branches, one assigned to Customs, another to Sales Taxes, and the third to Income Taxes, with a commissioner as executive head of each division. This created openings for appointments of Commissioners, and it was characteristic of the Minister that on the basis of efficiency qualifications, he actually selected two men who were of the opposing political party, for these important posts.

It is probable that the comparative speed with which reorganization and increased efficiency has been accomplished, is due in a large measure to the promptness with which the employees throughout the department realized that the man at the helm was sincere and meant business. This was especially noticeable in the Customs division, for the men found that when they checked up violations, they got prompt action from headquarters, and their cases were not sidetracked or quietly forgotten. There was a speedy improvement in departmental morale all along the line. Trustworthy employees were encouraged when they found that the few dishonest ones were promptly prosecuted.

In the Sales Tax and Income Tax divisions, steps were taken without delay to collect back taxes. When Mr. Citizen and Mr. Average Business Man realized that the credit manager of Canada, Limited, was sincere in his intention to carry out the terms of the tax laws, and was doing it impartially, they felt much more inclined to meet their tax obligations, and the revenues soon reflected the change in sentiment by substantial increases. Changes in the tax laws, making it possible to charge interest on back taxes overcame a deterrent to prompt tax collections; for previously, with no interest to pay on arrears, some business men had been letting large sums of back taxes accumulate, and were virtually letting the government be their banker.

Curbing Smuggling.

In the customs branch, a business-like analysis showed the Minister that the main abuse was commercial smuggling, and that to curb it a more effective preventive force was necessary. This has been organized with a Chief at Ottawa, and the Dominion divided into several districts. The men are equipped with swift motor cars, airplanes and speed boats, and the records of the department include the reports of several daring captures. Already the amount of commercial smuggling has been greatly reduced, and it is likely that many engaged in the nefarious practice simply abandoned it for other pursuits because they saw that there was no chance to get away with anything under the present administration of the department.

Another lax feature in the Customs division which is being overcome in the matter of undervaluation. Much of this was due to the lack of expert appraisers in the past, and these are now being added.

The Minister showed his hand unmistakably in the matter of excise taxes, when he took a definite stand in the collection of taxes on liquor in the famous Chris Moeller case at Vancouver. The ship of that name, with 17,000 cases of liquor aboard, valued at about $300,000, was seized by the customs authorities because it violated clearance papers by docking at Victoria after clearing from Vancouver, for San Blas, Mexico. Evidence showed that the cargo was not really going there, and that the owners were evading the excise tax on the liquor. Mr. Euler made it clear that the department was purely interested in collecting its tax, and had no intention of acting as a guardian for the United States in the latter's attempted enforcement of its prohibition laws, except insofar as treaty between Canada and the States required. The definite stand caused a rapid cessation of the evasion of liquor taxes which had been going on.

Petty evasions of these taxes which had occurred mainly at lake and river ports close to the United States border, were also largely eliminated by putting into effect a $400 fine for false clearances. Previously there were any number of men with small motor boats who would load a few cases of liquor and take out clearance papers for distant ocean ports, when obviously their craft would not take them further than across the lake or river. The present extent of the fine is such as to eat up any possibility of profit for the petty violator, and most of them have gone out of business.

What, then, have been the results of businesslike, non-political policy of Mr. Euler in administering the affairs of the Department of National Revenue?

The Commission which has just finished investigating the Customs Department reported some time ago that the practice of commercial smuggling appears to have been largely discontinued.

The total of 2000 business concerns who were in arrears on sales taxes eight or nine months ago, has been reduced to 1500 or less, and proper legal procedure has been taken against over 500 of these, while over 300 more are in liquidation.

More Income Taxes.

Up to the first of June, over $3,000,000 more in income taxes were collected than in the previous year's similar period, despite a ten percent reduction in the rate of tax.

At the present rate of increases in total collections for all these branches of the department, it will collect from $25,000,000 to $30,000,000 more than a year ago, during this first year of Mr. Euler's administration. Last year the total revenues collected were about $300,000,000, so that the expected increase will run close to ten percent, notwithstanding a twenty percent reduction in Sales Tax and ten percent reduction in Income Tax.

It was characteristic of Mr. Euler that until he could report actual results, he made no public statements, no predictions and no promises other than he would do his level best. He went directly about his business of putting the department on an efficient basis, and "sawed wood" until the results spoke for themselves. He has commanded thorough respect of his official associates and his subordinates, and despite the nature of his department's contact with the citizens, he has achieved a country-wide public approval and respect which is clearly reflected in the almost unanimous favorable comment by newspapers in every corner of the Dominion, upon himself and his work.

It is only a short time, less than a year, since he started on the big job, and it is already whipping into shape. When I interviewed him a month ago in the massive, grey-stone building which houses the Department of National Revenue, he confessed he was really enjoying the "battle." And that means that all the widespread praise and recognition of his accomplishment will mean but little to him compared to the deep satisfaction of knowing 'it's a "hard job well done."

Hon. W. D. Euler, Minister of National revenue, who is in charge of the collection of customs duties, excise, income and sales taxes.

British Birthright Chosen By Mother

LONDON, Aug. 20.—(Canadian Press).—If a child is born of a Brazilian mother in a British ship and the father is Spanish and the birth takes place in Brazilian territorial water what is the nationality of the child?

This question had to be settled on board the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company's liner Arlanza which reached Southampton. Senora Jose D. Cruz, a passenger, became a mother while the vessel was in Brazilian waters. After certain investigations it was claimed that the child, a boy, could be either Brazilian or British, and the mother elected that her son should be registered as British. He was therefore christened Jose Arlanza the second name being after the ship.

All births on British ships at sea used to be registered at Stepney, in East London, but now they can be registered at the first British port of call. All births at sea are recorded in the ship's log, and upon the vessel reaching port the captain must report the matter to the Board of Trade, who in turn, inform the Registrar-General of Shipping.

The latter afterwards passes on the matter to the Registrar-General, who enters the details in a special book known as the Marine Register Book.

Skin Is Now Clear Had Disfiguring Eczema

Two letters which tell how Dr. Chase's Ointment has cleared the skin of Eczema.

It is not unusual for people to use pleasant smelling salves and lotions for diseases of the skin with the idea that they have medicinal value. This is of course a mistake.

Dr. Chase's Ointment is a medicinal preparation which is composed of the most effective ingredients known to science. For this reason it is looked upon as the standard treatment for eczema and similar skin troubles.

Mrs. Sadie Weid, Lennoxville, Que., writes:—

"My little sister's face was all covered with eczema, which even spread to her ears and was just a mass of running sores. We tried several kinds of salve, but without success, until we saw in Dr. Chase's Almanac several testimonials upholding your Ointment as a relief for eczema. After using a couple of boxes, she was entirely free from sores and thanks to the Ointment, her face is left without any disfiguring scars."

Miss Clara Yates, Bolton Centre, Que., writes:—

"I had very stubborn little sores on my face, for which I used Dr. Chase's Ointment, when the sores entirely disappeared. Dr. Chase's Ointment is the only ointment I would dare to recommend. I have also used the K. & L. Pills, which I found very beneficial."

EMPIRE LOST 250,000 MEN BEFORE YPRES

Those Commemorated at Menin Not All Whose Graves Are Unknown.

DEADLY BATTLEFIELD.

Site of Memorial Was Always Within Range of German Artillery—Nearly Captured.

YPRES Aug 20 (Canadian Press).—The deadliest battlefield of the whole war is that terrain, now smiling and peaceful, which rolls away from the Menin Memorial Gate. The gate has just been dedicated by Field-Marshal Lord Plumer to the memory of 56,000 British dead who lie in nameless graves in "the Salient."

The gate now stands in massive simplicity astride the Menin Road as it crosses the moat and enters Ypres It is sumounted by a stone lion that faces Menin, even as the British faced for four years, the battering of the German hosts. On its sides as the traveller passes through and under are huge panels, and on the panels are carved in alphabetical order the names of the 56,000, among them more than 7,000 Canadians.

The long columns of names in black are most significant evidence of the warfare that went on for four years in the sodden wastes of the Salient. They are not all the dead whose graves cannot be located; many thousands more are commemorated at Tyne Cot, for instance. A quarter of a million soldiers of the Empire died in barring the roadway for four years to the Germans who, once through, would have had an almost unobstructed pathway to the Channel ports.

For four years the battle raged before the gate—a phantom gateway then. Through that gateway the Canadians went to St. Julien, there in April, 1915, to make their famed stand against the first gas attack. The enemy, never more than five miles from the gate, approached within less than a mile in the spring of 1918. Only the intense British offensive of September, 1918, removed the relentless pressure.

It is said that the millions of Empire soldiers who fought in the little Salient went through the gate to face the German hordes. Actually, in the daytime, it was a place to be shunned; even in the night, it was used sparingly. For, every hour of the day and night throughout those four year, the gate lay within range of and under fire from the enemy's guns.

From this gate you look out on a farmland stretching to distant ridges From outside, you look into an old town that is now; even the ruined Cloth Hall loses some of its antiquity in the maze of scaffolding that surrounds and supports it.

During the war, you would have looked out on a grey waste, besotted with shell holes; holding 10,000 men of whom not one could be seen; marked by bursting shell and, at night, ringed in flame. You would have looked inside on a wrecked town, dominated by the ruined Cloth Hall tower.

From the gate stretched the Menin Road, a ghastly highway. Pockmarked with shell, not a square yard but had its tale of death; not a square yard that, riddled with shrapnel and rifle bullets; reeking of asphyxiating gas, had not cost, of British and German together, more lives than there were stones in its make-up.

Somewhere at the end was Menin. The maps said it was thirteen miles away. It might have been in the remote fastnesses of Siberia, for all the British Army could tell. The road led not to Menin but to death A mile along its dreadful length lay Hellfire Corner; another mile away was—or had been—Hooge. From the summer of 1915 to 1917, and again in 1918, our front line lay this side of Hooge.

Beyond again, to right or left, were the series of woods which saw more dead than they ever had trees. By Chateau Wood the road ran past Sanctuary Wood and Stirling Castle on the right, past Dumbarton Lakes, and Glencorse Wood and Noone Boachen and so to Polderhoek—8,000 yards on which the battle ebbed and flowed for four years.

It was not until after the Canadians had struck on August 8, 1918, between the Somme and Peronne Road; until September, that the tide flowed outward from Ypres. Then at last from the Menin Gate British soldiers went along the Menin Road—to Menin. It was as a fairy tale come true.

MISTAKES MOTHERS MAKE IN CARE OF LITTLE ONES

Many mothers give their children solid foods at too early an age and say proudly that their babies "eat everything that grown-up people do." Such a course is almost certain to bring on indigestion and lay the foundation of much ill-health for the little one.

Other mothers administer harsh, nauseating purgatives which in reality irritate and injure the delicate stomach and bowels and at the same time cause the children to dread all medicine.

Absolutely no meat should be given to a child until it reaches the age of 18 months, and then only if approved by the doctor. For medicine, all strong, disagreeable oils and powders should be abandoned and Baby's Own Tablets given instead.

Baby's Own Tablets are especially made for little ones. They are pleasant to take and can be given with absolute safety to even the new-born babe. They quickly banish constipation and indigestion, break up colds and simple fevers and make the cutting of teeth easy. They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

CROP REPORTS.

This past week has been a busy one on the farms all over the Province. Generally speaking, the weather has been ideal for harvesting and the crops to be handled have been heavy. In some cases second crop alfalfa yielded about as much hay as the first crop. Alfalfa seed, however, will be scarce. Ontario has harvested the best hay crop in years. Fall wheat threshings show that the yield is not as heavy as expected, selling at $1.25 to $1.30. Apple growers have received another severe blow, orchards all over the Province being attacked by aphis. This is unfortunate in view of the unfavorable experience of fruit growers last year from a different cause. Corn seems to be making better growth. Considerable attention is being given to the weed problem and much plowing has been done with the object in view of destroying weeds. The campaign against weeds is resulting in much work being done not only in the fields, but on the road sides and waste places.

Algoma—Haying is practically completed under very favourable conditions. Farmers report a good crop. Some plowing has been done for fall wheat, but the ground is very dry and difficult to work.

Brant—Those who had alfalfa fields have excellent second cut. Supplies of milk for local supply are being fairly well maintained, but there seems to be a fairly keen demand for dairy cows. Most threshing outfits are busy on alsike. There does not seem to be as much demand for help.

Dufferin—Generally the hay crop has not been better for many years. The wheat, rye and barley promise a very fair yield. Oats are filling well and will give a very large yield. There is a slight appearance of blight on the oats, but will not affect the yield more than 15 per cent. in the worst appearing fields. Both oats and mixed grain will give an exceedingly high yield this year if the weather continues favorable for the next week or ten days.

Dundas—Splendid growth is taking place on late fields of grain. Fields which a month ago appeared hopeless now promise a good deal. Corn is making rapid growth, but much of it cannot hope to reach maturity.

Durham—Plowing for fall wheat is fairly general and many weeds have been killed this past week with cultivation.

Prohtenac—Vegetable growers report that the prices have been very satisfactory for all kinds of vegetables. Potatoes are selling at $1.50 per bushel. The supply of small fruits seems to be practically over. Insect pests seem to be very much more prevalent this year. Aphis have been extremely troublesome. The tomato stock borer has also affected about 20 per cent. of the crop.

Grey—During the past two weeks at least 2 carloads of agricultural heavy horses have been shipped out of the county. Prices are comparatively good. Hay all off. An exceptionally heavy crop. Wheat all cut and a large percentage of the barley cut or ready for cutting.

Haldimand—Fall wheat and alsike are not yielding as large as the crop of straw would indicate, probably due to dry hot weather at the time the seed was filling. Alsike is yielding 2 bushels per acre in some sections, and in others is not worth threshing.

Halton—Entomologists this week discovered the Mexican bean bettle around Burlington and Oakville. This is the first year this pest has been found in Ontario.

Hastings—There is very little rust on grain crops this season. Ideal harvest weather has prevailed. Haying and harvest are being carried on in unison this year.

Huron—There is already quite a demand for feeders. A number of men have reported giving orders for carlots of feeding cattle for delivery at almost any time. Considerable amounts of commercial feeds are being purchased even at high prices. Everywhere everyone speaks of the good crops. Corn is perhaps the poorest prospect.

Kent—A report from an Harwich farmer, a member of the Field Crop Competition in Banner Oats, shows an average of eighty-seven bushels per acre from a five-acre field. Potato digging has retarded with the lowering of the price. The yields are running from one hundred to one hundred and seventy-five bags per acre, with the price slightly over a dollar a bag. The present prospects are for a bumper crop of sugar beets.

Lambton—A large acreage of red clover is being left for seed production.

Lanark—Young cattle, lambs, cheese and cream are the chief products being marketed at the present time, cheese selling this week at 13¾c.

Lincoln—Peaches sold on the market at from 60c to 70c per 6-qt. basket, plums at 40c and pears at 50c.

Middlesex—Potatoes are turning out a medium crop. Prices on market are $1.50 per bag.

Peel—Alfalfa bloom continues to drop and many fields originally intended for seed are being cut for hay. Few fields will yield over 3 bushels per acre in contrast to 8, 10 and 12 bushels yields during the past few years.

Simcoe South—Alsike yielding from 3 to 6 bushels. Beekeepers are busy taking off the light honey and report from 25 to 50 per cent. heavier yield than last year.

Temiskaming—More farmers are realizing the value of after harvest cultivation as a means of control of weeds, and while visiting several parts of the district during the week, several farmers were either plowing or cultivating.

SAINT and SINNER

By ANNE AUSTIN

Faith Hathaway, watching her husband anxiously as he studied the portrait that George Pruitt had painted of her and Cherry's baby, saw an amazing change take place in Bob's face. The scowl was ironed out slowly; his narrowed eyes widened, as if to make room for the loveliness that they beheld. His hands, which had been clenched ever since he had caught sight of George Pruitt kissing Faith's hand, relaxed, and his mouth lost its grimness, quivered like a girl's threatened with tears.

Bob's chest rose on a great, shuddering sigh, but when he turned at last from the picture he was smiling, boyishly, delightedly. And his hands went out swiftly to Faith, grasped hers in a crushing grip.

"It's marvelous, darling! The real Faith! You've done a wonderful thing there, George. No wonder you are proud of it, and grateful to my wife for having furnished you the inspiration. I don't see why you fool with wholesale groceries when you can paint a picture like that."

"Thanks, old man," George grinned, laying his hand for a moment on Bob's shoulder. "I'll tell Dad you said that. He has a big respect for your judgment. Well, I'll be off now. Mind if I leave the picture here for a day or so?

"I'm afraid I'd resist with force if you tried to take it away tonight," Bob laughed. "But you're not going now. You're having dinner with us, of course.

"If my staying won't inconvenience Faith," George agreed.

A little later when they were seated at the dinner table, Cherry, who had changed hastily from her "business" dress to a lovely, frothy frock of palest green chiffon, demanded eagerly of George:

"When you exhibit the picture, are you going to give the names of your models, George?"

"Probably, in a program note. The picture will be called "A Modern Madonna," you know, but when the models are not professional it is customary to tell who posed," George replied.

"Then we've got to name the baby!" Cherry cried. "You can't just say, 'Mrs. Robert Hathaway and infant niece,' can you? You know, George," she explained, her lovely little face cocked on one side, provocatively, "we haven't been able to decide on a name for the midget yet. I'm afraid she's nicknamed for life. Wouldn't it be a joke on her if she grew up into a great big girl—like Faith, for instance?"

Faith flushed, but George saved her the necessity for a reply. "I would ask nothing more for her than that she should grow up into an exact replica of her aunt. But I'm afraid she's going to continue to deserve her nickname, since she obviously 'takes after' you."

"I think you're horrid!" Cherry flamed, while Bob laughed aloud. "Don't you really like small girls—like me? It's the fashion to be little. I only weigh ninety-five pounds," she added proudly.

"I'm afraid that, as an artist, I'm not particularly interested in the fashion," George told her imperturbably. "I like a woman to look like a woman. But about the baby's name——. Since your own name is really Charity and we have Faith here, why not name the midget Hope? I imagine your mother would be pleased," George added cunningly, for he knew, as did everyone else, that Cherry had loved her mother passionately.

A shadow passed over Cherry's bright face and her golden eyes were instantly suffused with tears. "I hadn't thought of calling her Hope, but Muggy would be pleased. Hope Wiley," she tried the name out musingly.

"There is another reason why the name appeals to me," George said gently. "The midget should typify hope for you, my dear, a hope that in her you will be justified for having lived your rather strenuous young life.

"Thanks, George!" Cherry interrupted him sharply. "I'm not a back number yet. I'm not just living in my daughter! But—I'll call her Hope. I think it's sweet," she admitted, her voice softening.

DRESS

By MARY MARSHALL

For summer evenings white has no rival. This frock is of white chiffon with a pink rhinestone belt and pink and rhinestone flower—the only trimming. The slippers are of pink, pearl-finished kid.

The simpler the better seems to be a rule that holds true for evening frocks—or rather the better the dressmaker the simpler he or she dares to make an evening frock. I might add—the better a woman's figure the more willingly she may wear one of these amazingly simple evening gowns.

Whether white especially becomes you or not you cannot go far wrong to wear white for evening this summer. I have seen a number of very smart black evening frocks this summer, but just at present the black evening frock seems to be just a little out of the picture. White takes first choice—with pale pastel hues a close second. Our blacks and deeper, more sophisticated colors may come back in full force with autumn and winter, but while summer lasts the light soft shades seem to reign for evening.

Decidedly tanned neck and arms and shoulders are more and more taken as a matter of course among our young women nowadays. When women first began to wear tan as a matter of fashion—and frankly gave up trying to remain pale skinned on a summer holiday—evening dress always offered a problem. There was something startling about the area of pale untanned skin below the V or oval of neck not covered by the bathing suit. But now no evening frock attempts to be more decollete than the bathing suit and the untanned patches remain invisible.

There is something charming about our tanned-skinned young beauties in evening dress. It is after all only a prejudice that makes us feel that all blondes must be white skinned. I have seen girls with gleaming golden hair and blue eyes whose skins would be white if unexposed to the sun, which now has turned a lovely shade of rosy gold. It seems incongruous at first, but quite charming when you get used to it.

The wives and daughters of the blonde vikings of old must have had skins like that, for it is only when constrained to live in the shade that the Nordic becomes really white skinned.

The modern young woman, especially the fashionable young woman, spends her days in the open, and when she passes a few hours of the evening indoors to dance she rather glories in her sun-tinted skin. But she should remember that with the various shades of tanned skin black is not particularly becoming—and that is perhaps the reason why you have seen so few black evening dresses at the resorts this summer.

Appliquee roses cut from six-inch ribbon form the trimming on a charming little French overblouse recently brought from Paris. I will be glad to send you the pattern for these roses with directions for using them on the blouse if you will send me a self-addressed, stamped envelope.

—MARY MARSHALL.

HOROSCOPE

The Stars Incline, but do not Compel.

(Copyright, 1927, McClure Syndicate)

SUNDAY, AUGUST 21, 1927

This is one of the days when inaction is best, according to astrology, which find the stars adverse in their influence.

Under this sway there may be an inclination to quarrel with fate and to nurse the spirit of discontent. The mind should be disciplined and destructive thoughts should be cast out.

This is a day when attendance at church should be most comforting and inspiring. It is a rule under which preachers should be comforting in their messages to humanity.

Because of the tendency toward pessimism, supposed to be encouraged by this configuration there may be less harmony than usual in families, for parents may be dictatorial and exacting.

While the young are subject to the best possible general direction of the stars this is read as rather an inauspicious day for them.

Love affairs are subject to rather a sinister sway, making for quarrels and misunderstanding.

This is not a lucky day for the culmination of summer romances. It may be disappointing and thwarting.

Many marriages are forecast for the autumn when there will be a trend toward matrimony that is less likely to be transient than present-day divorces indicate those of the past have been.

All the signs, as read in the heavens, appear to presage a reaction toward morality and right-living, a preparation for supreme national test, it is prophesied.

Attention will be directed toward wise treatment of the insane and the scientific prevention of mental diseases.

Lack of power and virility on the part of the younger men of affluence is to become a subject for serious study that will place on women the onus of responsibility, astrologers foretell.

Hospitals now will be of wide interest and many will benefit from bequests, which are meant to prevent disease as well as to cure it.

Persons whose birthdate it is may be too much concerned with pleasures for their own good in the coming year. They have the augury of sudden gain.

Children born on this day probably will be bright and unusually charming children.

(Copyright, 1927, McClure Syndicate)

MONDAY, AUGUST 22, 1927

Again sinister stars dominate in this configuration, according to astrology, which finds the aspects threatening.

It is not a lucky day for traveling and summer tourists will be wise to linger longer at seaside or mountain resorts.

Under this planetary government persons who hold control of business or political offices will be safe, for continuance in any kind of executive position is indicated.

Business matters of every sort should be conducted with great care while this rule prevails and it is wise to defer the expansion of any enterprise.

Astrologers stress the fact that American prosperity is to continue, but they advise conservative methods, since unusual events are presaged.

Public expenditures are to be increased because of necessary government projects, the seers point out, and they foretell tremendous progress for the United States.

It is well to beware of entrance to a quarrel while this rule of the stars continues. Litigation may be most unfortunate.

Romance still remains under a forbidding rule that appears to presage disappointment and disillusionment.

Women should postpone all business engagements until a more propitious sway prevails.

This is read as rather an unlucky wedding day, since the tendency to quarrel and to go separate ways is foreshadowed.

New clothing is to bring new problems in the autumn, it is foretold, for modes are to change to costlier lines.

Possibilities of increased commerce with South America again are foretold.

Persons whose birthdate it is haev a promising outlook for the year, which should be satisfactory in a financial way.

Children born on this day may be decided in their characters and a bit difficult, but conscientious and able to succeed.

HINTS ON ETIQUETTE.

1. Should one eat cantaloupe with a fork or spoon?
2. How should one hold corn-on-the-cob while eating it?
3. Is it permissible to eat French fried or shoe-string potatoes with the fingers.

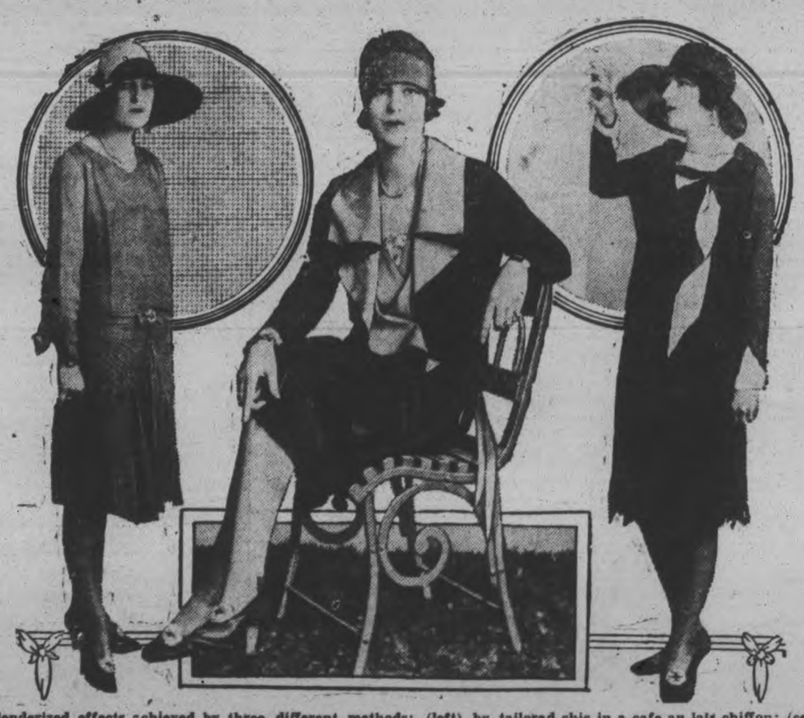
The Answers.

1. Fork.
2. Hold cob by end in right hand.
3. No.

HOW ABOUT VICTIMS?

ASHBURY PARK, N.J., Aug. 20.—Flag-pole sitters, gum chewers, coffee drinkers and others who claim freak championships can take a few lessons from Ed Gordon, local barber. He claimed the world's championship for hair-cutting when he clipped 34 heads in six hours.

'TIS HARD TO GOWN THE FULLER FIGURE CHICLY



Slenderized effects achieved by three different methods: (left) by tailored chic in a cafe au lait chiffon; (centre) by a coat dress designed with contrasting collar and revers and (right) by dark color, in a navy georgette with distinctive white touches.

BY HENRI BENDEL

For NEA Service.

NEW YORK, Aug. 20.—This is undoubtedly an age of youth. That being the case, certain types of women have their own troubles in finding suitable apparel.

First and foremost come those older women, the ones who, as they approach the middle years, incline to stoutness. What shall they choose, in this day of flat flappers, that will give them the dignified appearance they require and still bear some semblance to the straight line silhouette?

In the first place let them choose dark colors. When fashioning a street dress for a fuller figure reaching life's meridian, I always select blue or black in preference to reds, yellows, or other gay colors, and I select cream georgette lace instead of flesh or white to fashion her a party frock.

Slenderizing Lines.

Secondly, all emphasis in trimming should be vertical. Tucks running up and down are preferable every time to tiers, ruffles and flounces. Pointed yokes excel round or square ones. Jabots or trimmings, when possible, should have pointed ends.

Thirdly, contrasting material, when introduced should inevitably fashion a panel from neck to hem-line or in some way break the width, never the length. And all-over figured materials should ever be the small-patterned type—not the splashy flowers that tend to emphasize size.

Fourthly, one-piece models are the best.

I show today some of my most successful interpretations of slenderizing styles for the more mature figure.

The first is a dressy frock, one that owes its slenderizing effects to the manner in which hand-tailoring perfects sheer chiffon. It isn't in the least tailored looking. Yet it relies entirely on tiny hand-tucked design for trimming.

Brown chiffon fashions it, that becoming cafe au lait light shade, and its entire waist is tucked. The sleeves, too, to form a generous puff at the elbow, while a tight cuff counteracts any tendency the puff might have to suggest size.

Smart tucks swathe the hip-line, with their fullness rippled out in front to form an effective cascade. The belt is finished with a rhinestone buckle which dresses up the frock with its sparkling chic.

French Touch.

A Reboux hat in pink and red gives a distinctly French touch to the costume.

Next I show a dark georgette frock for street wear. It is a navy Molyneux creation, effectively trimmed with white. Fullness is achieved by inverted pleats at front and both sides which are inserted where the pointed hemline turns up.

The pointed way to chic is also sponsored by the odd little white yoke, the white cuffs and the white-tipped ends of the scarf which is a capelet in the back. The slightly bloused bodice of this frock is held in place by a silken corded belt which ends in a small sash on the left hip.

Pearls, of course, enhance a dark costume that features white trimming. And a sheer hat, with a touch of feather ornament gives a daintiness to the frock that a fuller figure appreciates.

Becoming Coat Dress.

The third frock I display today is, in my opinion, the epitome of success for this special type oh woman. For it is a coat dress. And the coat dress can give dignity and svelte lines more easily than any other style.

Vionnet designed it, using black flat crepe in a heavy, luxurious quality. Most ingeniously does its deep collar fold into graceful revers that fail away to display a vestee of crepe with a tiny touch of flesh colored lace.

The tan flat crepe faces the entire front width of the skirt and the sash that ties the frock shut. The back and front widths of this costume are fitted snugly to the hips, in order to give a slight blouse to the top. The sleeves are plainly tailored.

Because this coat dress does slenderize its wearer, she can choose a small hat. But most women who figures incline to fullness should invariably house a hat with a bit of brim.

CODE INSTALLED

— — a scientific method which makes Warm Air Canada's most satisfactory heating system

SCIENCE has applied to warm air heating that final touch which makes it vastly superior to any other form of heating. Haphazard installation—the defect which has long held back the warm air furnace—is now removed.

No longer need we rely on guesswork to supply our home comfort. Today, the correct methods of installation have been reduced by scientists to an exact formula known as the Standard Code. Now, a McClary's Sunshine Furnace, installed according to Standard Code, guarantees to the home an unfailing abundance of warm, moist, circulating, healthful heat—"seventy degrees in every room in sub-zero weather".

Ventiblast

The Ventiblast is an exclusive feature of McClary's Sunshine Furnace, which burns soft coal equally as well as hard coal or wood. It mixes pre-heated air with soft coal gases and converts them into flame—thus eliminating soot, waste and dust. This remarkable feature ensures you an ample fuel supply every winter, regardless of a possible hard coal scarcity.

McClary's are the only Canadian members of the National Warm Air Heating and Ventilating Association—a body of leading manufacturers who have adopted this scientific code for installing warm air furnaces. To be sure of getting a "Code Installed" job, fill in and mail attached coupon. We will send you name and address of the nearest McClary's dealer, who will guarantee a "Code Installed" heating system which will give life-long satisfaction.

Cogs and Crescents Deadlocked in Final Tussle

PLAY TIGHT GAME FOR 6-6 TIE THIRD GAME OF LEAGUE FINALS

Billingsley Replaces Mein on the Mound in the Fifth Frame.

ERRORS COSTLY.

Teams To Play in Final and Deciding Game on Monday.

Fifteen hundred wildly excited fans saw Crescents and Cognawagas deadlock the third game of the East Peterborough League finals last evening, when the teams played six innings to a 6 to 6 tie. The final and deciding game will be played at Exhibition Park on Monday evening commencing at five o'clock.

In order that the fans be given the facts of what was taking place when Umpire LeBarr was approached in the sixth by representatives of the league and the teams, it might be stated that the league secretary suggested to the umps that in the event of the game ending a tie, he announced to the crowd that the deciding game would be played on Saturday afternoon. Then the secretary was approached with the suggestion that the teams agree to the game being called, but this suggestion was not accepted. With the seventh innings underway, Umpire LeBarr used his own judgment and called the game on account of darkness. Later, the teams agreed to play the deciding game on Monday.

Last evening's contest had a thrill in every frame. Mein, who beat the Cogs Wednesday evening, found a second assignment not so good, and after they had tied the score in the fifth, with one out and a runner at third, Jack Billingsley was called to the mound. Billingsley met all requirements by fanning Delahaye and Mackness. The big fellow got into a bad position in the sixth with second and third occupied and none out, but he recovered nicely, and struck out Prest, Crary and Cripps in a row. He was scored on in the seventh, when he hit Rooke and balked, and was touched for a double by Wilson, but as the game was then called, the tally didn't count.

Vannest had a hard time of it in the second when Scully doubled, and Corbett tripled. He passed F. Jones and Mein, and hit LeBarr for two runs, and a third tally counted on Ranger's infield out. The Crescents went after him again in the fourth and a pair of errors helped in scoring two more runs. Vannest, however, was pitching a strong game in the fifth and sixth when only one runner got on.

First Innings

Crescent called the toss. Press leading off for Cogs, popped back of second, Ranger getting the ball but failing to hold it. On Crary's grounder to the box, Prest went out at second. Cripps sacrificed and Rooke fouled to the catcher.

Jack LeBarr beat out a hit down third. J. Jones fouled to Prest and Ranger walked. LeBarr, who had stole second and third, scored as Kenneally grounded out, Wilson to Rooke.

Second Innings

Ranger took Wilson's fly. Delahaye hit into right, and stole second and third. Mackness walked. Weese singled to score Delahaye. Vannest was passed. Mackness scored as Prest grounded out. Crary fanned.

Scully doubled, and Corbett went one better with a triple to score Scully. Both batsmen hit the ball far into right field. F. Jones and Mein was passed and when Vannest hit LeBarr, Corbett was forced in. J. Jones popped to Wilson. Ranger's infield out to Rooke, scored F. Jones. Kenneally grounded out, via Crary.

Third Innings

Mein, tossed out Cripps and Rooke Wilson walked and was thrown out trying to steal second.

Barry lined out to Rooke, who seemed to be in the right spot for every ground ball from the left hand hitters. Scully and Corbett were struck out this time.

Fourth Innings

The Cogs evened the count. Delahaye ground out to the pitcher. Mackness shot a duster through Corbett, and Weese cut one across second. A short passed ball advanced the runners. Vannest doubled between Freddy and Joe Jones for a long drive to score Mackness and Weese. Vannest went out on a throw from the catcher as he tried to steal third. Prest fanned.

Crescents forged ahead again. F. Jones singled down short and made second when Wilson threw high to first. Mein grounded out, and LeBarr was safe, on Crary's fumble. Joe Jones singled into right, scoring F. Jones and LeBarr, and then went out at third on a throw from Delahaye, the play off the hit having been made to the plate. Ranger hit into right and Kenneally grounded out.

Fifth Innings

Cogs came right back to tie it up. Crary looped on over short for a safety. Cripps filed to middle, Joe Jones dropping the ball after a run Crary made third and scored on Rooke's grounder to first. Wilson doubled to score Cripps. Billingsley relieved Mein and he fanned Delahaye and Mackness.

Crescents couldn't get going again. Barry lined out to Rooke. Scully made Crary go up to stab a hot drive, and Corbett filed to Cripps.

Sixth Innings

Weese was passed and Vannest singled into middle. They advanced on a passed ball, but got no farther as Billingsley whiffed the next three.

F. Jones fanned, Billingsley flied to Mackenss, LeBarr singled into right and J. Jones popped to Crary.

HASTINGS LOSE 12-3 SCORE TO CAMPBELLFORD

Win Right To Meet Winners of East Peterborough League.

HURLERS GOOD.

CAMPBELLFORD, Aug. 20 — Backed by excellent support, Christie, pitching for Campbellford, led his teammates to a 12—3 victory over Hastings yesterday at the former town, thus earning the right to meet the winners of the East Peterborough League, in a fixture to be played some next week.

This game brought a record attendance, and the fans were certainly not disappointed in the game which was not so one-sided as the score would indicate. Up to the seventh, Hastings had not been able to score a single run, but here luck changed for the moment and gave them two tallies. Here is where the pitching form of Christie was highly tested. With three men on bases, and two out, the Campbellford hurler came through and fanned the third man.

The hopes that Hastings had raised when the two runs were scored were deadened when Campbellford retaliated and came back with five counters.

L. Scriber, hurling for the Hastings nine, had good control; and fanned eight men, but his team lacked the power of the willow that Campbellford seemed to possess.

First Innings

Hastings.—Limwire grounded to Holmes. Gould rolled out to Christie, and Chapman fanned, retiring the side.

Campbellford—Cooke singled, followed by a single from Cowell. Christie struck out, and Holmes flied out. Cook stole home, and De Carrol singled, sending in Cowell. Ibey struck out. 2 run, 3 hits, 0 errors.

Second Innings

Hastings.—Stevenson grounded to Christie, and Scriber flied out to Blakely, who made a spectacular catch. Scriber reached first on De Carrol's error. D. Scriver rolled out to Christie.

Campbellford—Saunders popped to Limwire, and Maybee struck out. Blakely was struck by pitcher, giving him a pass. Cook reached first on error of Gillespie, but Cowell flied to Chapman. 0 runs, 0 hits, 2 errors.

Third Innings

Hastings—Knight struck out, and Way was struck by pitcher, giving him a pass. Limwire flied out to Christie, and Gould made a clean single, only to be left dead when Chapman whiffed.

Campbellford—Christie flied out to Gillespie. Holmes hit a two bagger, but De Carrol grounded out to Stevenson. Ibey singled, and Holmes stole home. Saunders reached first on an error, but Maybee struck out. 1 run, 3 hits, 0 errors.

Fourth Innings

Hastings—Stevenson grounded out to De Carrol, and Scriver rolled out to Christie, followed by a strike-out by Gillespie, retiring the side.

Campbellford—Blakely struck out, and Cook rolled out to L. Scriver. Cowell hit a home run, but Christie flied out to Gillespie. 1 hit, 1 run, 0 errors.

Fifth Innings

Campbellford.—Holmes struck out, and De Carrol reached first on Limwire's error. Ibey singled. Saunders flied out to L. Scriver, De Carrol was caught in an attempt to steal home.

Sixth Innings

Hastings — Chapman struck out, and Stevenson ground out to Holmes. L. Scriver singled, and Scriver was caught stealing second.

Campbellford.—Maybee struck out, and Blakely flied out to Gould. Cook hit a two bagger, followed by a triple from Cowell. Christie flied out to D. Limwire.

Seventh Innings

Gillespie singled. L. Scriver tripled. Knight grounded out to Holmes. D. Limwire singled, followed by singles from P. Limwire and Gould. Chapman struck out. Stevenson grounded out to Christie.

Campbellford—Holmes singled. De Carrol flied out to D. Limwire. Ibey singled, bringing in Holmes. Maybee reached first on Gould's error. Blakely followed on Stevenson's error. Cook singled followed by a single from Cowell. Christie singled. Holmes singled, but Cowell was caught stealing home.

Eighth Innings

Hastings.—N. Scriver hit double, and Gillespie struck out. Scriver ground out to De Carrol. Knight reached first when Holmes made an error. Knight was caught stealing second.

Campbellford.—Ibey hit a triple, followed by a single by Saunders. Maybee struck out. Blakely singled, but Cook and Cowell struck out.

Ninth Innings

Hastings—Holmes made a nice one-handed catch of D. Limwires' fly. Gould singled, and Chapman flied out to Cowell on a foul, ending the game.

Inside Sportin Dope

By A Wise Cracker

Stoney Lake, Aug. 17.

Mister Sporting Editor:

You might as well prepare yourself for a nasty blow, Mac. You ain't going to get no fish. They ain't a chance in the world now unless I climbs into the boat when I ain't looking, because I give up trying. Just to show you how tough the going is, the other day they was brought into this camp by some juvenile members of the outfit 7 assorted sunfish, 6 small perch and 1 mean looking catfish. And that mess of odds and ends was cooked and eat by folks what used to grouse because they caught bass less'n 3 lbs. and hollered their heads off that the lake was fished out when they couldn't graffle a pair of lunge every day. And they smacked their lips over them little fish and said they was as good as brook trout. So what's the use, Mac? Somebody may be getting them, but they're giving me nothing but a dirty laugh, and I'm through. If you want fish go and get yourself a can salmon.

What do you think of my old college chum, Mister Al. Heckman? Just as soon as he gets me out of town he goes to work and signs another contract, and from now on it looks like he'll have a new manager. Well, Mister Heckman has did a whole lot to keep Peterboro on the baseball map, and the fans 1 and all will wish him and Mrs. Heck all kinds of luck in the Matrimonial League. He'll probably get better support in that loop than the Petes used to hand him the 1st year or 2 he wore the local unie when it used to be that Mister Heckman had to fan pretty near the whole gang of the opposition to get anywhere. Good luck to Mister and Mrs. Al., say we.

That musta been a sad looking mess for local fans, that Kiwanis-Oshawa Jr. clash last Sat. For a team chaperoned by a police sergt., them youngsters of Mister Deannard's is certainly weak with the baton, and even if Mister Jeff Hardill had twirled for them he'd of had to shut out the invaders to get the decision. And from what I hear them kids from Oshawa didn't look like any easy gang to spill whitewash over.

Well, Mac, they ain't much to tell you this week. I think I told you already about the fishing. I can't say no more and get by the censor, for I know your paper goes into the best of homes, and what I think about the fishing ain't nothing to be read in them kind of homes.

Anyway, this ain't a very tough life up here. No angle parking, no wild drivers to dodge, and if it weren't for the popping of corks from some tourists' camps they wouldn't be nothing to break the silence except the bull frogs and about a hundred outboard motors.

Sorry about the fish, Mac, but you know me. You'll give me credit for trying, won't you?

Sportfully yours,
A. WISE CRACKER.

RALLY IN 7TH FOR EVEN BREAK

Pirates Take First Game 9-3 and Lose the Second By 5-2.

CUBS SPLIT BILL.

NEW YORK, August 20. — Canadian Press. — Two rousing rallies from opposite sides of the diamond, both in the "stretching seventh" gave Pittsburgh and New York an even break in a double header yesterday, the Pirates taking the first game 9 to 3 and the Gants the second 5 to 2.

Six telling singles as part of a 10-hit eight-run attack that drove Larry Benton to the showers, gave Lee Meadows his 16th victory of the season in the first struggle. Burleigh Grimes let the Pirates down with five safeties in the second, while his mates gathered three runs in the seventh to push over the victory.

Kiki Cuyler, in a pinch hit role, broke Benton's string of eight straight wins by tripling with the bases full to cap the climax of Pittsburgh's big inning. Rogers Hornsby and Bill Terry hit homers in the first game. Travis Jackson, Paul Waner and Earl Smith drove for the circuit in the second.

Ben Cantwell, $25,000 recruit from Jacksonville, stopped Pittsburgh's scoring in the first game, and finished the contest without trouble. Fred Lindstrom was knocked unconscious in a collision with the outfield barrier in the first game and was unable to play in the nightcap.

At Brooklyn the Dodgers and the league leading Chicago Cubs split a double header to even the four game series. John Blake shut out the Dodgers 3 to 0 in the first game, but Doug McWeeney hurled Brooklyn into an even break with a 6 to 1 win in the nightcap.

Blake's victory was the 12th shutout suffered by the Dodgers this season and the fourth successive game in which Jess Petty's mates have failed to score a single run for him. Five Brooklyn errors helped the Cubs to victory.

Brooklyn bunched hits off Jones in the second contest, scoring three tallies in the eighth on three singles, two passes and a sacrifice. The win was McWeeney's first since the opening week of the season. Heathcote gathered three of Chicago's five hits.

After Kent Greenfield had held St. Louis to two hits while Boston hammered out a 6 to 1 victory in the first game of a double header at Boston, the world champions turned the tables and won the second game by the same score. Sherdel was effective in the box and had perfect support.

At Philadelphia the Cincinnati Reds took both ends of a double header from the Phillies, winning the first game 5 to 3 in ten innings, and the second by 1 to 0.

The Reds won the first game when singles by Keeley and Ford scored two tallies in the tenth. Singles by Dressen, Allen and Walker in the first inning gave Lucas a victory over Jack Scott in the second game.

NEWARK BEARS DEFEAT LEAFS

Canucks Score Lone Tally in the Fifth for 7-1 Defeat.

JERSEY WIN 4-3.

NEW YORK, Aug. 20 (Canadian Press).—The Bears had little trouble in defeating Toronto 7 to 1 at Newark yesterday afternoon. Davies was complete master of the visitors, allowing but seven scattered hits. Vernon Spencer, a centre fielder of the visitors, had nine putouts.

The Leafs' lone tally came in the 5th when Faulkner tripled after Alexander's double.

The League-leading Buffalo Bisons met defeat at Jersey City, the Black Cats scoring a 4 to 3 triumph. Bob Grady, Jersey rookie, was in fine form and held the visiting Bisons to seven hits. Poor support enabled Buffalo to score all three runs.

At Baltimore the Orioles lost the first game of the series to Syracuse by a 4 to 2 count.

Rochester opened a series at Reading by taking both ends of a double-header from the Keys. The scores were 3 to 2 and 2 to 0. Both contests developed into pitching duels.

THREE FEATURES AT CLOSING DAY

Bucky Harris Equals Track Record For Mile and 70 Yards.

CONNAUGHT PARK RACE TRACK, Aug. 20 (Canadian Press).—The closing day of the Connaught Park Jockey Club's fall meet yesterday was featured by three feature events. Bucky Harris, owned by P. S. P. Randolph and ridden by Harry Fisher, equalled the track record of 1.43 2-5 for the mile and 70 yards and won by a length from John T. D. Dick Whittington came in an easy third.

CUR BECOMES A STAR.

BEVERLY HILLS, Ill., Aug. 20.—Three times 9-year-old Charley Deck tried to give away his dog. Tipper was just an ornery little Irish terrier that stole neighbors' papers and dug up neighbors' gardens, so nobody would take him from Charley. One day, just for fun, the boy sent Tipper's picture to a screen magazine that was running a contest. The pup won first prize and a chance to act in the movies.

GEHRIG CLOUTS HIS 39TH HOMER

Yankees Take 3-2 Licking From Chicago White Sox.

INDIANS LOSE 5-3.

NEW YORK, Aug. 20.—(Canadian Press.)—Lou Gehrig was the Yankee offense yesterday, but his efforts could not quite match the hurling of Ted Blankenship for the White Sox and the Yanks took a 3 to 2 licking at Chicago.

Columbia Lou took a lead of one homer over Babe Ruth in the race for distance hitting honors by clouting his 39th homer of the season with onne on in the ninth. In the sixth Gehrig's double scored Koeing, who had singled and moved ahead on Ruth's hit.

The White Sox pecked away at Waite Hoyt for the winning runs in the first, third and fourth innings, combining two hits in each for a single marker. Bernie Neis landed two timely clouts for the Sox.

At Cleveland Philadelphia made it four out of five when they defeated the Indians, 5 to 3. Walberg won his own game with a long single that scored two runs in the eighth. He also struck out seven men.

The Browns won from Washington, 6 to 1, for the third straight victory over the Senators at St. Louis. An error by Gerner let in the only run off Wingard, who was credited with his second victory of the season. Wingard also got a home run in the sixth with one man on base.

Detroit continued its winning streak to nine games by taking both ends of a double-header from the Boston Red Sox at Detroit. The scores were 5 to 2 and 14 to 7. The Red Sox made a triple play in the eighth inning of the second contest.

Star Sterling's Problem

A Serial for Boys - By BERT REED

The regular dip of oars broke the silence of the summer night. Sterling and Gray had rowed some four miles up the Silver River and almost without becoming aware of it had entered Gale Lake.

Gale Lake had come by its name honestly. It was said that a storm could turn its quiet waters into a seething cauldron quicker than any other in the district. This was due, perhaps, to its broad surface and comporative shallowness.

For the past fifteen minutes neither had spoken. The quiet charm of the night had cast its spell over each and they were content to just listen to the stillness. Sterling, who had been rowing, was the first to speak.

"Well, Paul, Summer is almost over. Tomorrow the Silver River League will play its last games, and then back to Riverview and school—are you sorry?

Gray sat up with a little jerk.

"Sorry, Starr? I didn't hear what you said. I guess I must have been dreaming."

"Dreaming," laughed Sterling, "so was I, Paul. This wonderful Summer night was made for dreaming. I have been dreaming of all the things that have happened since I met you fellows way back in Riverview. I have been dreaming of the past and the future, too, of the part each one of us is going to play when we leave the ball diamond and school for the bigger things, and Paul, the dreams I have had were painted in glowing colors. Any bunch of fellows who will play clean ball, and who will fight for every point as you fellows have done this Summer, has developed a spirit that will win out in the bigger game of life. I have often looked at fellows playing ball, have seen some cut the corners in base running and get away with it and I've wondered if some day they wouldn't try the same kind of a cheating game in business. I'm afraid they will—but any fellow who will stand up straight, do his best and take his medicine whether it is sweet or bitter is the kind of a fellow who will make an honest to goodness straight forward member of society when he grows older, and he's the fellow who will win out and be remembered when the other fellow is forgotten."

For a moment Gray was silent. When he spoke it was in his quiet way.

"Starr, old man—while I've never heard you say it before, that's just the thing you've been teaching me and all the rest of the fellows ever since you joined us. I don't say a great deal but there's not one of our crowd could play anything but a clean game—they'd be ashamed to—and they've learned the lesson from you."

"That's one of the things that makes life worth while, Paul," replied Sterling softly, "the power to influence men in the right direction—but to change the subject—here is the standing of the Silver River League to date—"

Taking a slip of paper from his pocket he flashed a light across it.

	Won	Lost
Riverview	18	5
Beamville	17	6
Cedarvale	10	13
Long Point	9	14

"Which means," said Gray, "if we lose tomorrow's game and if Cedarvale loses, the whole league will be tied up. Beamville and Riverview for top place and Cedarvale and Long Point in the cellar."

"Paul," replied Starr, leaning over and placing a hand on Gray's knee, "there is only one outcome for tomorrow's game, as far as Riverview is concerned, and that is top place."

"We'll all stand behind you to put it over," Paul rejoined, "but it may not be our ability to play that will decide the game—I don't think Chip Bascombe has quit his scheming to down us, by any means."

"He's traveling with a pretty fast crowd these days," said Starr soberly. "I saw a number of them badly intoxicated the other night. I'd like to know where they are getting the stuff. It's ruining Bascombe."

"Well, we'll watch our step and by the same token we should have been keeping our eyes open this last half hour, a storm is blowing up."

Gray looked up.

Black clouds were scudding across the sky. A stronger wind had sprung up and already the water was becoming choppy.

"If the lake lives up to its reputation we're in for a rough passage," he remarked. Already the rain had commenced to fall and the water that ten minutes before had been comparatively calm was now running a heavy sea. Suddenly a ragged flash lighted the heavens, followed by a sharp crack.

The flash showed the boys that they were about a half mile from shore, but they were now being flung about by the waves in such a way that it was difficult to manage their craft. Their attempts to keep the boat out of the trough of the sea seemed futile. Every moment the choppy swells threatened to swamp them.

Another flash ripped the black sky to shreds.

"Keep her head on," shrieked Gray above the storm, "there's a bay ahead." With a supreme effort they brought the boat around.

They were now running with the wind. Their chief concern for the moment was to keep out of the trough. Again and again huge waves flung themselves over the stern. The boys were drenched through and through. In the blackness of the storm they were swept on.

Then another flash ripped the blackness to shreds. For a moment the whole landscape was lighted up. At the same moment a cry of horror broke from both boys. Ten yards ahead—now five—now three, lay two huge rocks.

There was no time to divert the course of their craft. In upon the black monsters the little boat was swept. Both boys had risen from their seats.

"Hold fast," cried Sterling, but his voice was drowned in the angry roar of the waters. Then, in one last leap they were launched at the two black shapes with the speed of an express train.

The boys waited for the splintering crash. There was none. Their boat was flung through the air. Then the waters for a second receded. They had passed between both rocks and had been left upon a sandy beach.

Both boys were flung from the boat. For a moment they lay there stunned by the impact. It was for a moment only. Though both had been bruised, neither was seriously injured. The boat itself was badly smashed.

"While it lasted," gasped Gray, "I think our speed broke some records."

"Just a miracle," breathed Sterling in strained tones, "that last wave flung us between those boulders."

"And," he gasped, looking about him, "it has landed us on Black Island."

Black Island lay a the mouth of Gale Lake. It was the first that one passed after leaving Silver River. Why it had been called Black Island no one knew. Even the most curious avoided landing there. Many stories were told of the place. It was said that a man had been murdered there and his ghost still haunted its shores. Some, on certain dark nights, had seen mysterious lights moving among the trees. The stories they told had never aroused the most curious to a point of investigation.

And now Sterling and Gray had been flung ashore on the haunted island of Gale Lake.

Neither Sterling nor Gray believed in ghosts—but the thought of being stranded without the possibility of leaving at any rate until next day appalled both boys.

The rain had abated somewhat but the wind was still relentlessly raking the lake and island.

"We'll have to find shelter," Gray said. "Let's commence an exploration of this spook-haunted, spirit-infested place. Perhaps after all these spooks are hospitable and may ask us to stay for the night."

A short distance from the shore the boys found a trail leading into the heart of the island. The dripping boughs whipped their faces, for they traveled in the dark. Sterling had decided not to use his flash for the present at any rate.

They had traveled some three or four minutes when Sterling stopped just in time to prevent himself from plunging down a steep declivity into a narrow stream.

He used his flash guardedly, cupping it with his hands to prevent its light from streaking too far—then with a low cry of amazement he grasped Gray. Down in the stream lay a canoe.

"Well, the spooks are good to us, anyway," laughed Sterling softly. "We won't have to camp on Black Island tonight."

"And it proves that there are pretty substantial ghosts on the island as well," added Gray.

"Let's push on and find the owners," advised Sterling. "We may be able to persuade them to take us back to camp."

By the means of a log that bridged it, the boys crossed the narrow stream. They found the trail continued on the other side. Sterling had cautioned silence, so neither spoke a word as they pushed on through the darkness. It was Starr, leading, that first saw light. It was streaming from the window of a shack ahead of them.

With greatest precaution they crept toward the hut.

Inside they could hear voices interspersed with coarse laughter.

Cautiously Gray raised himself to the level of the window. He dropped back with a stifled exclamation of surprise. Inside the hut were three men. Bully Bascombe, Joe Beaver and Gus Porter, one of the official umpires of the Silver River League.

Quietly he told Sterling what he had seen. The two crouched in the darkness and waited.

"We've got 'em cold," Bascombe was saying, his voice thick and unnatural. "Those birds won't have a look-in."

"Not a look-in," replied a maudlin voice. "Chip, old scout, yer friend Sterling's team is goin' to play against ten men to-morrow—and I'm the tenth."

"If they had nine men to play against, they wouldn't have a look-in—not a look-in," returned Bascombe.

"Gus, old fellow—we've got their signals and I'm goin' to hand 'em to our fellows from the bench and coaching line."

Sterling had gripped Gray's arm.

"Did you hear what I heard?" he whispered, "there's crooked work on here."

Gray did not reply but raised himself again to the level of the window and for a minute surveyed the room with its trio.

Then he dropped back and signalled to Sterling to follow. In the shelter of some bushes they planned their next move.

"Beaver is dead to the world and if I'm not missing my guess the other two will be shortly. I'm beginning to see through this ghost business."

"Porter evidently is sleeping there. I saw the bed. They don't want the place disturbed. It's their rendezvous, consequently they have been circulating stories that the place was haunted."

"There's more in it than that," replied Starr—"I feel that there are other reasons that we don't know of, but I have an idea. Porter is going to umpire the game tomorrow and hand it to Beamville on a silver platter—that is he thinks he is going to. Bascombe in some way has discovered our system of signals and believes he is going to have it in any case. It was a fortunate storm that landed us here tonight, for we can beat them both."

For some minutes their whispered consultation continued. It was three o'clock in the morning when they reached camp and they came in the canoe they had found on the island.

Perfectly proper managerial strategy doesn't always work out as planned.

Recently, Manager Donie Bush of the Pittsburgh club was the victim of such a happening in a game with Chicago, that sent the Pirates into second place after leading the National League for weeks.

Here is the way the stage was set: Hal Carlson of the Chicago Cubs opposed Joe Dawson of the Pirates. It was a pitchers' battle worthy of the old days. When Pittsburgh went to bat for the last half of the eighth, the score was 2-1 in favor of Chicago.

Unless Pittsburgh could score a run to tie the score, the fine pitching of Dawson would be wasted. So, when it came Dawson's turn at bat in that session, Manager Bush did the only proper thing under the circumstances, sent in a pinch hitter, who failed to come through.

This necessitated a relief pitcher for Dawson and once again, very properly, Manager Bush sent in one of his aces, Carmen Hill, to hold the Cubs, hoping Pittsburgh would be able to do something in the last half of the ninth.

Unfortunately for Bush's very excellent judgment, Hill failed to hold Chicago, that team making two runs off the bespectacled pitcher. That made it 4-1 against the Pirates. In the last of the ninth, Pittsburgh put over a run and had a man on third with only one out, when rain ended the game.

This made the score revert back to seven innings, Chicago winning the game 2-1 and first place in the race. Had Dawson continued in the game and held the Cubs in the ninth or had Hill been equal to it, thereby keeping the Cubs' total to two, the run scored by Pittsburgh in the ninth under those conditions would have counted and the game would have been a tie.

Thus the best of managerial strategy simply resulted in a costly defeat.

ALMA RUBENS AT HER BEST

Dainty Star Has Difficult Dual Role in Dramatic Parisian Story

Alma Rubens, exotic actress who has been featured and starred in a number of Fox Films dramas, is now appearing in the role of Helene in "The Heart of Salome," Victor Schertzinger production.

This is a role written almost to Miss Ruben's order. Helene is a Paris spy for a master of Europe's big business, whose methods are not above reproach.

Helene is housed in a bizarre apartment, with specially designed furniture, the creation of the specialists who cater to exotic tastes. Hangings are cloth of gold that offset mandarin reds in furniture and rich tapestries.

The salon of this suite is crowded with men and women drawn from all corners of the world. Here she obtains trade and business secrets from the captains of finance while she flatters their wives who wonder at her attraction.

The boulevards know little of Helene, but they gossip so much that she is known as "La Belle Helene." Her pay for her work is jewels of rare design and great value, but she becomes disgusted with herself. Then she meets and loves Monte Carrol, a young American financier. She is recalled to to Paris to obtain papers of the utmost importance. They belong to Carrol. He denounces her. Scorned, she decides to have him die, but just as he is about to be killed in a sword duel, her heart drives her to try to save him. She collapses and wakens to find herself in his arms.

"The Heart of Salome" is a story of mystery, thrills and suspense admirably balanced by fine touches of humor and pathos. It will have a three-day showing at the Capitol Theatre, and local picture lovers are promised a treat by the management in this latest Fox production.

A cast of players of stellar rank support Miss Rubens, including Walter Pidgeon, Barry Norton, Holmes Herbert, Robert Agnew, Erin Labissonier, Walter Dugan and Virginia Madison. The scenario is by Randall Faye from the story by Allen Raymond.

The Portland, Me., baseball club of the New England League is now a home-owned institution; the franchise and outfit having been bought by a syndicate of local business men.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Question: L. H. G. writes: "I have tuberculosis in an advanced stage, but am thirty pounds overweight. Yet, I eat lightly. Do you think a fast would help me?"

Answer—As your assimilation is so good, you can no doubt be entirely curede by the proper dietary regime. Take a fruit fast until your weight is reduced to this normal and then live on a diet free from starches and sugars. Others who read this will see that those who are overweight can also develop tuberculosis. It is not so much a question of lack of weight as of enervation and a tendency to catarrhal mucus.

Question—Mrs. W. H. L. asks: "Would the advertised remedy ——— be good for diabetes?"

Answer—I do not advise "remedies" either through this column or in my private practise. Proper food is the only remedy you need to bring about a cure of diabetes. If you will only send me your name and address I will be glad to forward general instructions for the cure of diabetes.

Question—M. J. B. writes: "About four times a year I have spells when I "see things" in front of my eyes. They look like little electric sparks. At these times I also have indigestion. Could this be the sause?"

Answer—You have answered your own question, as the disturbances coming from indigestion are no doubt responsible for the biliousness you have at these times.

By MOLLIE MALONE

Copyright 1927, Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.

"IRISH HEARTS," with May McAvoy, is a Warner Bros. picturization of this novel.

SYNOPSIS

Sheila Kildare and her father emigrate to America, following Emmett Murtough, to whom she is betrothed. Neither Kildare nor Murtough will hold steady jobs and Sheila goes to work as a waitress. She makes friends with the family of Rory O'Shea, a professional boxer. Murtough renews his engagement to Sheila, although he has revealed plans of his bootlegging gang to remove $150,000 worth of contraband to a cabaret girl in the employ of a rival band.

CHAPTER X—Continued

She divined the mysterious "Gus" was undoubtedly connected with a liquor ring, but five thousand dollars was five thousand dollars! And the thought crept into her mind, "Why share it with Murtough at all?" Life as she had learned it was just one "double cross" after another. Why not leave him out of it entirely? Why make him a party to the deal at all? Of course, if Gus insisted, she would do so and then scheme to get the money in her own possession. He was not a bad fellow and she liked him because he never "got fresh." She could take care of herself with men like Murtough. It was those slick, smart fellows that got girls into trouble; not men like Murtough, who seemed to be afraid of his shrewd little companion. He was a clumsy, ignorant fellow, easy to fend away and easy to keep at his distance.

From the moment the doors were ready for admission at the Castle, Clarice nervously watched for the entrance of Gus. As the hours passed she feared that he would not come and she began to worry lest she had been "kidded" by the three men in evening dress. She was seated at a table with a party when the manager summoned her. Offering her excuses she left the ballroom and went downstairs.

"There's a big John in there waiting for you," the manager said, pointing to the lounge room. Clarice thanked him and entered. In a corner at a table for two sat "Gus."

"You're on the job after all, aren't you?" she asked as he waived her to the chair opposite him. "I thought maybe your interest in truck drivers had passed."

"No; still looking for a good driver, honest, reliable and willing to learn," he remarked with a smile. "That description fit your candidate?"

"To a T."

The waiter approached and took the order.

"Now, what did you learn; give me the whole story," he asked.

"First, who are you?" demanded Clarice.

"Do you have to know?"

"Why should I do business with a blind? You want something I've got, and it's something worth while, take it from me."

"All right, I'll lay at least four cards of my straight on the table. Fair enough? My name is Gus Schermer, you can get me any afternoon at three sharp at this telephone number. I'm always at the wire."

"What's your business?"

"Everything. But right now I'm particularly interested in this," he lifted his glass to his lips.

"What if I called that number now and asked for you?"

Schermer looked at her speculatively for a moment.

"Want proof?"

"Mister, I born just around the block from Ninth Avenue. Get me?"

"Go ahead. Here is the answer you'll get, 'Call Mr. Schermer at three o'clock tomorrow afternoon.' Will that satisfy you?"

Clarice nodded and taking the nickel he proffered went to the telephone booth in the reception hall. "I want to speak to Mr. Schermer," she announced when the connection had been made. "Call Mr. Schermer at three o'clock tomorrow afternoon," came the reply. Clarice started to speak, but the click of the receiver being hung up silenced her. She hurried back to the table in the lounge.

"That's okay for me," she said. "Now just what do you want to know?"

"What have you got to tell?"

"You better ask me. When you've found out enough for the price you named, you'll stop, and I won't feel like a bargain sale."

"Smart girl. All right. Who's your truck driver friend?"

"Emmett Murtough, only been in this country a little while."

"Who's his boss?"

"Mannie Clocker."

"How did he get in with Clocker? Clocker don't pick up with strangers."

"Emmett has been a member of the West End Club almost ever since he arrived from Ireland. He met Clocker there."

"Does Murtough know Clocker's business?"

"I'll say so! And how!"

"For instance."

"Well, first he was a guard, then he learned to drive a truck. He was driving one night when a gang of hi-jackers held them up and Emmett got a bullet in his shoulder. Soon as he learns some more about the game he'll drive a pilot car."

"Does he know many of Clocker's hide-outs?"

"I don't know; he never mentioned but one to me, that's the one on Long Island"

"He knows where that is?"

"Sure, it was on one of those trips that he got his."

Schermer was silent for a few minutes and Clarice waited patiently for more questions. Wise in her ways, she did not want to offer more information, if that which she had given was sufficient.

"Now what about him? How loyal is he?"

"I think he's on the level, but money talks, and right now little Clarice can handle him. But do you need him at all? Suppose I can tell you something that would be worth while, couldn't you leave him out?"

"That depends on how much you know. But what do you want to double cross your sweetie for? Thought this money was to be a wedding gift."

"I am not saying it isn't, but, maybe, I don't want him to get mixed up in this at all."

Schermer hesitated. Already his ring knew of the ship that lay outside the twelve mile limit waiting to be unloaded, but they did not know the location of the secret landing station. They needed someone who knew every foot of it to help arrange the plans for a concentrated attack and the theft of the entire cargo. If this girl knew the place, then scouts might be able to lay out the campaign, but a deserter from the Clocker camp would be of invaluable aid.

"Do you know where Clocker's place is in Long Island?"

"Not exactly," confessed Clarice, and she mentally kicked herself for not having wormed that from Murtough.

"What else do you know?"

"I know this." Clarice leaned across the table and whispered. "They're going to unload a shipful of stuff at that station on Friday and Saturday nights."

"This week?"

"This week."

"Why, I thought——" Schermer let surprise creep into his voice.

"Maybe that info isn't worth something," boasted the girl. Schermer looked at his watch. It was near to four o'clock.

"Can you get this bird on the phone?"

"No, he lives in a rooming house down on Fifty-second Street. There is no phone."

"Will he come if you send for him?"

"Here?"

"No, at an address I'll give you."

"Yes."

"All right. Write him a note now. Tell him to go to Room 717, Marmaduke Hotel, as quick as he can. Tell him it's something big for him."

The waiter brought writing paper and Clarice wrote as Schermer dictated:

Dear Emmett:

Go at once to Room 717, Marmaduke Hotel in Twenty-seventh Street and ask for Mr. Schermer. It means a lot for you. Do what he tells you. CLARICE.

"Here, I'll take that and have my driver go up and give it to him on the way down."

Schermer paid the check and hurried out. Twenty minutes later Murtough was awakened by the chauffeur.

"A guy tells me to give you this and for you to hurry," the driver said.

"But, who gave it to you?"

"How do I know? It's the guy I'm driving."

CANINE VANITY CASE APPEARS IN LONDON.

By NEA Service

LONDON, Aug. 20.—Lap dogdom is alarmed today as a result of a new fad that is sweeping over London. Not that Pekinese and Sealyhams the Pomeranians are no longer in milady's favor; the trouble is that these, and all others of the toy variety are being skinned and their interiors fitted with vanity cases.

In hotels and cafes where dogs are forbidden, the managers hesitate long before they tell a woman to leave her pet outside. If they do approach a woman with a dog in her arms, the chances are that she will press a button and the dog will fly open, revealing powder, mirror, rouge, handkerchief and other accessories.

It is, indeed, a dog's life.

PASTEURIZATION OF MILK IMPORTANT

Baseball, Softball, Football and Races Included in Program.

A particularly valuable paper on the importance of the safeguarding of milk as a food, from the pen of Dr. J. W. S. McCullough, Chief Officer of Health of Ontario, appears in the Canadian Public Health Journal for the month of June.

While milk must be regarded as the best, the cheapest and one of the most universally employed foods, it is to be remembered that milk is almost the only animal food used in the raw state. Because of this fact, milk has been responsible for more sickness than all other foods taken together.

Many notable milk-born epidemics have developed in Canada during recent years. It has undoubtedly been the cause of several small epidemics of typhoid fever during the past few years. The last, which developed in Montreal this past spring, numbered over 4,000 victims with a mortality of more than 300, appears to have been entirely due to an unprotected milk supply. Epidemics of small proportions have also occurred in Ontario, in Manitoba and in Saskatchewan.

In some respects even more important than the above, is the fact that almost all unpasteurized milk carries the bacilli of tuberculosis, both of the bovine and of the human type. Still further, numerous outbreaks of scarlet fever, diphtheria and septic sore throat, have been traced to a milk supply, and raw milk is undoubtedly a most important factor in the causation of summer diarrhoea in children.

It is, therefore, of the greatest importance that the public supply of milk should be free from pathogenic microorganisms, and thus infection from this source be prevented.

Many authorities advocate that all cattle should be tuberculin tested, and those found to be tuberculous, should be destroyed. Such a procedure if carried out throughout the Dominion would cause a milk famine, because from 35 per cent. to 50 per cent. of our cattle have tuberculosis. The financial loss arising from the elimination of these tuberculous cows would make such elimination impracticable, even if the Government were in a position to provide the personnel to make the tests.

Still further, after all cows suffering from tuberculosis had been destroyed we would still have to face the danger of infection of the milk taking place from human tubercle bacilli, as well as from other disease-producing germs to which we have already drawn attention.

Attempts have been made to secure an absolutely pure milk—the so-called "Certified Milk" that would solve the difficulty for those who could afford the expense, but after twenty years' experience in New York City, certified milk constitutes but three-quarters of one per cent. of the entire milk consumption in that city.

In Toronto also, after seventeen years, during which certified milk has been provided for those who chose to pay for it, the consumption of this article has been confined to the very few, and the amount has formed only one-half of one per cent. of the total supply. Dr. McCullough also draws attention to the fact that even certified milk is not always absolutely safe. Cases have arisen in which this special milk has been infected from carriers; tuberculosis also has developed in even certified herds, so that in the course of a year infected cows have been found in from 5 to 25 per cent. of the herds of these supposed to be all healthy animals.

In 1914, in one of the most celebrated certified herds of the United States, it was found that 191 tuberculous cows were met with in a herd of 632 supposed to be perfectly healthy animals. Unquestionably, the best and only real safeguard for milk is effective pasteurization at a temperature from 142 to 145 degrees at which it must be held for 30 minutes and must then be promptly cooled to 40 degrees F.

Many objections have been raised against this pasteurization of milk. It is claimed that the vitamins in the milk are destroyed as well as the lactic acid bacilli, so that such milk does not sour, but putrefies. It is also stated that the use of pasteurization has a tendency to promote relaxation of the other safeguards necessary for the procuring of clean milk, and that the equipment demanded for pasteurization will tend to place a monopoly of the milk in the hands of a few persons or companies which will promptly result in higher prices.

The price at which milk is sold may, however, in great measure be controlled by a municipality. The loss of vitamins in pasteurized milk is easily made good by the use of fruit juices—an article of diet which should always be included in the food of young children. The danger against using unclean milk for pasteurization must and can be prevented by demanding that before pasteurization no milk obtained in the country shall contain more than 300,000 bacteria, and no more than a million and a half per cubic centimetre when brought to the city.

In the libel suit brought by a milk company against the Montreal Star, Dr. North, an expert sanitarian who for the past ten years has been devoting his attention to the purification of the milk supply in the larger cities of the States, stated that he considered it would be a calamitous disaster if the practice of pasteurization at this age of the world was omitted or checked. Throughout all the large cities in America numerous infectious diseases would break out owing to the employment of raw milk. Speaking as a member of the American Health Association, he also stated that there was not a dissenting voice among the public health officers of American cities on the absolute necessity of pasteurization as a public health measure.

Dr. Harris, Medical Officer of the city of New York, who also gave testimony at the same investigation, when asked whether he favoured pasteurized milk in comparison with raw milk as a food, stated: "I do not merely favour it, I regard it as an indispensable measure for the protection of the public health."—The Canadian Medical Association Journal.

JOLLY JINGLES By Graham Hunter

GALLAGHER REMEDIES Ltd. CHANGING POLICY.

Distribution To Be Made Through Stores Instead of by Agents.

BIG ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN.

For some six years Gallagher Remedies Limited have been marketing their products through house-to-house salesmen and through stores. By this means they have placed their medicines in a large proportion of the homes in Ontario and have built up a nice store connection in this Province. To some extent their products have filtered through the Western Provinces to the Coast and Eastward.

This has been accomplished with very little newspaper advertising expenditure, but in the opinion of the management the time has now arrived when a real newspaper advertising campaign should be launched to make their remedies known from Coast to Coast.

It is planned to place this in the hands of expert advertising counsel and to employ an agency to do the selling on a commission basis, using the wholesalers as a distributing medium. This method makes the overhead a known quantity.

Six years ago the Gallagher Remedy Company were marketing only six lines, namely: Gallagher's Blood Purifier, Kidney Remedy, Life Drops (Liniment), Golden Drop, Cough Syrup and Vermifuge. These are the original Gallagher preparations which have been sold in the county for fifty years. To-day Gallagher Remedies, Limited, are marketing twenty household lines and seven veterinary remedies.

The old reliable Gallagher's Blood Purifier is the best seller and by far the most valuable preparation. Next in order are the Kidney Remedy, Cough Syrup, and the Indian Lung Remedy. The latter has been on the market only three years and is prepared from a formula used in the Kidd family for thirty years. Although an added line, Gallagher Remedies, Limited, has an offer now of $10,000.00 for the sole rights to manufacture and sell this one medicine. The company sold this year the rights to two formulae which had never been marketed, for the sum of $5,000.00 cash. This sum was paid by Kidd Bros., Limited, a subsidiary company doing a mail order business only and sharing with the parent company the overhead office expense.

It is felt that the merits of Gallagher's Herbal Family Remedies need only the publicity of an advertising campaign to put things over in a big way and plans are now being laid to that end.

The company has paid a dividend each year of 8 per cent. on its preferred stock, and this year a 10 per cent. dividend on its common.

...RIGHT NUPTIALS

MARMORA, Aug. 20.— The towns of Marmora and Madoc and Deloro and the surrounding countryside were all agog with excitement today over the wedding of Miss Nancy Bristow Wright, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. Bristow Wright of Deloro, and Mr. Albert Rennie Pengilly, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Pengilly, of Surrey, England. This was probably the biggest wedding ever celebrated in Marmora, from the viewpoint of general interest. The number of invited guests was one hundred and fifty, all preparations for the event were on a lavish scale and the popularity of the bride and her family added to the community interest in the affair. Although a native of Australia, the bride has been identified with the life of Deloro and Marmora for many years past. Her father is general manager of the Deloro Smelting and Refining Company, Reeve of Deloro, Justice of the Peace, and Rector's Warden of the Parish of Marmora. The bridegroom was a former member of the staff of the company at Deloro and now holds a position with the Noranda Mining Company in Quebec.

In St. Paul's Anglican Church at Marmora, a quaint old stone edifice that has seen half a century of life as a religious centre of the community, the ceremony was solemnized at three o'clock this afternoon. The officiating clergyman was the rector, Rev. A. B. Caldwell, assisted by Rev. J. B. Creegan of Rawdon. There were present about two hundred people, who packed the building to capacity. Decorations were carried out with a profusion of palms and ferns, the chancel and pulpit being banked with gladioli and phlox, and the pews marked by white ribbons.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, was charming in an exquisite period gown of ivory crepe satin, with fitted bodice, and ankle-length bouffant tiered skirt made of frills with picoted edges. The long tight sleeves and pointed yoke were of Spanish lace, outlined by seed pearls. The tulle veil was closely draped to the head with a circlet of orange blossoms and clusters of flowers and buds at either side. White silk hose and white satin slippers with pearl and brilliant bow-knot buckles were worn, and the lovely costume was completed by an old-fashioned nosegay of butterfly roses and lily of the valley, with lace frill and gauze bow of pale blue.

The maid of honor, Miss Betty Wright, sister of the bride, and the bridesmaids, Miss Marion Kirkpatrick of Ottawa and Miss Grace Watt of Deloro, formerly of Peterborough, were gowned alike in beautiful period creations of French taffeta, made in sleeveless style, with tight bodices and hooped skirts, topped by double reversed frills and made with scalloped hems, short in front and long in the back and faced in contrasting shades, the contrast in color being carried out in the tiny flat bows of velvet ribbon which adorned the front of the skirts and in the long bows of velvet ribbon which fell from the neck to the hem at the back of the gowns.

Miss Betty Wright was in rose with periwinkle blue; Miss Kirkpatrick wore maize with mauve, and Miss Watt, periwinkle blue with rose. Long white kid gloves were worn and picture hats of mohair with two-toned velvet bands and bows under the brim. Hose and satin slippers also matched the gowns in color, and nosegays were carried of columbia roses and pale blue cornflowers, with lace frills and bows of gold gauze ribbon.

Little Miss Barbara Wright, small sister of the bride, was a dainty flower girl, dressed in a French frock of wistaria crepe with shoulder knot of sky blue ribbon, mohair hat of wistaria shade, and carrying a tiny nosegay of roses.

Mr. Robert R. Parker of Walkerville was best man, and ushers were Mr. Earl Bennett of Cobalt and Mr. Arthur Berry of Kingston.

Mr. Geoffrey Waddington of Toronto played the violin obbligato to the Wedding March, and also a solo during the signing of the register, while Mrs. Ross Hunter played the wedding music on the organ.

After the ceremony, a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents, Mrs. S. B. Wright wearing a handsome gown of beige georgette and blue satin embroidered in diamante, with black picture hat and corsage bouquet of columbia roses and lily of the valley.

The rooms were lavishly decorated with silver bowls of pink antirrhinum, sweet peas, red and white poppies, gladioli, phlox and gypsophilia, and the bride's table was exquisite with the huge cake as a centrepiece, draperies of Florentine lace, rose tulle, rose candles in silver holders and pink rosebuds in silver specimen vases.

Later, Mr. and Mrs. Pengilly left on their honeymoon trip to Bon Echo Inn, Toronto, and Montreal. On their return they will reside in Noranda, Quebec.

The bride's travelling costume was a white sports ensemble of kasha cloth, trimmed with black monkey fur, a small black and white hat, black patent pumps and white hose.

The gift of the bridegroom to the bride was a set of silver dressing-table accessories; to the maid of honor and bridesmaids, silver lovers' knot shoulder brooches set with brilliants; to the best man a silver-mounted monogramed flask; to the ushers, leather-cased playing cards, and to the flower girl a gold ring.

In the evening, a dance was held at the home of the bride's parents, nearly two hundred guests being present. Music for dancing and also for the reception in the afternoon was played by Win Myers' orchestra from Toronto. Catering was done by Coles, of Toronto; floral decorations for the church and house were in the hands of the Peterborough Floral Company, and Mr. F. L. Roy of Peterborough took the pictures of the bridal party after the ceremony.

Some of the out-of-town guests present were: Dr. and Mrs. S. F. Kirkpatrick and family of Ottawa; Mr. and Mrs. Frank Waddington, Miss Eileen Waddington and Mr. Geoffrey Waddington, Dr. and Mrs. McKecknie and family, Miss Bessie Thomas, Mr. Archie Thomas, Mr. and Mrs. Archie Mullen, Mrs. Mary Southworth and Mr. and Mrs. H. Southworth, all of Toronto; Mr. and Mrs. David Thomas, Mrs. Wm. Watt and Miss Bessie Matchett, of Peterborough; Mr. K. B. Patterson, of Montreal; Judge and Mrs. Wills, Miss St. George Wills, Mr. Thomas Wills and Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Burrows of Belleville; Mr. Irwin Yeckel of New York, and Miss Mary Leader of Rochester.

Guests from Marmora and Deloro were: Reeve and Mrs. G. B. Airhart, Mr. and Mrs. G. E. Blake, Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Bapty and Jack Bapty, Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Buskard, Mr. and Mrs. A. F. Iron and Steel Business Is Holding Its Own

TORONTO, Aug. 19.—In a summary of the iron steel and machinery markets, Canadian Machinery and Manufacturing News makes the following comment this week:

While the iron and steel markets have been somewhat affected by fluctuations in nearby United States territory, business done over the week, tonnage in immediate prospect and the promise of the future, as gaged by industrial, reports, combine to prove that the metal-working industry is holding its own and that August production will not fall below the excellent average of the summer months.

In the Prairie Provinces, crops generally are making excellent progress, and in Alberta especially, forecasts indicate the largest harvest in the history of the Province. Harvesting will not be general until the end of August. From Ontario, Quebec and the Maritime Provinces, similar reports emanate. On these reports, much of the considerable optimism being expressed by agricultural and wire goods manufacturers is being based. Agricultural implement plants are running on a part-time schedule in most instances, although they have been very busy up until now. These plants, fortunately, are busy when many others are not.

Automotive production will jump as new models are introduced, especially in the case of Ford. Parts orders for the new Ford have, it is reported, already been placed, and new equipment is being purchased to take care of the changes in design. Willys-Overland plant at Toronto has been expanded by 700,000 cu. ft. Radiator plants are fairly busy, working at about the same rate as pipe foundries. Jobbing foundries are, just now, in about the best position of all. Foundry supplies are moving quite freely, although competition among supply houses is very keen.

A slight lead of 7 per cent. in the value of construction over 1926 figures is shown by a compilation for the first seven months of 1927. So far this year, new work to the value of $242,205,000 has been contracted for. Construction is bringing considerable business to the metal-working industry. Among the large jobs now contemplated are hotels in Toronto and a $600,000 office block in Ottawa. Reinforcing steel in the new Hamilton stadium has been awarded to the Steel Co. of Canada.

A range of from $23.60 to $24.10 probably best represents the market in foundry iron, delivered at Toronto. Reports are current that there has been a 50c reduction, forced by the cut in U. S. iron prices, applying to both foundry and malleable grades, but sellers' prices vary. Imported foundry iron, is down from $2.50 to $3 a ton at Montreal warehouse.

Cold rolled steel, out of Montreal warehouse, has been reduced. Where a range of from $4.50 to $5 was quoted on rounds, $4.20 is now named.

The moderate improvement which marked the markets since mid-July, in the United States, has all but succumbed to mid-summer inertia, but producers appear to be holding the slight gains of previous weeks and to be no less confident that the trend of demand is definitely although sluggishly upward.

Belgian iron is underselling the British product in the English market. France, Belgium and Luxembourg have gotten together on a pig iron agreement.

Liquor and Oil Shares Are Centres of Interest

TORONTO, Aug. 20.— (Canadian Press.)—Liquor and oil stocks provided the only interesting features of the closing session of the week on the Toronto stock exchange to-day, trading elsewhere, save in the mines, being light and scattered. The price trend was indefinite, but some strength was shown. Gooderham and Worts, with a two point gain at 50½, led the liquor stocks, Carling Breweries gained nearly a point at 29, and Walker improved 1 5-8 at 49 7-8.

In the oils McColl eased a half at 44½, but British American Oil firmed a fraction at 26¾ and Imperial Oil at 49 3-8 was firmer. Brazilian softened 1 3-8 at 172. International Nickel finished half a point better at 67¼.

Noranda and Laval Lead In Mining Market

TORONTO, Aug. 20. —(Canadian Press). — Noranda and Laval, Quebec, were the dominant leaders in to-day's session of the Standard Mining Exchange, when sales came very close to the million share mark. Laval finished the morning seven points higher at 48 on a turnover of nearly a quarter of a million shares while Noranda was a full dollar higher at $24.40. Area and Amulet had a good share in the Quebec advance. Area gaining eight at 97 and Amulet seven at 525. Ribago went up four at 35. Most others were steady.

Prices Move Higher But Support Is Lacking

NEW YORK, August 20. Canadian Press. — Stock prices continued to work upward in to-day's stock market, but the advance was by no means uniform. Pools were again active in a number of specialties but they had difficulty in attracting an outside following. The absence of many trader for an extended week-end holiday was reflected in the relatively small volume of trading.

Motors were again the feature. Chrysler crossed 58 to a new peak on the announcement of new models, and General Motors, which sold ex-dividend yesterday, approximated the year's record high. Hudson fluctuated rather erratically, owing to the uncertainty regarding the dividend action to be taken by the directors after the close of the market. Yellow Truck issues were weak, the preferred falling four points. Dupoint soared over seven points and Houston made up most of the ground lost yesterday. Railroad equipments were in good demand in anticipation of large fall orders but oils failed to respond to the reported efforts to curtail production in the West Texas field.

Wheat Opens Strong; Selling Weakens Price

CHICAGO, Aug. 20 (Canadian Press).—Wheat took an early swing upward today due to surprising strength in the Liverpool market. Selling increased on the bulges, however, and checked the advance. Opening ½c to 1c up, Chicago wheat subsequently underwent a general decline. Continued cool weather over the belt gave firmness to corn, which started ⅝c to ¾c higher and later sagged all around. Oats sympathized with other grains and provisions were steady.

Opening prices were: Wheat, September $1.40⅝, December 1.44½. Corn, September 1.11⅝, December 1.15¼. Oats, September 47, December 50⅝.

WEDDING BELLS.

PAINTER—MERVIN

A pretty house wedding took place at high noon today, at the residence of the bride's parents on Monaghan Road, when Florence, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John S. Mervin, became the bride of H. J. Alex. Painter, son of Mrs. M. E. Painter and the late W. J. Painter of Toronto. The ceremony was performed by the pastor of Knox Church, Rev. William McDonald. Mr. R. J. Devey played the wedding music.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, was unattended. After the ceremony, a dainty wedding breakfast was served to the immediate relatives and friends, the house being profusely decorated with flowers for the occasion. Mr. and Mrs. Painter left later by motor for a honeymoon trip, after which they will reside in Toronto.

LYTLE—TAMBLYN.

A wedding took place on Thursday, August 18, at the home of the officiating clergyman, Rev. J. R. Beal, 248 Concord Avenue, Toronto, when Mr. Herbert John Lytle, only son of Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Lytle, of Lindsay, was united in marriage to Miss Florence Eileen Tamblyn, only daughter of the late Charles Tamblyn and Mrs. Tamblyn of Lindsay. The bride looked charming, dressed in a French period frock of cameo georgette with a large white hat and wearing a corsage bouquet of mixed flowers. The bridesmaid, Miss Kathleen Lytle (sister of the bridegroom), wore a French gown of blue taffeta trimmed with silver lace and handmade flowers. Her corsage bouquet was of mixed flowers. The bridegroom was supported by Mr. Clifford Tamblyn of Buffalo, brother of the bride. The bride's travelling costume was a figured georgette gown with coat and helmet turban to match. After luncheoen at the home of Mrs. Cumberland, cousin of the bride, the happy couple left on a motor trip to QQuebec and the Adirondacks. Upon their return Mr. and Mrs. Lytle will reside in Oakwood.

OBITUARY.

THOMAS NELSON.

The death took place Friday afternoon in Peterborough of Thomas Nelson, late of the Township of Otonabee.

The deceased was born on the homestead near Lang, son of the late William Nelson, but as a young man moved to Harvey township, afterwards moving to Keene village. He also lived in Vancouver for about eighteen years, but for the past eighteen years he has been resident of Peterborough county.

He lived to the ripe old age of 94 years. His wife predeceased him 47 years ago. He leaves to mourn his loss his only son, W. H. Nelson, of Toronto, three daughters, Mrs. Coon of Rochester, N.Y., Mrs. Pringle, of Rochester, N.Y., and Mrs. Burley, of Keene.

The funeral will take place from the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Burley, Keene, to-morrow (Sunday), August 21, at 12.30 o'clock, service to be held at Bethel church at 1.30 o'clock, to be made in Fife's cemetery, where his wife is buried.

GIVES ADVICE TO MARRIED MEN THOSE WITH FAMILIES, TOO!

If you must take your wife with you, says the sage, take her to some place where she can have a good time without tagging behind you all the day. Bon Echo is a good suggestion because if you do get tired of one another, there is always the lake and a canoe to jump into. On one side of the Camp there is a "babies'" beach, where the kiddies can walk out a hundred yards without wetting their tummies. On the other side, the real water babies play. There is riding and tennis and hiking, every facility for aquatic sport, good meals, and bungalow or "house" accommodation. An outdoor theatre helps cater to the aesthetic.

The station is Kaladar, just a few hours from Toronto. Ask any Canadian Pacific Agent for particulars.

2000 PILGRIMS VISIT SHRINE AT FORT STE. MARIE

Catholics of Peterborough Diocese Worship at Shrine of Martyrs.

IMPRESSIVE SCENES.

Church On Site Of Jesuits' Building Packed With Devout Worshippers.

The largest officially organized pilgrimage held to the Shrine of the holy Canadian Martyrs at Fort Ste. Marie, since its opening, took place yesterday when over two thousand people from Peterborough and the surrounding district took part in the second pilgrimage from Peterborough diocese. Last year saw nine hundred and fourteen people in thirteen coaches undertaking this devout journey to the church which rises above the burial place of the Jesuit missionaries who gave their lives and earned a martyr's crown three centuries ago, when they came out to the new land of Canada from sunny France, "to work for the Hurons, suffer every evil, and complain only to God." The hillside which rang so long ago with the victorious outcries of blood-thirsty savages, intent on their task of torturing the men of God who had come among them to turn them from evil ways, hears the peal of the church bell, the sound of the organ and echoes back the glad sound of cheerful voices, as the pilgrims to this sacred spot enjoy their meals under the trees. The stream which served the needs of the Indians and their guides, its waters reddened many a time with the blood of the innocent, now springs up brightly from the little fountains that rise from the tiny artificial lake. The statue of the Little Flower, Ste. Therese of Lisieux, looks with gentle eyes over the valley that remained deserted for so many years after the withdrawal of the Fathers from this country and welcomes the return of members of their Order in recent years, to build on the brow of the steep hill a continuation of the church of St. Joseph, built here generations back by the hands of Father Isaac Jogues and his contemporaries.

Over a thousand people journeyed from Peterborough yesterday to this Shrine, in the twenty coaches provided by the Canadian National Railway Company, who looked after their wants in a special manner, and provided free parking space for cars at the depot until their return. Three hundred citizens of Lindsay joined in the pilgrimge, twenty-five from Keene and one hundred and thirty-five from Hastings, while one hundred from Orillia, Cobourg and Port Hope and little groups from wayside stations swelled the number, and pilgrims making the trip in motors made the total over two thousand.

Prayers and litanies and hymns to the holy martyrs were recited and sung on the train on the way to the Shrine, the packed coaches with their men and women and little children, all joining in fervently in these devout exercises. Arriving at the Fort, the pilgrims made their way up the steep hill, trudging under a hot sun, baskets and wraps and bundles held in their arms, up through the heavy white dust, up the the fifty long steps of stone which form the approach to the church, up to the aisles and the seats of the edifice which looks over the verdant valley of the Wye, winding in silver peace between its low banks, "the pleasant little stream," as the Jesuit Relation of 1640 informs us, "about a mile long which connected Lake Isaragui with Georgian Bay," and was chosen then by the Fathers as the site of their central residence in Huronia.

The golden sunlight of the warm summer day which was unmarked by the storm and rain that visited the pilgrims' own city, formed the motif of the color that surrounded the worshippers in this church on the hill. Reflected back from the mirror-like surfaces of the varnished wood that lines the sacred edifice, gleaming from the ceiling and wall, were the golden rays that entered from

Army Experiment At Salisbury Plains

LONDON, Aug. 22.—(Canadian Press.)— A novel experiment in army manoeuvres was conducted at Salisbury Plain on Saturday night. The object was to discover whether a mass force of mechanized military paraphernalia consisting of tanks, tanketa, artillery and engineering appliances could move across the country in the darkness without showing a light or without being visible from the air.

Never in military history has such a formidable force in mass formation lumbered and thundered across the countryside with aeroplanes hovering overhead watching carefully for lack of discipline or failure at concealment during the halts for refueiment.

THORNTON PAYS GREAT TRIBUTE TO NEWSPAPERS

Press of Canada Not Surpassed Anywhere For Honesty and Courage.

HAS HAD FAIR PLAY.

Papers Have Often Disagreed With Him, But Have Dealt Honestly.

WINNIPEG, Man., Aug. 22 (Special to The Examiner).—Speaking to the British Newspaper Society at a luncheon tendered them in the Fort Garry Hotel by the Winnipeg Press Club, Sir Henry Thornton, President of the Canadian National Railways, paid high tribute to the integrity and broad-mindedness of the Canadian newspaper fraternity.

"It has been my misfortune," stated Sir Henry, "to have occupied a degree of public attention since I came to Canada on some things. Naturally ,the newspapers of Canada have not always seen eye to eye with me. But this I can say, unreservedly, for the newspaper press of Canada: Never have I been given anything but fair play and honest dealing by the newspapers of this country.

"I have had an opportunity to study the public press of a number of countries. It is my honest opinion that no country has a more courageous, a cleaner, a fairer, more honest press than the Dominion of Canada. Founded upon a solid base by men of wisdom, honor, and spirit, the newspaper profession of Canada is being carried on today by men and women who are a credit to their profession and to the Dominion, against whom no whisper of infamy or scandal can be raised, and who are worthy stewards of public thought in this country. As long as Canada can recruit to its journalistic ranks men and women like these, all that pertains to what is highest in the national life of this Dominion will be in safe hands."

PLANE CRASHES EAST OF LONDON

Mechanic Killed When Dutch Monoplane Is Wrecked.

PASSENGERS HURT.

LONDON, Eng., August 22. United Press. — A Fokker twin engined monoplane in the Dutch air service, crashed at Seven Oaks, twenty two miles south east of here, shortly after leaving the Croydon airdrome at 8 a.m., to-day.

The mechanic was killed and several passengers were injured

Ambulance, police and first aid workers were sent to the rescue.

The plane was enroute to Amsterdam. Eleven persons were on board, including the crew, consisting of the well known pilot Van Dink and the mechanic.

The passengers, all Europeans were hurt, but were able to walk.

James Still Dies Instantly When Car Hits Bridge in Gulch.

FOUR OTHERS HURT.

SUDBURY, Aug. 22.— (Canadian Press.)— James Stitt, of Stittsville, Ont., was instantly killed, his sister, Etta, sustained injuries from which she will probably die, and three other occupants of the car in which they were driving were less seriously injured as a result of an accident here to-day. The automobile, while passing down a deep gulch, struck a bridge and was badly wrecked.

COUNSEL TURN TO FULLER IN FINAL ATTEMPT

Attorneys For Sacco and Vanzetti Ask For Further Stay.

JUSTICES REFUSE PLEA.

Four Members of the U. S. Supreme Court Decline To Intervene.

BOSTON, Aug. 22. — (Canadian Press.)—Attempts to save Sacco and Vanzetti early this afternoon were almost wholly back to Governor Fuller and the Massachuetts Courts. Four United States' Supreme Court Justices, Taft, Holmes, Brandeis and Stone, had refused to intervene. Counsel for the two men then went before Governor Fuller for a stay to allow them further time to seek Supreme Justices and are also seeking to have Fuller order an examination of Federal Department of Justice records for possible new evidence.

Michael Mussmanno, of the Sacco-Vanzetti defense counsel, announced that Chief Justice Taft had sent him a telegram in which he announced his refusal to receive a petition for a stay of execution because the matter was outside his jurisdiction.

Mussmanno withheld the text of Chief Justice Taft's telegram, but added that Mr. Taft had advised him to go before one of the three Supreme Court Justices now in this district, if he wished action on such petition. The defense attorney has appealed in vain to Justices Holmes and Brandeis and to-day Attorney Arthur D. Hill was on his way to place a petition for a stay before Justice Harlan A. Stone at Isle Au Haut, Me.

The allotted hours of life for Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti dwindled steadily to-day while the legal exertions and sympathetic demonstrations multiplied in spite of repeated failures. Before another dawn the men will walk to the chair unless their counsel, working at several widespread points, obtain another respite or stay of sentence. With them go Celestino Madeiros, convicted of another murder. His confession, which exculpated Sacco and Vanzetti ,although discredited, served to stay his execution pending their fight for life.

Hill On Job Early.

ROCKLAND, Maine, Aug. 22. — (Canadian Press.)— Arthur D. Hill, chief counsel for Sacco and Vanzetti, rose at break of dawn to push on to Isle Au Haut, where he tried to obtain a stay of sentence for his clients from Justice Harlan F. Stone, of the United States5 Supreme Court.

Refuse Last Rites.

BOSTON, Aug. 22. — (Canadian Press.)— Sacco and Vanzetti to-day refused the last rites of the church, saying they preferred to die as they had lived, outside its pale.

Petitions Docketted.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 22. — (Canadian Press.)—Petitions of counsel for Sacco and Vanzetti asking reviews of the proceedings in their case in the Massachuetts courts were docketed to-day in the Supreme Court.

LONDON, August 22 (Canadian Press Cable). — The Duke of Devonshire, who was taken suddenly ill just before bidding farewell to the King, who had been the Duke's guest at Bolton Abbey while grouse shooting, and was leaving for Abebystead, has completely recovered, according to reports received to-day.

LABOR LEADERS DIVIDED ON BILL

Some Favor Working Against Trades Union Act Constitutionally.

OTHERS URGE DEFIANCE.

LONDON, Aug. 22. — (United Press.)—One of the fiercest battles ever to take place within the ranks of British Labor will be fought when the Trade Union Congress assembles in Edinburgh two weeks hence.

It will be a fight between moderate leaders like Thomas and Clynes, who say that the Trade Unions Bill can only be overcome by agitation for repeal, culminating in a Labor Government pledge to do so, and men like Cook and other left wingers who insist that the bill shall be defied from the beginning without waiting for an opportunity to repeal it.

HUNT HOGS.

AUGUSTA, Kas., Aug. 22.—A hunt for four razorback hogs that have gone wild was being planned here recently by a group of farmers whose cornfields and gardens have been molested. About a year ago four razorbacks escaped from a shipment of imported animals. Hounds were to be used in the chase.

Storms Over Atlantic Delays Ocean Flight

PARIS, Aug. 22. — (Canadian Press.)— Le Bourget Field was practically deserted yesterday. Weather reports early in the morning informed the aviators who have been waiting at Le Bourget for weeks for an opportunity to take off for New York, that a half gale was lashing the Atlantic seaboard from Dunkirk to Biarritz. Conditions were so bad that there was some doubt until noon whether the regular air liner between Paris and London would be able to make the journey.

The weather bureau says there is no prospect of improvement. This has been the most inclement month of August in France for several years.

LONDON PLANE PUT THROUGH TEST FLIGHTS

Passes Tests, Weighed With 90 Per Cent. of Limit Required.

EXPECT HOP-OFF SOON.

Arrives at Curtiss Field, N.Y., For Inspection of Instruments.

LONDON, Ont., August 22. Canadian Press. — The monoplane 'Sir John Carling,' motored with a duplicate of the nine cylinder Wright Whirlwind Engine used by Lindbergh advanced another great stride over the week end in her last minute preparations for the London, Ontario to London, England, 3900 mile non-stop flight.

Loaded with rocks to the weight of ninety per cent. of the limit required for her trans-oceanic hop the big ship successfully passed all tests at the U. S. army airport, Selfridge Field, Michigan, on Saturday morning.

She was delivered at once to Capt. Terry Tully and Lieut. Jimmie Medcalf, the crew for the hop to the Heart of the British Empire, and within an hour she was soaring over London, having covered the distance at better than 125 miles an hour.

Londoners who had spent an anxious day awaiting the coming of the great monoplane, readily recognized her dark green fuselage and single golden plane between two commercial ships which went up to salute.

Captain A. E. T. Bruce, one of the escort who turned in beside the Sir John Carling claimed she passed him at terrific speed, while he was running full out at 130 miles an hour.

Special details of county police were sworn in to keep back the curious and souvenir hunters, and several times the persistence and carelessness of smokers started small fires in the parched stubbis where the plane was parked. Mayor John M. Moore thereat ordered a motor truck with chemical apparatus from the London fire department to stand by beside the plane over night and until its departure at noon yesterday for New York.

Monday at Curtis Field the navigation instruments, numbering more than a dozen and ranging in cost up to a thousand dollars each, will be precision adjusted, and probably on Tuesday afternoon the ship will return to London to stand by for notice from Sir Frederick Stupart of the Meteorological Observatory, at Toronto, that the hour for the flight has come.

On Wednesday afternoon, Leonard Carling, the great grandson of Sir John Carling, will formally christen the ship to honor the memory of London's great parliamentarian, while Mayor John M. Moore will swear in Tully and Medcalf on behalf of the Federal government as Canada's first air mail carriers.

CURTIS FIELD, N. Y., August 22 —Canadian Press. — The Stinson-Detroiter monoplane, 'Sir John Carling,' arrived late yesterday from London, Ont., for a thorough test of its instruments in preparation for an attempted non-stop flight from London, Ont., to London, Eng.

Captain Terry B. Tully and Lieut. James Medcalf, co-pilot and navigator, said that the flight from London was made without incident. They flew in a direct line and made no stops en route. Commodore F. G. Ericson and Einar V. Reichnitzer, a London, newspaper man, accompanied them.

Commodore Ericson said the pilots plan to fly to Detroit on Tuesday for a check-up of the plane at the Stinson-Detroit factory. That accomplished they will fly to London, Ont., to await favorable weather for the 3900 mile hop to England, he said.

Prince Ladislav And Wife Die of Poison; Third Death Among Lubomirskis of Poland

WARSAW ,August 22. — Tragedy which has been stalking the noble Lubomirski family, one of the oldest houses in Poland, has claimed two more victims. Prince Ladislav, one of the richest landowners in the Polish Republic, and his wife, who was the Countess Plater, died on Saturday night from the alleged poisoning of game which they had shot on a hunting trip near the Russian border.

The pair, who were 30 and 26 years old respectively, suffered through four weeks of untold agony. When it was plain to the Prince that the end was near, he asked that his wife be brought into his room, and after embracing her fell back dead. The Princess died two hours later.

There is mystery about the poisoning. Four years ago Princess Lubomirski, wife of a brother of the Prince, who was made Regent of the Polish kingdom set up by Germany toward the close of the war, died under mysterious circumstances. An autopsy performed last spring disclosed that her death was caused by ground glass, believed to have been administered to her by servants in the hope of obtaining possession of some of her valuables.

Prince Ladislav and the Princess enjoyed the greatest popularity with the people. That they were murdered seems hardly to be credited. The symptoms of their illness, however, cannot be traced to meat poisoning, or to the effects of any commonly known drugs.

Expected Courtney Will Hop Off To-Day

SOUTHAMPTON, Eng., Aug. 22.—(Canadian Press.)— Captain Frank T. Courtney may hop off on his long delayed trans-Atlantic flight early this morning. After visiting Calshot yesterday afternoon and receiving favorable weather reports, he ordered his plane "Whale" loaded with gasoline with a view of making the start at dawn. He intends to fly by way of the Azores.

SAYS WOMAN SPENT MONEY HELD IN TRUST

Russian Who Killed Her and Then Himself Leaves Note.

WOUNDED TWO MORE.

Neighbors Think Money Had Been Invested By Women For Its Owner.

TORONTO, August 22. Canadian Press. — That Mrs. Medwedz had been spending money which he intended to use in bringing his wife and family over from the old country, was the tenor of a note scrawled in Russian which was pinned on the door of the room in which Samuel Royk yesterday shot and killed himself after murdering Stefan Medwedz, and wounding Medwez's wife, and Isaac Zatz, and aged Rumanian.

In the note Royk charged Mrs. Medwedz with misappropriating funds which he had entrusted to her. It is believed that Mrs. Medwedz had invested the funds for Royk and the neighbors declare she opposed Royk's intentions of bringing his family from the Russian Ukraine to this country. Royk had lately placed $170 with the steamship company for passage money and it is stated that Mrs. Medwedz had prevailed upon him to withdraw the money.

Royk like the Medwedz couple, was a Ukrainian. He roomed in the same house. Late yesterday he rushed from his room with a revolver in his hand, and fired at Mrs. Medwedz, slightly wounding her. He then followed Medwedz, who sought shelter in the home of Isaac Zatz. Royk fired at Zatz as the latter was on the door step, wounding him in the shoulder. Then the enraged Ukrainian fired at Medwedz, and, as he collapsed, Royk fired three shots into his body.

Royk then went back to his room and shot himself.

Translated, the note left by Royk was as follows: "She soaked me out of all money. I would have sent $170 to my children. She insisted I should return. I returned and she grabbed everything. I was working for two years for her. I bought everything for her. She said to me that I am not the only fool she discovered. I said she will not have to discover me. I did her."

JUBILEE CHORUS ATTRACTS CROWD

Many Hearl Good Sermon By Rev. J. H. Sutcliffe at Chemong.

The visit of the Jubilee Chorus attracted a large crowd to the interdenominational service held last night at the Rendezvous Pavilion, Chemong Park. Besides leading the singing, the choir, conducted by Martin B. Chenhall, A.R.C.O., rendered an anthem, "Praise Ye the Father," which became familiar to the Peterborough public during the Confederation celebrations.

Rev. J. H. Sutcliffe, the new minister of Murray Street Baptist Church, delivered a searching message to the large audience on the benches and in the lines of motor cars stationed in front of the Pavilion. Miss Daisy Murray's glorious voice was heard to great advantage in two solos, "Lead, Kindly Light," and "Let Jesus Come Into Your Heart."

The congregational singing was led by John Anderson. Miss Mabel Paul was the pianist and Rev. W. S. Edgar, chairman of the meeting.

THE WEATHER

There were several heavy showers yesterday, the total fall being .74 of an inch, almost ¾. The rain was largely local, as localities near by received little or none. Highest temperature yesterday, 78 degrees; lowest last night 48. Early morning fogs, such as we had this morning presage the coming of fall and the drawing to a close of the summer season. While tempted to moralize on the all-too-short duration of summer as compared with the too-long winter season, I forbear, and will allow the reader to philosophize and theorize himself or herself.—W. Political Leaders Declare Examiner Truly Independent

Editorials and News Reports Have Been Scrupulously Fair and Impartial is General Opinion of Conservative and Liberal Workers Alike.

BELIEFS OF THE PERSONS MOST CONCERNED ARE EXAMINER'S BEST ANSWER TO CHARGE

"I Can Say The Examiner Has Always Played Fair," Says Roland Denne; . . . Fair in All Things."—Confidential Instructions To Reporters Laid Open.

Controversy following an article in the Port Hope Evening Guide has involved The Examiner through a statement made by Hon. W. H. Price, in which the Attorney-General gives the inference that The Examiner is a Liberal organ. The Guide, in whose quarrel The Examiner has no part, charged that efforts had been made by the Government to put that newspaper out of business because it is a dry and a Liberal organ. Hon. Mr. Price replied to the charge as follows:

"I do not know anything about the newspaper situation. I imagine though, that with daily papers in Peterborough, Port Hope, and Oshawa, the Liberal field is fairly well covered. The Port Hope Times is, I think, the only Conseravtive daily in that area. If The Guide is going out of business, why does it not do so gracefully?"

In a statement made to-day, R. M. Glover, managing director of The Examiner, declared:

"The Examiner is absolutely non-partisan. Up until June, 1920, Peterborough was served by two newspapers, The Review, representing the Conservative element, and The Examiner, the Liberals of the district. In June of that year, however, The Review was absorbed by The Examiner, and from that time The Examiner has been non-political, editorially and in its news columns. An honest attempt has been made to give the same representation and the same true reports to all political parties, and that this has been successfully done is evidenced by many letters of appreciation from leaders of the Conservative, Liberal, and the Farmer Parties ,and by both winners and losers, in several election campaigns."

Mr. Glover remarked that he was greatly surprised by the statement in view of the fact that all the local political leaders are more than satisfied with the impartial attitude of The Examiner.

"In my opinion," he said, "it is not the function of an independent newspaper to take sides in any political or religious controversy with a partisan end, and the responsibility for impartial reporting and editing is much increased when the newspaper is the only one serving a large section of the country . I am confident that everything has been done by the editors and staff of The Examiner to serve all interests alike."

An Adequate Rejoinder

Perhaps in no other way so well can The Examiner's independent stand be shown as through the instructions issued to reporters and correspondents in preparation for Federal and Provincial elections. The Examiner has a staff of more than fifty paid correspondents throughout its territory in Peterborough, Hastings - Peterborough, Northumberland, Durham and Victoria, and all of these were urged to write impartial reports of political activities. In some cases, where untrained writers were unable to omit their own personal leanings, the reports were re-written in The Examiner office, so as to delete the partisan refererences.

These instructions were issued by the City Editor without any idea that they would be made public, and only the necessity to refute the misleading innuendo compels their publication today.

In a bulletin to correspondents dated September 14, 1925, the following sentence occurs:

The Examiner is independent in this election, as it was in the last provincial election (1923), and I ask all correspondents to lay aside their own political opinions and report impartially all political meetings or events it is necessary for them to cover.

The first bulletin sent out at the commencement of General election campaign of 1926 is dated July 24. One of the paragraphs in it is as follows:

The Examiner is non-partizan. Conservative, Liberal, Progressive, all are alike, and all receive the same treatment. Examiner reporters cover meetings of all parties and report them impartially and that is the service that is expected of correspondents. Vote as you like, but keep your personal opinions out of all reports. This warning does not seem to be necessary except in four districts from which reports last year had to be completely re-written to delete the partisan angle.

Digs Himself Out Of Nick-a-Jack Cave

SHEALL MOUND, Tenn., Aug. 22. — Canadian Press. — Lawrence S. Haley, explorer and geologist, lost in Nick-A-Jack cave since last Monday, dug himself out eight miles from the main entrance at 9.30 o'clock yesterday morning.

Ashley was in a semi-dazed condition and was unable to make any full statement concerning his experience extending over six days in the great cave. However, he stated that he had discovered a new cavern even larger than the Mammoth Cave in Kentucky.

NO TRACES OF THREE PLANES

Ships and Planes Continue Intensive Search of Pacific.

FEAR ERWIN LOST.

SAN FRANCISCO, August 22 (Canadian Press). — The aviation world, its eyes held westward, with heavy heart to-day watched the aircraft, naval vessels, and merchant ships continue their intensive search in the trackless wastes of the Pacific for the seven fliers who flew down the airways from Oakland toward Honolulu last week, and have not been heard of since.

The efforts of the fifty-eight naval vessels, aided by merchant craft steering a course along the 3,400 mile great circle between San Francisco and Honolulu after a six-day search, failed to reveal any trace of the three missing planes, Miss Doran, Golden Eagle, and Dallas Spirit. Unfrequented reaches on both east and west shores of the Hawaiian Islands have failed to give an indication of the planes or their crews.

The failure of the naval vessels to find any trace of the Dallas Spirit, carrying Captain William Erwin, which went down about six hundred miles from San Francisco on Friday night, has led aviation experts to believe that his plane crashed and gave the occupants little chance to get the life raft.

Three Persons Killed In Sanshui Typhoon

HONGKONG, Aug. 22.—(Canadian Press.)—Two children and a man were killed and five persons seriously injured at Samshui, where a house collapsed during a typhoon. The military camp at Samshui stood the storm well and reported no damage. Shipping was hurt but little, but in Kowloon Bay the British Steamship Rawalpindi had to be assisted by a government rescue tug.

The greatest velocity of the wind was 115 miles an hour. The rainfall for 12 hours was 4.85 inches.

The British Steamship Rawalpindi left London June 17 for Kobe and arrived at the latter port July 30. It was on the return trip when caught in the storm.

TORONTO COUPLE ARE DROWNED NEAR MONTREAL

Mr. and Mrs. James Hutchinson Lose Lives in Soulanges Canal.

BODIES RECOVERED.

Believed Driver Lost Control of Car Which Ran Into Canal.

MONTREAL, Que., Aug. 22 (Canadian Press).—Mr. and Mrs. James L. Hutchison, of 716 Manning Street, Toronto, Ont., were drowned when their automobile swerved and went over the bank into the Soulanges Canal on the Montreal-Toronto Highway yesterday afternoon. The bodies were recovered.

It is thought Mrs. Hutchison, who was driving, had a spell of weakness which caused her to lose control of the machine, which ran into the canal.

The accident happened at a spot one and a quarter miles west of Cascades, and about thrity miles from Montreal. Witnesses stated the Hutchison automobile was travelling between fifteen and twenty miles on hour when it suddenly swerved and went over the edge of the Canal, which is low at that point, and headed straight into the water.

Immediately after the accident, A. C. St. Armour, Superintendent of the Soulanges Canal, was notified and he sent a diver to the scene. The latter first recovered the body of Hutchison, who had managed to get out of the car. Mrs. Hutchison was later found still at the driving wheel of the automobile. The car was salvaged.

Bodies Identified

Identification of the bodies was made, said Mr. St. Amour, by the driving license card that Mrs. Hutchison had in her purse while a card was also found upon Hutchison.

The bodies were brought to Montreal and an inquest will be held here today.

Chief of Police Dickson of Toronto was notified of the accident by Coroner McMahon, and was asked to communicate with relatives of the victims.

CHILD HURT BY TRACTOR

Cameron Elson, 4, Has Foot Crushed at Father's Barn.

NO BONES BROKEN.

MILLBROOK, August 22. — Cameron Elson the four-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Wilfrid Elson, Seventh Line, Cavan, met with what might have proved a very serious accident late on Friday afternoon, when a tractor which was being used in unloading grain at the barn ran over his left foot, bruising it badly.

George Elson was operating the tractor, and unaware of the child's proximity, backed up to release a rope that was caught under the machine.

Cameron was brought immediately to the village, where Dr. H. A. Turner gave medical attention. Fortunately no bones were broken, and the little boy was taken home and is progressing favourably toward recovery.

AGENCIES SEEK LOST PLANES AND RESCUER

Vast Pacific Continues To Hold Fast Fate of Seven Aviators.

KEEP CEASELESS VIGIL.

Nothing Heard From Dallas Spirit Since S.O.S. Call on Friday.

SAN FRANCISCO, Calif., Aug. 22.—(Canadian Press).—The vast Pacific ocean continued yesterday to hold fast to the fate of the seven who dared to fly over its thousands of miles of water from the shores of California to the Islands of Hawaii.

Despite all the resources of the navy, the army, the scores of steamships plying the great swelling sea, and the hopes and prayers of relatives, friends and the world that pays tribute to brave effort, there was no word to indicate whether the ocean had claimed them or they were still afloat, waiting for rescue.

Five days had passed since the 'Golden Eagle' and the 'Miss Doran' bearing their four courageous men and one woman roared away from the crowded Oakland airport that cheered them to win glory and the prizes offered by James D. Dole for the first and second planes to cross 2,400 miles of the Pacific.

Nor was anything heard from Pilot Jack Frost and Navigator Gordon Scott of Los Angeles, of the 'Golden Eagle,' nor from Miss Mildred Doran, the beautiful young Canadian-born school teacher who bravely shared the dangers of John Auggie Pedlar and Lieut. V. R. Knope, who piloted and navigated the plane named in her honor.

Two days had gone by since Captain William P. Erwin of Dallas, Texas, and Alvin H. Eichwaldt of Alemeda, Calif., with the courage that laughed in the face of death, flew out to sea to search the waves along the whole route to Honolulu for traces of those who had preceded them. From their plane, the 'Dallas Spirit,' they radioed the gay messages to friends and the jests of men going light-heartedly on a great adventure.

And then through the 600 miles of air came their S.O.S. piercing the night. It was at 9.02 p.m. Friday:

Went Into Tailspin.

"We went into a tailspin—S.O.S.—We came out of it, but were sure scared. It was a close call. We thought it was all off, but we came out of it. The lights of the instrument board went out and it was so dark that Bill couldn't see the——. We are in another—S.O.S.—."

That was the last heard from Erwin and Eichwaldt—Erwin, holder of the distinguished service medal for heroic service for his country in France during the great war, and Eichwaldt, the young navigator whose hand on the telegraph key sent the messages that will show others how to die to aid their fellows.

Scores of ships of the navy continued yesterday to plow the sea in the search for the brave seven. The liners parting the waves between the mainland and the islands maintained their ceaseless vigil. Out from the Golden Gate of California soared army planes working with those catapulted from the decks of the aeroplane carriers Langley and Aroostock, and far out in the Pacific, other army and navy planes spread their wings over the waters of Hawaii.

What human agency could do was done, will be done.

But whether those sought rode the waves, or whether waves or eternity rolled over them, was not known.

STORMY WEATHER DELAYS OLD GLORY

Bureau Report Shows Cloudy Skies Prevail Over North Atlantic.

CURTISS FIELD, N.Y., August 22 (Canadian Press). — The Fokker monoplane, "Old Glory," stayed in its hangar all day yesterday while its pilots, Lloyd W. Bertaud and Jas. D. Hill, waited for a west wind strong enough to help lift the heavily loaded plane into the air for the proposed New York to Rome non-stop flight.

A slight east wind blowing under overcast skies was all the weatherman had to offer the fliers, who have announced that only favourable weather is needed to send them on their way now that the last test has been made.

Coupled with the local weather conditions, which prevented a start, was the report of the United States Weather Bureau that cloudy skies and fog prevailed yesterday over the North Atlantic Coast from New York to Cape Race ,N.F., with storms of marked intensity over the east Atlantic. Between the fog-shrouded American coast and the storm area off Ireland, fair weather was reported. These conditions were expected to continue to-day, the Weather Bureau reported.

"There is no use looking for a hop-off until we get a west wind of at least 20 miles' velocity," Bertaud said.

"Heads I Win; Tails You Lose"

NEW YORK, August 20 (Canadian Press). — A great business career is predicted for Tony Pumente,of Long Island City. Business was dull in his shoe shine parlour. "I come out way ahead," said Tony. "You see, shine cost me only about half cent."

Take-Off Tuesday For Rio De Janeiro

BRUNSWICK, Ga., Aug. 22 (Canadian Press)—Paul Redfern, Georgia aviator, announced yesterday afternoon, weather conditions permitting, that he would take off in his giant monoplane Port of Brunswick, Tuesday morning on his proposed 4,600 mile non-stop flight to Rio de Janeiro, Brazil.

Redfern, in making the announcement, explained that weather conditions from Turk's Island to Trinidad were unfavorable for an earlier attempt. He also wished to have some time to relax after several strenuous days spent in grooming the Stinson-Detroiter monoplane for the hazardous flight over ocean and jungles.

SOUTH ENGLAND SWEPT BY GALE

Reports Indicate Heavy Damage To Crops Through Severe Storm.

SHIPS SEEK SHELTER.

LONDON, Aug. 22. — (Canadian Press.)—All this year's records of summer rainfall were eclipsed Saturday by a great south-westerly gale accompanied by torrential rain storms which raged throughout the south of England and generally around the coasts.

Seaside holiday makers and ships had to rush for shelter, regattas and bathing were suspended and from all points came reports of damage to crops and other destruction through severe storms.

Ships Collide.

The nine hundred passengers on the two mail steamers St. David and St. Patrick had a trying experience in a collision off Fishguard, Wales, the force of which carried away the super-structure under the bridge.

It was 2 o'clock in the morning when the collision took place. In the darkness and raining torrents it was impossible to ascertain the extent of the damage, consequently the 600 persons aboard the St. David and the 300 on the St. Patrick, most of whom were half dressed, became frantic and the utmost efforts of the ships' officers hardly served to prevent a panic among the screaming and fainting women and children, several of whom were injured in the confusion of scrambling to the deck.

Both mail boats, although considerably damaged, managed to return to Fishguard under their own steam, when the St. David's passengers were transferred to another steamer which sailed for Ireland after considerable delay.

Train Derailed.

All cross-channel steamers had terrible crossings, among the sufferers being Prince Henry, who after a holiday at Le Touquet, crossed the Boulogne to Folkstone. A London express train was derailed near Maidstone, but nobody was injured.

Air-liners also had rough crossings and needless to say the inclemency of the weather seriously interfered with seasonal channel swimming and the projected trans-Atlantic flights.

Nude Dance On Steps Is Stopped By Police

NEW YORK, Aug. 20 (United Press). — Physicians at Bellevue Hospital had John McGrath, 57, under examination to-day, hoping to find out what would cause him to undress himself on the door steps of Mayor James J. Walker's home in Greenwich Village and there execute a nude dance.

A policeman interrupted the dance, shoved the man back into a dark corner, sent for a blanket, wrapped up McGrath, and carried him to the hospital.

LONDON, Aug. 22 (Canadian Press).—Reuter's Shanghai correspondent reports that shots were exchanged again yesterday morning between the Tsing Tao squadron's flagship and the Woosung forts. No damage was done.

A Shanghai dispatch of August 20 reported five warships, believed to be the Northern Tsing Tao squadron, had appeared off Woosung, North of Shanghai, that morning, one of them firing a few shots at the Woosung forts.

WINNIPEG GRAIN.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 22.—Development of an excellent demand for wheat for export gave this market a strong finish on Saturday, final quotations being 1 7-8c to 1 3-8c higher; October at $1.49 5-8; December, $1.45 7-8; and May, $1.50 1-8 asked.

Early price strength was due to bullish interpretation of the Free Press crop report, but the opening bulge brought out a large volume of wheat, and within a few minutes all initial gains were lost. Mid-session was dull until seaboard houses started to absorb a fairly large quantity of wheat. Offerings became scarce as demand increased.

The past 24 hours brought a return to higher temperatures in the Canadian West, and favorable weather is predicted.

Coarse grains were without feature. The cash market was active, spreads on some contract wheat up 1c to 2c.

COLOGNE, Germany, August 22.—Canadian Press. — The proposed flight of Lieut. Otto Koennecke in the biplane 'Germania' was postponed yesterday on account of unfavorable weather.

CIRCLE GLOBE WITHIN 15 DAYS

Aviators Hope To Establish Record For Flight Around the World.

THREE OCEAN HOPS.

DETROIT, Mich., Aug. 22 (Canadian Press). — A hope of circling the globe in the record-smashing time of 15 days will guide Edward F. Schlee, president of the Wayco Oil Corporation, and William Brock, his pilot, when they hop off this morning for Curtiss Field, L.I., en route to Harbor Grace, Newfoundland, the official starting point.

Edward S. Evans, Detroit, manufacturer, and Linton Wells, newspaperman, using aeroplanes and other means of conveyance, completed a round the world trip in 28 days 14 hours 36 minutes for the present record. By using their plane over the entire charted course of 20,845 miles, Schlee and Brock hope to return to Harbor Grace in 15 days.

Re-conditioned, Schlee's Stinson-Detroiter monoplane in which Eddie Stinson recently won the national air tour will serve as the flier's vehicle. The plane has been christened "Pride of Detroit."

The fliers plan to leave Curtiss Field for Harbor Grace Tuesday. From that point the route lies to London, Stuttgart, Belgrade, Constantinople and Bagdad. Then through Persia the route swings southward in a loop to Calcutta, Rangoon and on to Hong-Kong, Toyko, the Midway islands, Honolulu, San Francisco and thence eastward through Cheyenne, Chicago and Detroit, would return the plane to its starting point.

Three ocean hops, each spanning more than 2,500 miles, face the fliers.

The first is from Harbor Grace to London, the second from Toyko to the Midway Islands, and the last from Honolulu to San Francisco. Preparations for the flight have centred largely around providing the contingencies on these hops. Equipment similar to that carried by some of the Dole-Honolulu fliers will be placed in the 'Pride of Detroit.' The complete emergency equipment contains a life raft and oars, two bottles of air for inflating the boat, a 15-day supply of emergency rations, a gallon of water, condensation water cups, disinfectants and stimulants, a dozen flares for drift correction, two flashlights, six friction ship flares and a Very pistol for firing red, white and green rockets.

The gas tanks when empty should support the plane in the event of a landing at sea, but the time will be dependent upon conditions.

DROWNED FROM RAFT.

Sarnia Girl Loses life While Bathing on Saturday Afternoon.

SARNIA, Ont., Aug. 22 (Canadian Press).—Mary Barker, aged 11 years, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Barker, St. Vincent Street, was drowned Saturday afternoon while bathing in Lake Huron. No one actually saw the accident, but it is surmised that the little girl fell from a raft on which she was playing. The body was recovered about an hour later with grappling irons. Besides the parents, three brothers and one sister survive.

Bush Fires Raging South-Eastern France

PARIS, Aug. 22 (Canadian Press).—While fires are now raging in many of the forests of Southeastern France, the South and Southwestern coasts are being swept by rains, floods and storms.

Departments of Gers, Ardeche and Drome many streams were over their banks and some homes were evacuated while wide expanses of plowed fields and meadows were flooded. Heavy seas and winds along the Atlantic Coast have made the holidays for many vacationists miserable, adding to the discomfort caused by almost daily rains.

NOTHING TO BLOW ABOUT

The company needed a good bugler and a wizened little fellow from the ranks stepped forward at the announcement.

"Are you a good bugler?" asked the captain.

"No, sir, I'm no bugler!" the private declared, as though he had been insulted.

"Well, for the love of the army and navy, why did you step forward, then?"

"Well, sir, I thought you said 'burglar'."—Passing Show.

OPEN CASE FILES FOR INSPECTION

Representatives of Sacco-Vanzetti Request That Records Be Examined.

APPEAL TO PRESIDENT.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 22 (Canadian Press).—Announcement by the Department of Justice yesterday that its files would be opened to high Massachusetts authorities should inspection be requested in connection with the Sacco-Vanzetti case, was followed immediately by an appeal by representatives of the condemned men that the Lowell committee undertake such an examination.

At the same time a telegram was sent to Governor Fuller requesting a stay of execution to permit inspection of the Government records. The wire to the Massachusetts executive was signed by Arthur Garfield Hayes, of New York, and Francis Fisher Kane, of Philadelphia, who earlier in the day had conferred for several hours with Acting Attorney - General Farnum.

Hayes and Kane likewise made public a telegram which, they said, had been sent President Coolidge at the summer White House in South Dakota Saturday after the two had discussed the case with Attorney-General Sargent at his home in Vermont.

The wire to Mr. Coolidge urged that the Government files relating to the case be opened before the men were executed, adding that "it seems to us the honor of our country would be irrefutably sullied if these men are put to death when millions of people sincerely believe that important evidence is kept secret by the Government."

Obtain Summer Addresses.

During the day counsel for Sacco and Vanzetti obtained over the telephone from Supreme Court officials the summer address of all justices within a day's reach of Boston. The summer address of Chief Justice Taft, vacationing at Murray Bay, Que., was said to have been requested in particular.

Meanwhile, to-day it is expected a record of the case will be filed with the clerk of the Supreme Court, completing an effort initiated last week to have the high tribunal review the proceedings in the Norfolk County Superior Court of Massachusetts where the men were tried and convicted, and also the action of the State Supreme Court in refusing the review.

HINDENBURG WILL CELEBRATE 80TH BIRTHDAY STILL IN OFFICE

German President Reluctantly Continues Until Successor is Found.

LIVES REMOTE LIFE.

Small Entourage Maintained By Aged Soldier, Who Wishes to Retire at Once.

BERLIN, Aug. 22 (Canadian Press). —Considerable stir has been caused in Germany by the announcement of preparations for President Hindenburg's 80th birthday. The date is October 2, but it is not too early in view of the holiday season to start the collection for the Hindenburg Fund, which is to be used for the benefit of war victims, or the Hindenburg stamp, which will be sold at twice the ordinary price for the same charitable cause. Hindenburg's wish that any fund opened in his honor should be used for helping others has disarmed even the most bitter enemies of his presidency.

The whole point of Hindenburg's 80th birthday is that it rees him remaining in office till the end of his presidential term. It was his dearest wish that he should be permitted to retire this 2nd of October six months before the term of office expires. Unhappily there is no successor to take his place capable of appeasing the conflicting ambitions of German party politics. Apart from a natural weariness and longing for privacy, Hindenburg is still perfectly hale and perfectly capable of fulfilling any public functions required of him. It is true that he is never seen at private parties, and a dinner with an old regimental comrade is an event commented on. His frequent attendance at funerals of old friends is one of the saddest attributes of a long life. No great public character lives a life more remote from the people, no popular figure-head recognized as a symbol rather than an active force, ever lived so free from all political machinations. There is only one man with genuine power in his hands—the man who acted in the same capacity to President Ebert. This is Dr. Ottos Meissner.

Hindenburg's household, more elaborate than that of Germany's first President only in so far as the traditions of an officer's family life differ from those of a working man's, consists of his son, Major Oscar Von Hindenburg, and his son's wife, a woman not yet 30 years of age, with two little children. Four civil servants form his immediate personal entourage, aided by a captain of the Reichswehr, whose rank precludes the thought of any military intriguing in high places. Of these four the name of Dr. Meissner, Secretary of State, may easily be looked upon as that of one of the most important men in Germany. His work lies entirely behind the scenes. Dr. Meissner retained his post on Ebert's death. This political man with a head above party is the dark horse of German politics, his influence is paramount, his farsightedness said to be unique.

Hindenburg's daughter-in-law occupies a curious position in Berlin's social life. In the President's palace she receives the guests, takes the head of the table opposite Hindenburg himself, and performs the very onerous duties of mistress of an important establishment, while her husband, Major Von Hindenburg, remains discreetly in the background. Once outside the palace she is far less important socially than the wife of Dr. Stresemann and less active than the wives of several Secretaries of State.

HONOR TO PAINTER MEETS APPROVAL

Sir George Clausen Headed the Group Who Decorated St. Stephen's Hall.

LONDON, Aug. 22 (Canadian Press). —General approval has greeted the bestowal of a knighthood upon the eminent painter, George Clausen, doyen of the group of painters who have effected the mural paintings illustrative of English history which were unveiled in St. Stephen's Hall, adjoining the Houses of Parliament, by Premier Stanley Baldwin. Sir George Clausen's own contribution was a depiction of the reading of Wycliffe's Bible to a gathering secretly brought together to hear it, and constitutes a landscape study, full of the quiet beauty of the English countryside. It is one of the most effective of the group of eight paintings.

As for the group as a whole there are commendations for the ingenuity exhibited in keeping a sense of harmony in the series. The paintings measure 15 by 10 feet and are appropriate to the surrounding colour scheme of the walls and of the stained glass windows above. The historical period covered is from the days of Alfred the Great to the Union with Scotland. The other seven paintings are "Queen Elizabeth Commissioning Sir Walter Raleigh to sail for America," by A. K. Lawrence; "King John Confronted by the Barons," by Charles Sims; "King Alfred's Longships," by Colin Gill; "Richard the First Leaving for the Crusades," by Glyn Philpot; "Sir Thomas Roe at the Court of the Mogul Emperor," by Professor Rothenstein, and "The English and Scotch Commissioners" by W. T. Monnington.

Each panel was given by a separate donor—the Duke of Devonshire, Lord Davenport, Lord Burnham, the Duke of Portland, Lord Fitzalan of Derwent, Lord Derby, the Duke of Bedford, and Lord Younger of Leckie.

MONDAY, AUGUST 22, 1927.

CORRECTING HON. W. H. PRICE.

In commenting upon the daily newspapers of Central Ontario, Hon. W. H. Price, Attorney-General, as quoted in The Toronto Star of Saturday, August 20th, expresses an implication in his reference to The Examiner that is utterly unwarrantable and simply untrue.

Hon. Mr. Price said: "I imagine that with daily papers in Peterborough, Port Hope, and Oshawa, the Liberal field is fairly well covered."

The Examiner's answer to that statement is that the Liberal field is not only fairly well covered in the district served by The Examiner, but that it is exceptionally well covered, and FURTHER THAT THE CONSERVATIVE FIELD IN THE EXAMINER'S EXTENSIVE AREA IS LIKEWISE EXCEPTIONALLY WELL COVERED BY THE EXAMINER. That is The Examiner's record established by half a dozen recent campaigns in which some of the gravest issues in the history of this country and province were submitted to the people.

And The Examiner not only maintained a neutral, independent editorial position, but in order that the electors who are readers of The Examiner in its expanding territory might be thoroughly informed on the various issues, Examiner reporters have attended political meetings of both parties in all sections from Trenton to Lindsay and from Tweed to Port Hope.

Hon. Mr. Price's remark quite obviously gave The Examiner a political classification from which it has been divorced since The Peterborough Review ceased publication. Since then The Examiner has had no relations with the old political parties except the relation of cash business. The advertisements of Liberals and Conservatives and also of the U.F.O. and the Independent Labor Party have been accepted on the same prices basis, and in the meetings to be reported The Examiner has preserved the same equality both in regard to number and space.

And if old loyalties were severed, old enmities also faded and disappeared. Readers of The Examiner, Liberal and Conservative, today frankly affirm that it is non-partizan. Quite a number of daily newspapers in Ontario are in the same position as The Examiner, the most recent amalgamation being the merging of the Kingston Whig and Kingston, Standard, political adversaries for generations.

This is not the first time Hon. W. H. Price's opinion reached The Examiner.

But this is the first time it was made public.

Beyond a doubt, Hon. Mr. Price has not been a reader of The Examiner. His opinion is second hand, and most persons who read The Toronto Star's article last Saturday may know the name of the man who inspired that opinion.

The Examiner cheerfully exonerates Hon. Mr. Price from any intention or desire to injure its business and prestige, and at the same time accepts his statement to The Toronto Star that he "has no knowledge about any $20,000 worth of shares in a Port Hope paper being vested in trust in his name," as alleged by another newspaper.

It is respectfully suggested to Hon. Mr. Price that in view of his dignity and responsibility as Attorney-General he exercises stronger disbelief and discretion in repeating, privately or publicly, the opinions of this reckless informant of his.

Finally, if the intelligent men and women of this district desire impartial politicial news, Liberal, Conservative or otherwise, ungarbled and uncolored, so that as a jury they may form their own conclusion and decide their political actions, they will continue to find it in the news columns of The Examiner.

Party propaganda will be referred to the business office.

HON. MR. FERGUSON'S DECISION.

Premier Ferguson employs no ambiguities in announcing his decision not to be a candidate for the Conservative federal leadership.

Paraphrased in the terms of a similar notification from the summer camp of President Coolidge, that posed a little problem for the rhetoricians of the Republican party, Hon. Mr. Ferguson is more explicit in his negation.

Mr. Coolidge said: "I do not choose to run, etc.", and Ontario's Premier declares in other words: "I choose not to run."

The transposed "not" leaves no room for doubt.

Mr. Ferguson's renunciation of an honor for which he has been regarded as a strong candidate should be pleasing to the people of Ontario who appreciate a striking significance of his step. He has surrounded himself with a Cabinet that is, on the whole, capable and efficient, and he has personally undertaken a large share of work The departments of Mines, Agriculture, Justice and Forests, appear to be directed particularly well, and although the leadership of the Government might be successfully assumed by Hon. Mr. Price, Hon. Mr. McCrea, or Hon. Mr. Martin, the removal of Premier Ferguson would undoubtedly upset the arrangements and adjustments he has established around him.

Many of the people of Ontario will see in Mr. Ferguson's decision his adherence to the pledge he gave in the last election to make the government control legislation function in the cause of true temperance, or to abandon it. This is an obligation Mr. Ferguson took upon himself with a courage and confidence that strengthened his promises with an appeal of sincerity which won him Liberal reinforcements for the gaps by Conservative desertions.

The very fact of his remaining at the provincial helm is proof of that sincerity and of his sense of duty to the temperance, if not to the prohibition, sentiment of this province. To quit eight months after giving that pledge might seem like abandoning a cause that is really close to the hearts of many men and women, although they may not parade their interest and concern as conspicuously as do those who make prohibition almost an act of religion.

And Mr. Ferguson is gradually developing between Ontario and the other provinces, especially with Quebec, a spirit of goodwill and understanding that is only starting its permeative effects. His work this year in that direction is a notable advancement, and in all probability will spread out in larger circles next year. Hon. Mr. Ferguson has other enterprises at hand which for their development no doubt require his personal attention. His week-end announcement means that his efforts in these matters will not be abruptly ended by the possible fortunes of the Winnipeg convention.

THE ORPHAN EDITORIAL.

A good editorial is often like bread cast upon the waters—it returns after many days. But the part which the editor of the Stayner Sun does not like is that it sometimes returns with its authorship credited to a paper which did not originate it but only scissored it. The editor of the Sun says he cannot help feeling a bit peeved when he sees:

> "An article that cost us painful moments of mental toil and struggle that stirred our grey matter to its depths—or was it heights?—calmly appropriated by a fellow-struggler as his own product. We wish some of our confreres would tell us if this is an evil which must be patiently endured, or should we endeavor by precept and example to raise the standard of literary morality among some of our neighbors and friends in the craft?"

The Stayner editor is not alone in his experience. The reprinting of editorial comment is almost universal, and for the most part it is an excellent practice. If an editorial contains anything of value a newspaper does a real service in seeing that it gets the widest possible circulation. Usually the article reproduced is properly credited to the paper in which it originally appeared. Deliberate journalistic piracy is the rare exception. Natural wrath at seeing a brain-child kidnapped may always be assuaged by recalling what Irvin Cobb said about the fate of a certain funny paragraph produced by a journeyman humorist of his acquaintance. It was a good joke, born of mother wit, but its fate was typical of many of its kind. A paragrapher in another city packed it into a line; then it came out as a jingle in a comic weekly; it became an anecdote, a popular song, a movie sub-title; a musical comedy was at length written around it, which paid $18,000 in royalties, or exactly $17,999.25 more than the originator got for it. But the end, according to Mr. Cobb, was not yet:

> "It crossed the seas to the mother country, where, after being carefully sterilized, deodorized, searched for deadly points, disinfected, and furnished with footnotes, a chart, a glossary, and a set of plans and specifications, it becomes a regular English joke and appears in Punch. It is then copied back on this side by the Evening Post. Nine years later the Boston Ttranscript prints it with a credit to Harper's Weekly. And then some hoary-headed old doodle-bug of an antiquarian crawls out from under a log in the woods and produces the proof to show that it was stolen from Charles Lamb, who got it from Aristophanes, who copied it from one of the pyramids, but after that its real origin is lost in the mists of prehistoric times."

After all, if an editorial gets orphaned and adopted and republished time after time, it is only an indication of its good parentage; otherwise it would not survive. The writer of editorials works anonymously and cannot complain if others give shelter to his nameless offspring. —London Advertiser.

UNITED STATES LAW.

While the administration of law in the United States is a matter that directly concerns the people of that country and which they themselves must settle, nevertheless Canadians, who are such close neighbors, cannot help observing the discussion that has been going on for some time. The Sacco-Vanzetti case has given new impetus to the demands that have been made for a revision of the law so that justice may be administered promptly and effectively, and not be frustrated by an endless succession of technicalities.

When the eminence of those who are demanding reform is considered, the wonder is that something has not been done before this. Some time ago Chief Justice William Howard Taft made the damaging statement that "the trial in the United States is a game of chance in which the advantage is with the criminal. The same sentiment is expressed by ex-Governor Charles S. Whitman of New York; "The laws of America as at present constituted are protecting the criminal." The convention of the American Bar Association, which met in 1923 in Milwaukee, heard its special committee on crime report that the laws must be simplified, and that the legal system of the United States lacked in three great essentials for law enforcement—celerity, certainty and finality—and that in most courts of the United States, for a trial judge to attempt to correct a false argument, to expose a specious plea, even when the plea is having a wrongful effect, for him to expose an effort to inject passion or prejudice, or to arouse sympathy in order to shield the blackest guilt, if the defendant is convicted, may require a new trial."

These are severe indictments, and could easily be multiplied. Even after capture, it is pointed out, the modern professional criminal frequently finds a way to elude justice through the archaic technicalities of inherited procedure. His advisers have learned to turn the very machinery of justice to their own advantage, to make devices which were designed to protect the innocent a means of escape for the guilty. Misspelled words, misplaced or omitted initials, and the use of even well-known abbreviations, are still sufficient in not a few States to invalidate an indictment.—Brantford Expositor.

CATTLE GRAIN, AND PRODUCE

CHICAGO GRAIN

CHICAGO, Aug. 22 (Canadian Press).—Firmness of Liverpool cables, an improved seaboard demand for American wheat, and late frost damage reports from Saskatchewan, gave strength to wheat values here Saturday. Closing prices showing a net gain of 1¼c to 1⅝c. Corn was up ¼c to ½c; oats ⅛ to ¼c, and provisions 5c to 12½c advance.

Wet weather in the United Kingdom and the Continent was given as the cause of the late upturn in Liverpool. Considerable damage was said to have resulted in many sections because of the rainy weather, while harvesting has been curtailed. These conditions have brought European buyers to a realization of the seriousness of the situation abroad and they have come into the American market to meet their needs. All offers abroad overnight were accepted, indications pointing to upward of 1,000,000 bushels.

Crop News Conflicting

Crop news from Canada continues to be of a conflicting character, some advices indicating that damage will be more severe than estimated, but there are many optimistic reports current stating that from one to three weeks of good weather will be required to mature the entire crop. Temperatures were warmed Saturday and yesterday, but the forecast was for slightly cooler. One leading authority telegraphed that frost damage in the Northwest Saskatchewan district was severe, and that many fields suffered.

Corn was dull, but showed a firm tone most of the session, being influenced largely by the action of wheat. Continued cool weather prevails over the main parts of the belt but warmer weather is forecast over the week-end.

Oats showed little change with trade quiet.

Provisions were somewhat firmer with strength in cotton oil a factor.

MONTREAL GRAIN AND PRODUCE

MONTREAL, Aug. 22 (Canadian Press).—The feature of the export grain trade here Saturday was the heavy purchases made of American hard wheat by Continent and United Kingdom buyers. The volume of business was the largest transacted here in some time.

The domestic trade in oats was fair and values were well maintained.

The flour trade was quiet, there being little demand for Spring or Winter wheat grades, but prices were unchanged. The demand for all lines of millfeed continued good, but the turnover was small owing to the scarcity of supplies. The undertone was firm.

A stronger feeling developed in the butter market and prices were advanced ¼c per pound. The receipts were 2,017 packages.

The cheese market was quiet but firm. The receipts were 7,582 boxes.

A fair amount of business was done in eggs and prices ruled steady. The receipts were 1,438 cases.

A Thought For To-day

WORK WELL WHEN TREATED WELL.

The unsuccessful are inclined to think that there is no sentiment in business—that business is a cold and cruel form of competition—that corporations are pitiless in their plans to make money and ruthless in their schemes for success Sometimes this sounds reasonable and sometimes it is true.

But this is the survival side of the story of competition. This is the old idea of attending to your competitor's business and not your own.

The modern business corporation may be calculating and cold with competitors but there is not a concern in this country that would succeed on the plan of treating its employees this way.

The biggest factor in any business success to-day is the human element and humans will not work well when not treated well.

Business to survive to-day must meet competition, not by questionable methods, but by the use of better brains, and the best brains will work well only where they are treated well. Business men know this.

Red Conspiracy Is Unearthed By Police

ATHENS, Greece, Aug. 20 (Canadian Press).—A conspiracy to overthrow the government and reinstate General Theodorus Pangalos, the former dictator, has been discovered, it was stated yesterday.

Thirty leaders, including two officers, were arrested.

Recent dispatches from Athens said that propaganda in favor of the release of General Pangalos, who has been under arrest on the Island of Crete for some time, had been intensified. These dispatches also stated that the Government had reason to suspect that certain army and navy officers were displaying unwonted activity in his behalf.

General Pangalos, who assumed the dictatorship of Greece in January, 1926, and was ousted in August of the same year, is being held on charges of improper conduct in power.

BABY'S OWN SOAP for the Nursery

Best for You and Baby too

SAINT and SINNER

By ANNE AUSTIN

During the days that followed the completion of the portrait Faith Hathaway had ample cause to be grateful to George Pruitt. For Bob, her husband, as if his eyes had been opened to her worth and beauty by the concrete evidence of what another man saw in his wife, became almost as loverlike as he had been during the first ecstatic days of their marriage. His eyes rested on her proudly and two or three times a week he insisted on her coming to lunch with him, taking her to the Fraternity Club, and bringing his friends to their table to meet her.

On those occasions Cherry was forced to stay at home to "mind" the baby, but more frequently than not Glenn Andrews helped her to pass away the time.

One evening in early September when Faith and Bob drove home lights were blazing in the living room, although it was long after midnight. The sound of jazz flooded from the open windows, between whose fluttering curtains Faith, as she walked up the path to the house while Bob parked the car in the garage, saw her sister dancing in the arms of Glenn Andrews. The sandy-haired young man was holding the small body of his partner very close, and his chin was tucked upon the tumbled red-gold curls. One of Cherry's tiny hands was clasped about the back of his sleek head, the other was locked in his right hand. The man's eyes were closed, and on his rather good-looking young face was a look of supreme contentment, as if he and the girl in his arms had reached an understanding.

The happiness in Bob's love and pride in her which had buoyed her up all evening, making her a marked woman among the feverishly gay or bored women at the dance, dropped from Faith abruptly, leaving her a little cold and sick. She was about to step upon the porch when the faint sound of crunching gravel came to her ears. In the shadow of a flowering bush she saw the crouching body of a man. As she advanced steadily toward the bush the man half straightened, then began to run.

But Faith recognized him, largely by intuition. She knew, as well as if she had seen his face clearly, that it was Chris Wiley, spying upon the wife who was determined to divorce him—spying upon her and this new sweetheart of hers.

When she opened the front door with her latchkey her face was so white that Cherry uttered a little shriek of dismay.

"What in the world is the matter, darling? Are you ill? Or is it—Bob?"

"I'm not ill, but I must see you alone, Cherry," Faith gasped, her white lips shaking. "Good night, Mr. Andrews."

When the nonplussed but still courteous young man had taken a hasty departure, Cherry turned upon her sister furiously.

"Well, of all the nerve! I suppose you've been spying on me and saw him kiss me! Well—what of it? I'm free, white and ——"

"You're not free," Faith interrupted her sternly. "Let's go to your room. I don't want to worry Bob with this thing to-night, and he'll be in from the garage any minute."

When the two sisters were in Cherry's room, Faith closed the door carefully and then, although the night was warm, crossed to the window and closed it, pulling the shade down to the sill. Cherry watched her fearfully, her golden eyes strained wide.

"It wasn't I who spied on you, but your husband," Faith said sternly. "Bob and I have warned you, and now Christ has evidence on which to fight for the baby. And if Chris Wiley takes Hope away from me, I'll hate you, Cherry! I'll hate you! She's mine! You have no right to take a chance on having her torn from me!" She sank down upon Cherry's bed, her whole body shuddering with fright.

FASHION NOTES.

ABOUT PROFILE BRIMS.

By HEDDA HOYT

(United Press Fashion Editor)

NEW YORK, Aug. 20. — (United Press).—If thou would'st be in the swim, buy thyself a profile brim

Hats, with profile brims, first introduced by Reboux, are assured of popularity in America. The profile hat is made so that one side of the profile is exposed. This is done in various ways. The narrow felt brim may be divided at one side with points extending upwards on the crown, while the opposite brim turns downward. The brim may be lacking on one side, while the opposite side is fairly wide. Skull caps may have eartabs on one side, while the other side is tabless.

Many times the profile hat has an earring attachment such as a huge pearl ball suspended on silver chain placed on the profile side. Sometimes, where the hat is large, the brimless side uses a bow of satin ribbon or cluster of feather flowers at the hairline. Since the profile hat is of French inspiration, the crown is generally snug and head-fitting. The smart Parisian seems to prefer the close-fitting crown to the drape types favored in America.

Velvet is to be one of the leading fabrics used for fall millinery. Cut-out effects in velvet with insets of contrasting colored silk, felt, metallic cloth or painted leather will be popular. Cut-outs in leaf or floral designs are favored at present to geometrical cut-outs. Millinery velvet this coming season is also manipulated so as to appear like snakeskin, stenciled patterns or crushed designs. The majority of hats, however, will be of plain velvet.

Draped turbans of satin or satin ribbon with satin loop eartabs are shown as advanced models by some shops. In one instance, a draped model used black, white and grey satin folds. While the tighty-draped turban is more sophisticated than the popular skull cap, it conforms with the style and many matrons will prefer it, since the skull cap is entirely too severe for most faces.

Small felt shapes with flexible drooping brims are still the favorites for sports wear and will probably continue to lead for some time to come.

SILVER JEWELRY

Silver jewelry is in the ascendancy as very smart for evening wear with white gowns. Many waite chiffons use silver trimming.

STYLE FORECASTS FROM SARATOGA

Mrs. J. A. Renahan.

Mrs. McCulloch Miller

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N.Y., Aug. 22.—Saratoga is just unbelievably lovely this season with its green stretches, gorgeous flower beds and playing fountains forming what I always maintain is the most ideal setting anywhere for gay races.

Every house is taken and the season has a running start towards being Saratoga's best.

Always individual in everything it does and sponsors, Saratoga, I note, seems to inspire the same spirit in all the Newporters and Southamptonites gathered for the races. Undoubtedly they have conserved their most unusual and smartest clothes for Saratoga!

Enchantingly lovely as clothes have been the first few days of the season, they have one discouraging feature. They are, without a doubt, flirting with the longer-skirt idea. It is impossible to find a single chic costume that doesn't at least hint at a middle-of-the-calf length, with sashes, flounces, panels or some fluttering something setting the new low level of styles.

Longer Tunics, Too!

Next to longer skirts, the three-quarter tunics impress me most as being a gesture to new styles. Apparently it is to be a three-quarters length season, not only for tunics but coats and suits.

Printed chiffons, crepes, lace, embroidery and combinations of these materials leading the alluring, colorful panorama. I note with a start that it has taken Saratoga to put the ubiquitous two-piece jumper sports costume of jersey or silk on the shelf, temporarily.

Mrs. John W. Converse summed up the main new style points in her becoming costume Saturday. Ecru lace and eyelet embroidery joined forces to fashion it. Its finely pleated skirt was safely and sanely below the knee and its tunic was at least three quarters, with surplice side fastening. A tight gold belt held it at the waistline.

Mrs. Raymond T. Baker also sponsored ecru embroidery—with scallops edging little tiers that ran round the frock from yoke to hem.

For unusual treatment of soft, patterned fabric, Mrs. McCulloch Miller's costume yesterday won the race. Of course the former Flora Payne Whitney always had a flair for distinctive touches. This gown was of the softest of grey, slinky crepes, with an oddly polka-dotted border in fuchsia and purples.

Appropriate Jockey Visor.

The border varied the size of the dots and had some solid colors and some just outlined so the objectionable regularity of most polka-dots was avoided.

Her hat, too, had its odd touch—a draped beret of French grey felt with just the suggestion of a jockey's visor to give it the Saratoga flavor.

Mrs. Frederick Johnson and Mrs. William Ziegler also sponsored prints—the former favoring the circular skirt mode and the latter getting stepping fullness by side-pleats.

Mrs. J. A. Renahan has one patterned silk that is just delectable. On a white background, splashy orange flowers vie for color dominance with touches of lip-stick red in an outlined flower. Twin white bands hem the pleated skirt and the white blouse has two appliqued flowers livening it—one of the yellow, one red.

Popular Purple Shades.

She wore a white wool coat over it that for its pin-line orange check and its cunning cape dollar deserved a pat on the back.

Purples are giving a royal touch to Southampton that I have never noticed before. Purple and lavenders are very popular. Mrs. A. Perry Osborne looked regal in a longish tunic frock of purple crepe, with heavy white embroidery banding it. Mrs. Martin B. Saportis has several mauve and lavender costumes, as have also Mrs. Milton Holden, Mrs. Graham Fair Vanderbilt, Mrs. Jorge Andre and Mrs. George Mesta.

DRESS

By MARY MARSHALL

Trouser sleeves is the name given to the sleeves found in some of the new sport and travel coats. They are shown in this gray mixed woolen coat trimmed with a lizard skin belt and worn with a lizard skin hat

Are you aware that women are wearing trousers? No, I don't mean the short culottes that are more or less apparent in some of the new frocks recently sent over from Paris. I mean really-and-truly long trousers, narrow at the top, wide at the hem, like the ones that aren't quite so popular now as they were a season or so ago.

But they—the women, I mean—aren't wearing them where you might think they would, but on their arms instead. Trouser sleeves are seen on some of the late summer suits and coats and I am told that they are to be very much used this autumn. They are smart and comfortable and they give ample room for frock sleeves that have fullness below the elbow.

The really important thing about a coat sleeve is to have it built and lined so that it will slip most readily over the sleeve of the frock. A generation ago women were willing to take time to have their frock sleeves tucked into their coat sleeves. To do this properly required quite a knack if a woman had no one to help her. Some women even provided themselves with lengths of narrow satin ribbon. One end was held in the hand and the ribbon was wrapped two or three times about the full dress sleeve. The coat sleeve could then be slipped on more easily and the ribbon could be removed by drawing it out by the end that had been held in the hand.

But if any generalization may be made about present-day clothes it is that they are all of the sort that may be donned and doffed easily and quickly. No one would have patience with a coat sleeve that had to be coaxed over the dress sleeves. Even our hats must be made so that we can slip into them with apparent nonchalance. Gloves are slipped on and off in a trice, while the fashionable woman once expected to spend several minutes at the highly complicated business of putting on a pair of gloves.

And do you remember how long it took, even a few years ago, to get into your bathing costume and then back into your clothes again after your ocean bath?

You spent several minutes adjusting your hair so that it might be tucked securely under a rubber cap and then another several minutes adjusting the bandana over the rubber cap. And now, the younger women at least usually carry their bathing caps in their hands, and as a final gesture before diving off into the breakers tuck their wind-blown lock into the confines of the rubber cap.

Just cut out six or seven roses from a piece of ribbon six inches wide. Apply them with a quick one-two-three stitch to an overblouse of georgette crepe, put a few beads in the center of each rose and wear it over a costume slip to match the georgette—and you have a copy of one of the most effective little frocks I have seen in a long time. If you want the pattern for the roses with directions for working them I will send them, but don't forget the stamped, self-addressed envelope.

HOROSCOPE

The Stars Incline, but do not Compel.

(Copyright, 1927, McClure Syndicate.)

TUESDAY, AUGUST 23, 1927

Although benefic aspects dominate today, there are adverse influences to be considered, according to astrology.

This is read as a good sway for all sorts of construction work and foreshadows tremendous advance in the simplification of machinery.

Engineers, builders and contractors are subject to the most promising direction of the stars, which indicated foreign as well as domestic engagements for important work.

It is not an auspicious day for traveling and wedding journeys appear to be especially menaced.

Women again come under a sway that is not advantageous to them, either in business or social relations.

For a number of weeks women have been subject to planetary influences, thwarting and troublesome, holding them back for more thorough preparation of big achievements soon to be attained.

This is not a lucky wedding day, since there is danger of dictation from an older person, perhaps a mother-in-law.

Painters of supreme talents are to be developed in the United States, the stars indicate, and while this is not an especially favorable day for their work, they may expect extraordinary recognition in the fall.

This should be a first rate day for making ready for future activity in any art or profession. Contracts signed under this rule should be lucky.

Theatres may find conditions disappointing, while this rule prevails, but they are assured of the development of new stars of first magnitude.

Interest in the drama is to be stronger even than in recent years, the seers prophesy, but many changes in theatrical management and methods are foretold.

Persons whose birthdate it is may have many difficulties in the coming year, which may be surmounted with extraordinary success.

Children born on this day may encounter obstacles in their careers, but they are likely to be extremely talented.

WINTER MATERIALS

Sheer woolens in materials that seem like wool georgettes and crepes, in rich shades, will be good for winter frocks.

REVERSE ORDER.

Instead of topping a brown satin slip, a sandal-wood georgette frock takes an overskirt, fitted girdle and deep cuffs of brown satin.

ANGORA COAT.

A new long sports coat is of knitted white angora, with a scarf collar, raglan sleeves and pouch pockets.

PLAID PREDOMINANCE.

Plaids appear to be gaining in popularity. Autumn suits often use gay plaids for pleated skirts and coat trimming.

high-placed windows. Powdery golden shafts of sunlight touched the heads of the hundreds of kneeling people, packed in the pews and aisles, and stretched down into the sanctuary to cast back a glimmer from the golden canonicals of the priests and the golden tips of lights on the tall candles of the flower-decked altar. Twinkling in golden points were the tiny candles of the votive stands that are placed in so many parts of the church, under the statue of the Mater Dolorosa, mourning over her dead Son, and the small statues of St. Joseph and the Little Flower. Golden light sprang from the colored holders that adorn the side altars of the Sacred Heart and the Blessed Virgin, lighted in hundreds. Once again, as on a former occasion, the impression of Old World quietude was repeated in the scene, as the organ pealed out in the Mass of M. E. Downey, with the Latin words sung by the choir of St. Peter's Cathedral, led by J. Minicolo, with Miss Hurley at the organ. Seated in the front pews and on the steps leading to the railing were the crippled and sick members of the party, a large number of these being present on this pilgrimage.

High Mass Celebrated

The High Mass, which began at half-past eleven o'clock, on the arrival of the pilgrims from the train, and finished shortly before two o'clock, was celebrated by His Lordship Bishop 'Brien, who had been staying at Fort Ste. Marie since the day previous. He was assisted by Rt. Rev. Monsignor W. J. McColl, Rev. J. McAuley of Ennismore, and Rev. Charles Begley. At its conclusion, veneration of the Sacred Relics took place. During the service, an eloquent relation of the sufferings of the early martyrs, with especial reference to Father Isaac Jogues and Father Jean de Brebeuf, was given by Rev. J. M. Filion, Provincial of the Jesuit Order in Ontario, and one of the fathers mainly responsible for the building of this new church of St. Joseph on the hill. Owing to an accident, and subsequent illness, Father Filion was prevented from being present at the Peterborough Pilgrimage of last year, and his presence yesterday was taken advantage of by the pilgrims, who kept him and the other Jesuit priests who make their residence at the Fort, busy all day answering questions and attending to the wants of the faithful. Present yesterday at the ceremonies were Rev. Joseph Keating, S.J., formerly of Ireland; Rev. E. J. Devine, S.J.; Rev. Father Bouvrette of Waubaushene, Rev. J. Cass of Guelph, and Rev. M. McNeill of Montreal, who as was the case last year, contributed some very beautiful vocal solos during the afternoon Benediction service.

A second open air Mass, celebrated at the Calvary Chapel on the hillside, took care of the overflow of pilgrims from the church, which, with an outside capacity of fifteen hundred, was incapable of accommodating the entire crowd. This Mass was solemnized by Rev. J. Keating, assisted by Rev. E. J. Devine, who, with Rev. P. Costello, headed the procession up the hill from the train. Rev. Father Devine also preached briefly at the outdoor Mass.

In the church, Rev. Father Filion, speaking of the early martyrs, gave a graphic account of their sufferings at the hands of the Iroquois and of the building of the original church of St. Joseph in this spot by Father Isaac Jogues, the first church ever erected in Ontario, and the first church of its size in North America. Father Jogues, after his first stay in Canada, returned to France in a mutilated condition, his tortures at the hands of the savages having deprived him of all of the fingers of his hands. One thumb had been saved from their first attack, but later, on the occasion of a special feast, the savages forced a Huron Indian woman convert to Christianity to take a stone saw and remove the remaining member. This would ordinarily have prevented him from ever again saying Mass, but Pope Urban Eighth gave him special permission to continue in the consecration of the sacred elements, saying: "It would be unfitting that a martyr of Christ be not permitted to drink of the Blood of Christ." A special privilege was also accorded this church in perpetuity by the now reigning Pontiff.

Once again Father Jogues returned to the missionary field of North America and later suffered death at the hands of the Indians. The feast day of this martyr and his companions is celebrated on March 16th. Father Filion referred to the large number of miracles which have already taken place at the Shrine, over thirty having been recorded, and to the fact that the canonization of the eight Canadian martyrs, Rev. Jean de Brebeuf, Gabrial Lalement, Noel Chabanel, Charles Garnier, John de la Lande, Isaac Jogues, Anthony Daniel and Rene Goupil, will take place in 1929, on the occasion of the tenth anniversary of the consecration of the Pope.

Father Filion finished with an exhortation to his hearers to strive to share in a measure in the merits attached to the Passion of Christ by imitating Him, as far as possible, in this world, if not in the manner of His holy marytrs, at least in the bearing with fortitude and patience "the many little crosses of straw" that come from time to time.

Afternoon Programme.

In the afternoon, at half past two o'clock, a special lecture on the early days of the Port and of the work and labors of the Martyrs, was given at the ruins of old Fort Ste. Marie, by Rev. Father Devine, who has prepared a very interesting booklet on the subject. Father Devine outlined in pleasing style the history of the early church in Canada, speaking of the intial arrival of the French missionaries in this land, their work among the savage inhabitants, and final death at their hands. In 1638 and 1639, the missionaries built the first frame edifice to be used as a chapel of worship to God, and in 1649, when the Iroquois came, it, with its founders, was destroyed. For one hundred and seventy-five years later, it was lost to civilization and remained buried in the dust and ashes of the ruin that overcame it at the hands of the savages, until, in the beginning of the nineteenth century, men with stout hearts once again began to labor at the work of reconstruction and the valley again resounded with the language of the English men and women who came to live there. Only recent years, however, saw the building on the brow of the hills of this continuation of the old Church of St. Joseph, erected by the valiant hands of Rev. Isaac Jogues and his intrepid companions.

Later in the afternoon, Solemn Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament was observed, by His Lordship, assisted by Rev. J. McAuley and Rev. C. Begley, with a special blessing to the sick at the conclusion of the ceremonies, and Veneration of the Holy Relics. During the afternoon service, the choir of St. Peter's once again sang hymns to the Holy Martyrs and the Benediction music. At the morning Mass, at the Offertory, the "Panis Angelicus" (Bread of Angels) was sung in fine voice by a male quartette, composed of Messrs. J. Minicolo, J. J. Southern, T. Williams, A. Foley and V. McCabe.

The pilgrims departed for the return journey at half past five o'clock, arriving in the city about nine o'clock in the evening.

Refreshments on the train were dispensed by the Knights of Columbus, and were in charge of an energetic committee headed by B. Hickey, assisted by Messrs. D. McKinnon, Dr. M. Crough, A. Costello, T. Ryan, M. Clancy, P. Devlin, T. Lansfield, J. Hanrahan, T. Turcotte, G. Kearns, F. Overend, J. Garvey and J. O'Toole.

Additions Made.

Several additions and improvements have been made within the year to the church and its surroundings. The facade has been improved by the building up of the two towers with stone, in accordance with the entire outside plan of the building, and the interior, with its unique lining of British Columbia 'Lamatco,' a wooden substance designed to imitate, as closely as possible, the birch bark lining of the original church, has been enriched in many minor ways. The two mortuary statues, the reclining figures of Rev. Father Brebouf and Rev. Father Lalement, have been placed in permanent positions beneath the altars of the Sacred Heart and the Blessed Virgin Mary, with glass panels in front.

Outside, the large life-like statue of St. Ignatius Loyala, founder of the Jesuit Order, executed in chip marble, catches the eye from its commanding position on the brow of the hill, near the entrance to the priests' quarters, the zealous face and the outflung hand of the figure guarding the valley where the men inspired by his teachings and the love of his Master came so long ago to die and to see now the victorious result of their labors for God.

Stretching along the hill too, on the eastern slope, are the handsome Stations of the Cross, forming a continuous procession from the lower ridge to the upper peak, where, silhouetted against the sky, stands in relief the twelfth Station that makes the Calvary Chapel. Here is a very large Cross, with the figure of the Saviour suspended, and the statues of the Blessed Mother and St. John beneath, at either side. In front of this Station is a small marble altar. The Stations are carried out in bronze figures mounted on cobblestone foundations.

Directly beside the church, also on the eastern side, is a grotto of Our Lady of Lourdes, with water piped from the hillside spring, the figure of the Blessed apparition appearing in the traditional blue and white.

The Stations, which are at present incomplete, will be formally blessed with an open-air mass on Sunday, September 11th.

The hostel attached to the church has also been doubled in capacity, now having an accommodation of seventy-five rooms, and a constant patronage which keeps it well filled during the season.

Many pilgrimages have been made to the Shrine during the past year, from various points in Ontario and the East, but Peterborough's second officially organized pilgrimage was characterized yesterday as the largest and most successful of the number.

The miracle which will form the basis of canonization of the martyrs was the cure of a physician suffering in the last stages of tuebrculosis, while other authentic cures include an instantaneous recovery from eczema, the recovery of a child crippled from early years, a complete cure of deafness, and three almost complete cures from blindness.

always give the Operator the distant number!

The greatly increased speed in Long Distance telephoning is an event of very great importance. As the result of a long study by our Traffic Engineers operating methods have been speeded up to keep pace with scientific advances. A simplified method of handling Long Distance calls has been devised that makes a Long Distance call almost as rapid as a Local call.

But to be able to give you this "double-quick" service the operator must be told the distant number you wish to talk with. Without it she cannot make such a direct connection.

We will look up numbers for you, before you put in your call, but the really efficient way is to keep a directory of them, such as we offer to prepare for you.

A PRIVATE DIRECTORY FOR YOU

This new "Double-Quick" service is available only where you can give the distant number.

We will provide a directory of distant numbers you frequently call, and keep it up-to-date for you.

Ask your Telephone Manager to make up one for you.

DECISION RESERVED IN ACCIDENT CASE

Counsel For Stanley Willis Says Poor Visibility Caused Accident.

On Saturday last, Stanley Willis, who on Thursday, August 11th, while driving a car from a Knox Church picnic at Port Hope, ran into a car driven by Miss Burnham of Millbrook, while attempting to pass a car, was charged at Port Hope with reckless driving.

The accident resulted in a head on collision, with four or five more or less seriously hurt.

Following a strong argument by Joseph Wearing, acting for Willis, that the accident was the result of bad visibility, Magistrate Campbell reserved judgment.

BOOK REVIEW

"The Plutocrat," by Booth Tarkington, published by T. B. Gundy, of Toronto, might be described as an analysis of the aristocracy of wealth which has grown up in the United States. It is a description of a tour in Europe and Africa of a Mr. Earl Tinker, his wife and daughter. Mr. Tinker is the Plutocrat, while Laurence Ogle, a dramatic author, is the contrast afforded to him. They start out in the same boat, and Tinker is the leader in some noisy proceedings which makes Ogle declare that "There should be a public executioner on board every liner. It's just fellows as that who make cultivated foreigners think what they do think of Americans" . . . "All of the liners are full of riffraff to-day nowadays because a different type of people has begun to travel, made prosperous in these last few years." Ogle is very bitter that this class, which he despises, should be taken abroad as typical of all Americans. A very beautiful woman is among the interesting characters introduced into the book. She is a widow and has a grown-up son, but Ogle is fascinated by her, as all the men seemed ready to be. She is a mysterious Madame Mornoro, and the reader must be left to read for himself all about her. There are some magnificent descriptions of scenery in the book, but the chief interest lies in the manner in which Ogle is forced to alter his opinion of Tinker and other Plutocrats, and how at last he is to marry Tinker's pretty and clever daughter. The change takes place mainly because Ogle sees the manner in which Ogle and others like him resemble the old Romans in their capacity to conceive big schemes, and through their wealth to carry them out. Ogle comes to the conclusion that their characteristics mark them out as the "New Romans." This is a flattering unction for Americans to lay to their souls, but it is scarcely one which other nations will be prepared to accept. Americans as a nation lack that imperial vision which made the old Romans leave such a mark upon the future history of the world; the vastness of their country, and the unfortunate Washington tradition concerning "entangling alliances" with other nations, which have dwarfed the views which a great nation should hold concerning the part which it should take in the affairs of the world. Notwithstanding this the book is a most entertaining one and will be read with great interest.

The Graphic Publishers, of Ottawa, are a firm which has been founded to produce and market all-Canadian books by Canadian authors and worthily are they carrying out this intention. One of their latest books, "My Garden Dreams," is by Dr. Ernest P. Fenster, of Vancouver. It is a beautiful little book full of thoughts, the history, the romance and the dreams concerning flowers and gardens. It calls to mind the poem by G. F. Gurney, the concluding words of which are:

"The kiss of the sun for pardon,
The song of the birds for mirth,
One is nearer God's heart in a garden
Than anywhere else on earth."

Read this about snowdrops: "They saw Caesar's legions grow thunderous and pass and die away down the shadowy vista of Time—aye, before that, they knew much, for history was theirs a thousand years before the wings of the Roman Eagles clouded the land. Under the great oak where they grew they saw the Druids in their secret rites." This short quotation will give you some faint idea of the treasures of thought to be found in the book concerning an endless number of flowers, including among them lilacs, roses, hyacinths, lilies, Canterbury bells, foxgloves, asters, dahlias, and phlox. Nothing further will be said about this delightful book here; to do so would spoil the reader's enjoyment and delight in it. Get it and enjoy the author's beautiful writing on a beautiful subject.

"Poteen," or as a sub-title calls it, "A Pot-Pourri of Canadian Essays," is another book published by the Graphic Publishers, and its author is William Arthur Deacon, who is regarded by many good authorities as the leading Canadian literature critic. Essays are among the most ancient and often the most delightful forms of literature, and they have embraced probably every subject under the sun. The number of famous names associated with them is astonishing, and their history is worth studying. Mr. Deacon has found a worthy place among their authors. He has a style of his own founded on much experience, observation, and reflection: he is frank and fearless in his criticisms, and the reader will learn much from them. This book contains essays on "The Bogey of Annexation," "The Cult of Whitman," "What a Canadian Has Done For Canada," "A Theory of Book-Reviewing," and several others. The last one mentioned is a subject on which Mr. Deacon is well qualified to speak, and what he says is most reasonable and sensible. He is not at all sure that special proficiency in the history of literature is an asset to a reviewer, but the more a reviewer has read, and the more he knows the better as the best reviewer is the one with the most points of contact with other minds, and the ideal review is the truthful record of the impression made by a certain book upon a well-read man who has been stirred by it. That this is the correct view is borne out by Mr. Deacon's success as he has had a varied career which has placed him in the forefront of book reviewers. The book is a valuable one also because it contains special articles on Canadian literature. His opinion is that no country in its pioneering stage has ever produced so large and significant a body of authentic literature. To prove this the reader must be referred to the "Brief Survey of Canadian Literature in the English Language," which contains articles of great value and interest not only on this subject but on many others and will be found very useful to those who need a guide to Canadian literature.

There are numerous books published as guides to writers, proof-readers, printers, and so on, and excellent some of them are: the latest one is "Style for Writers and Editors," by the great authority, C. O. Sylvester Manson, the editor of that invaluable work, Rofet's International Thesaurus. In this Mr. Manson has summed up all the good points in the others, and added some of his own. There must be very few questions asked continuously by those who write, and in printing offices, which are not answered in this book. It is perfectly true as the author says that "Misspelled words, faulty constructions-haphazard capitals, erratic punctuation, and the like will mar the effect of any composition, simple or pretentious. Attention to such details contributes to the success of the major essentials of clearness, force, and elegance." It is a book, moreover, which will be found useful in every school and in every home. There is a copious, closely printed index of eight pages which shows how many subjects are referred to. It is interesting to observe that in this there is no mention of that nuisance made so much of by jurists of the "split infinitive": the author evidently thinks it not worth mentioning, and he is right, for old custom and common practice go to prove that it is an absurd and curious superstition to suppose that the use of split infinitives makes the distinction between a good and a bad writer. In some cases it seems necessary, and in order more particularly to add emphasis. This is a book which should be kept in a convenient place for reference. It is published by the Thomas Y. Crowell Company of New York, and excellently printed and arranged.

It is said that one of the great British Premiers found his chief relaxation in the reading of detective stories; judging from the number of these being published there must be a large following of his practice. Messrs. W. Collins Sons and Company, of London, have published a good collection of these which are far above the average. "The Bletcherington Tangle," by G. D. H. and Margaret Cole, is a particularly interesting—or as the favored word now is, intriguing—story. There are quite a lot of characters in the book and the mystery is who is responsible for a murder and the theft of the celebrated Bletchington rubies. The reader will find much interest as he reads in predicting the murderer, but it is pretty safe to say that 99 out of 100 readers will not guess right unless, in their excitement, they look before they arrive at the concluding pages. Another such story is "The Wychford Poisoning Case," by Bentley, which is rendered all the more lively by the introduction of Sheila, who is a delightful character: the book is worth reading, if only to become acquainted with her. "The Three Faces" can hardly be called a detective story in the usual sense, but it closely approaches it, and takes the reader into mysterious events in Spain. It is well written and the authoress, Helen Nicholson, has drawn fascinating pictures of the mountain scenery of Southern Spain and of some of its people. Reference might be made to many more of the detective stories published by this firm if space permitted: but readers who like such books will be quite safe in finding good ones if they choose those published by "Collins": their book reader knows a good one when he sees it. But do not forget that the firm publishes other excellent books, such as "The First Fiddle," "The Profession on Pairs," and so on.

The Musson Book Company, of Toronto, is not behind in publishing detective stories. Its latest publication is "The Dancing Floor," and very few indeed could guess to what its title refers, and what an entrancing story it tells. The only thing that could be said against it is perhaps that some readers might think the latter part of it to be somewhat unduly dragged out. The first part of it is full of action, and though the last part is interesting it would have borne condensing. It introduces a new theme in the interpretation of a dream which comes regularly in the spring—it is not love's young dream—but has a certain amount of dread to it which troubles the hero, Vernon Milburne. The fulfillment of the dream is well worked out, and introduces a fascinating heroine, Corrie Arabin, to whom the hero at first strongly objects, but as part of the end of the curious dream which covers for seven years he eventually marries. It would spoil the story if further details were given here. Read it, and you will not regret doing so. It seems impossible for its author, John Buchan, to turn out other than fascinating books, and this one with Corrie in, mysterious islands with old and, to say the least, disagreeable superstitions, is a further addition to them.

"The Golden Lotus," by that clever writer, G. E. Locke, published by L. C. Gage and Company, is yet another good detective story. It begins with the murder of Sir Jarvis Watredden, and the mystery of it is to find the murderer, and the reason for the murder. "The Golden Lotus" is, of course, the heroine, who is principally concerned in this and she brings in the fascinating mysterious East. The book is full of action, and there is not a dull page in it. The reader, however accomplished a reader of detective stories, will be more and more puffled as he reads the story as to what the end will be. Viola, the pretty and plucky young daughter of Sir Jarvis goes through severe trials in aiding those concerned in solving the mystery, and the reader will be enthralled in reading what happens to her, and her father's great friend and lawyer, Challoner. Again, it will be said that the reader's enjoyment shall not be spoiled by giving any more details here.

There is a class of books called "pretty," and it is a very good thing that there is. They are simple enough stories but they inculcate the virtues of cheerfulness, helpfulness and the desire to make other people happy. Many people turn up their noses at them as being altogether too simple, but it would be a mighty good for the world if the lessons they teach were followed universally. They may be thought too ideal, but it is better that they should be this than like ideals set forth in some books. They are a power for good, both for adults and young people. One such book is "The Stone-wood," by Lillian Grace Copp, published by L. C. Page and Company, of Boston. Sue is an orphan, whose beau ideal was her father who taught her the value of the above-mentioned qualities, as well as, "You never get anywhere by being sorry for yourself"; a truth put in another way by a writer in another book, who said that "Self-pity is the most despicable of all vices." Sue is taken, owing to the death of her father, from a New England village and placed under the charge of a very "superior" aunt, who is a member of the faculty of an exclusive college for girls near Boston. The trials and tribulations which she brings upon this aunt through her desire to act as her "Daddy" would have wished her to do are really worth reading, and so is the good which she brings about.

Books concerning the aftermath of the war are increasing in number: one was mentioned in our recent Book Reviews as being particularly good, and worthy of a longer notice than could then be given of it. It is "Young Anarchy," by Philip Gibbs, published by the George H. Doran Company, of Toronto and New York. It is a fine piece of work, worthy of the man who wrote those famous daily articles from the front during the war, and the writer of some novels which attained more than success. One of these, "The Street of Adventure," is probably the finest description of journalistic life which has ever been written. Those who have not read it should make a point of doing so—especially newspapermen. "Young Anarchy" is a good title as the book describes what might be called the rebellion of the younger generation, but it is more than this, it is a careful analysis of the younger generation, and of the questions which divide and antagonize capital and labor. Sir Philip Gibbs has a master mind, he is a genius, and he has the opportunities of gaining experience of life and of men which few, if any, other man ever had. All this he brings to bear in this marvelous book. He creates some wonderful characters such as the Bishop, with his stern upholding of duty, obedience and discipline, and his pessimistic views regarding what labor is, in his opinion, bringing Great Britain and the British Empire too. In sharp contrast to him is his son, Jocelyn, a fine young man, who opposes his father and eventually becomes a Labor candidate for Parliament. There are some wonderfully well drawn pictures of the scenes which take place between the two. Then there is Lettie, the type of the modern girl, and her defence of this girl is worth studying. Then there is sweet little Nancy, the Bishop's daughter, who shocks and defies him. Then there is Auntie Elizabeth, who is a grand character trying her best to promote peace and harmony wherever she goes, with excellent accounts of the various upsets she gets in trying to do so. Again, there are pictures of some of the Labor leaders, and particularly of David,—but what is the use of going on? It is utterly impossible in a short review to do justice to this fascinating book. It can, however, be said, thank God, that Sir Philip, in his conclusion, deals with the general strike, and declares that "We stood revealed to the whole world and to ourselves as a people whose spirit is still high and splendid . . . That youth of ours so harshly criticized, so careless of criticism, such rebels against authority, so reckless of convention so self-assured, played the game according to the rules and in the spirit of the old tradition . . . What's wrong with England when we have such spirit?"—A.K.

MOHAWK INDIAN SINGER

Os-ke-non-ton, the Canadian Indian singer, who was educated in Ontario and later decided to devote his talents to a musical career, has just won a deserved triumph at Wigmore Hall in London, England, where he gave a well-patronized recital on behalf of the Greater London fund for the blind. He sang in full Mohawk regalia.

BRITISH CONTROL 18 BROADCASTERS

LONDON, August 22. — United Press.—Canadians will soon be able to hear British soloists, instrumentalists, and orchestras on the air from Canadian and American radio stations, according to an announcement by L. S. Sterling, managing director of the Columbia Gramaphone Company who has just completed a deal with the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, by which the Columbia organization secures control of eighteen American and Canadian broadcasting stations. It will be the second largest radio chain in the world. The British company has full control and British imperialists here who have deplored American propaganda in Canada through magazines, etc., will welcome the new departure.

PILES GO QUICK

No Cutting or Salves Needed.

External treatments seldom banish Piles.

The cause is inside—bad circulation.

The blood is stagnant, the veins flabby.

The bowel walls are weak, the parts almost dead.

To quickly and safely rid yourself of piles you must free the circulation—send fresh, healthy blood to the raw, sensitive membranes. Internal treatment is one safe method. Ointments and other external treatments can't give lasting relief.

J. S. Leonhardt, M.D., a specialist, set at work some years ago to find a real internal remedy for piles. He succeeded. He named his prescription HEM-ROID, and tried it in hundreds of cases before he was satisfied. Now HEM-ROID is sold by druggists everywhere under guarantee. It is a harmless tablet, easy to take, and can always be found at McDermid & Jury, McDermid Drug Co., who will gladly refund the purchase prices to any dissatisfied customer.

CHAPLIN CASE ALL SETTLED

Expected Scandal Involving Many Actresses Has Been Averted.

HEARING FORMALITY.

HOLLYWOOD, Cal., Aug. 22. — (United Press.)— The Chaplin divorce case has been settled and the scandal which promised to shake the motion picture colony has been averted, the United Press learned authoratively to-day.

Lita Grey Chaplin's appearance in court here to-day to sever marital relations with the "King of Clowns," Charlie Chaplin, will be a mere formality.

Revelations which the attorneys for the young girl wife promised would shake the foundations of Hollywood and the identity of the seven prominent motion picture actresses, who were to have been named as intimate friends of Chaplin will never be made public.

After Mrs. Chaplin has made the commonplace charge of cruelty from the stand, attorneys will present a signed agreement to the court and the trial may possibly even be completed this afternoon.

While the terms of the settlement may not be made public, Mrs. Chaplin, it is understood, will receive approximately $50,000, and $100,000 will be settled on each of the Chaplin babies, Sydney, Earle and Charles Spencer Jr., who will be given into the custody of the mother. Chaplin, however, has reserved the right to visit his children at any time and this privilege has been granted.

A real old-time slugging match was staged at Exhibition Park on Saturday afternoon, during which All Saints' Royals made a great rush from behind to beat out South Oshawa 16-14. As a result of the victory the O.B.A.A. Juvenile series between the two teams is tied and the play-off will be in Port Hope on Wednesday.

There was good baseball and bad crowded into the fixture, but most of the fans were satisfied because there was plenty of hitting and running, with the lead twice changing hands and the homesters making an eighth inning rally to win. The Royals started off well, treating themselves to five runs in the first two innings. Then they weakened and allowed the visitors to score thirteen runs in three innings, holding the home team to five. Part of the deficit was wiped out in the seventh and the rest was cancelled in the eighth, with two more for good measure.

The visitors are a heavy hitting aggregation. They chased Cripps in the fifth and had Holmes in difficulties several times. They believe in "hitting them where they aint". most of their blows being clean drives through or over the infield. Their fielding did not compare with their slugging abilities. They made nine errors, some of them at crucial moments, while the Petes ran wild on the paths, making a total of twenty stolen bases.

The Petes were a little lighter with the bat, but their fielding was almost airtight, and their base-running allowed them to put their hits and the visitors' errors to good use.

Jones was the heavy hitter, with two doubles and a single. Hope, Hatton, and Cripps had two hits each, the latter numbering a two-bagger among his. The only member of the team to got hitless was "Hap" Grose, who was walked both times he appeared. For the visitors, McConkey led with three singles. Brady, Trotter, Russell, Craggs, and Reeves each made two safeties, Craggs having a triple and Brady a double. Layden had one double.

Brady, the visitors' stocky little centre fielder, made the feature play of the game when he pulled in a long drive by Carroll while running at full speed with his back to the plate. The two runs the home team needed to tie the game were on the sacks at the time, with two out, but the player received a great hand from the crowd for his feat.

Cripps started off well, striking out the first three batters, while in the second the visitors went out on two grounders and a fly.

The Royals scored three in the first after two were out. Hope grounded to second. Hollingsworth was safe on an error, but broke too quickly for second and was nipped. Hartley walked and stole second, going to third on a bad throw by Knox. He scored on Carroll's single. The latter stole second and went to third when Hatton was safe on an error. Hatton stole second and both runners scored on Gordon's single. Gordon stole second, but Jones flied out.

In the second, Grose walked and Cripps doubled. Hope and Hollingsworth were out to the infield, but Layden messed up Hartley's roller and the two runners scored. Carrol struck out.

Each team got three in the third. Cripps was wild, hitting Smith and walking Knox. Both advanced on Grady's single and scored when Cripps booted McConkey's tap. Trotter struck out. Siwoski swung at a wild pitch for the third one and was safe, but died stealing.

For the Royals, Hatton was safe on an error. Gordon and Jones went out and Grose walked. He stole second, as Hatton had done. The squeeze play worked perfectly, Hatton scoring as Cripps bunted, both being safe. Hope's single scored Grose and Cripps.

The visitors made two in the fourth. Layden doubled. Russell's bunt was fielded to third by Hatton, Layden being out. Craggs tripled, sending in Russel, and scored when Reeves, batting for Knox, singled. The Royals went scoreless.

The fifth was the big frame. Brady doubled, McConkey singled, Trotter was passed, Siwoski singled, Layden was safe on an error, and Russell singled. With four runs in and two on bases, Cripps went out to right field, Holmes replacing him on the mound. Craggs singled, Smith struck out, Reeves hit through Gordon but died stealing; Brady and McConkey walked, and Trotter singled. Siwoski lined out to Hollingsworth, ending the rally which had changed the Royals' three run lead into a five-run deficit.

The Petes got two back; Jones singled, Holmes struck out, Layden booted Cripps' grounder, letting Jones score. Hope hit to the box, Cripps making third on the out to score on a wild pitch. Hollingsworth walked and Hartley flied to Siwoski.

The sixth was scoreless. The Royals got one man on but he died stealing. The visitors scored one in the seventh. Smith grounded to Hartley. Reeves singled and stole second, going to third when Brady grounded to Hollingsworth. McConkey and Trotter singled, scoring Reeves, and Siwoski grounded out.

The home team made two. Jones doubled and died stealing third. Holmes singled and took second when Russell let the grounder get away. He, too, went out stealing. Cripps was hit. Carroll, running for him, went to third when Reeves booted Hope's tap. They advanced on a wild pitch. Hollingsworth walked and Hartley pulled a double steal but Carrol's fly was taken by Brady.

The visitors got one on in the eighth and another in the ninth, but didn't score. In the Royals' eighth, Hatton singled. Gordon filed out, Jones doubled, and Holmes was walked. The visitors shifted a few players. Smith coming in just in time to be charged with the loss. Cripps forced Holmes, and Hope and Hollingsworth singled. Hope, who had advanced on an error, scored on Hollingsworth's hit. Hartley struck out.

American Polo Team Experiences Shake-Up

PORT WASHINGTON, N. Y., August 22.—Canadian Press. — With the first match of the International polo cup series against the British only two weeks off, the line up of the United States team yesterday experienced a sudden shake up that put J. Watson Webb and Malcolm Stevenson back on the "big four" in place of Winston Guest and J. Sheever Cowdin.

TORONTO DROPS DOUBLE HEADER

Pitchers' Battles Feature Both Games in Bear's Double Win.

SKEETERS LOSE TWO.

NEW YORK, August 22. Canadian Press. — The Toronto Leafs dropped both ends of a double header to the Bears at Newark yesterday. The Bears won the first 1 to 0, and the second 2 to 1. Pitchers' battles featured both games. Conlan's double followed by Conroy's triple in the eighth settled the initial encounter. Two passes and a wild throw broke up the second game in the seventh inning, Lee rushing home with the winning run when Burke threw wide to first on an attempted double play.

Jersey City, the club destined to operate in Montreal next season, also lost two games Sunday, the league leading Buffalo Bisons scoring two shutouts 4 to 0 and 1 to 0. The losses marked the 15th and 16th shutouts suffered by the Skeeters this season and run their consecutive scoreless innings to 32.

At Reading the Rochester Colts defeated the Keys 4 to 2, the Tribe hurlers holding the opposition to 4 hits.

Syracuse took two games from the Orioles at Baltimore, winning the first 6to 3 and the second 4 to 3. The Stars scored three runs in the last innings of the second game to overcome an Oriole lead.

PREPARE CAMP FOR EX-CHAMP

Former Heavyweight Champion To Begin Light Training This Afternoon.

FOR TITLE BOUT.

CHICAGO, August 22 (Canadian Press). — The Lincoln Fields training camp of Jack Dempsey was made ready yesterday for the former champion, who will begin light training there this afternoon .

Dave Shade, Dempsey's chief sparring mate and adviser, is due to-day in time to go with Jack on his first trip to Lincoln Fields. Marty Burke and Allentown Joe Gans have been called to report on Tuesday, but Dempsey's actual boxing is not expected to begin before Saturday, or perhaps next week.

Gus Wilson and Jerry Luvadis, Dempsey's trainer, moved out to the race course yesterday to prepare Jack's quarters and break in a new cook. The ring was set up in front of the club house on Saturday and the indoor paraphernalia installed inside the club house on the first floor.

With Dempsey starting training on Monday and the public ticket sale beginning the next day, only the presence of the champion, Gene Tunney, is lacking from the picture. Tunney has announced he will not transfer his camp from Speculator, N.Y., to the Fox Lake district until after September 1, but Tex Rickard is endeavouring to persuade the title-holder to come here at an earlier date.

WATER ON SHIPS.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—One of the greatest changes in the last 50 years in ocean travel has been in the amount of water allowed persons on shipboard. Transatlantic steamers used to allow steerage passengers 3 pints of water a day. Now the consumption of water by third class passengers on an average trip is never less than 15 gallons a day, and often as high as 50 gallons a day for first class passengers.

Fraulein C. Aussen, the German women's lawn tennis champion, vigorously denies the story that she intends to join the ranks of the professionals.

Referee Application Denied Ex-Champion

CHICAGO, August 22. Canadian Press. — The ambition of Battling Nelson to referee the Dempsey-Tunney fight on Sept. tember 22nd, faded Saturday.

The $25, the one-time world's lightweight champion left with the state boxing commission as a turned to him. That implied that his application was denied. That implied that his application was denied.

LOCAL MIDGETS WIN 8-1 SCORE FROM CAPITALS

Play Smart Ball To Win Sudden Death Game at Kingston.

WEAKEN IN THIRD.

The Peterborough Moundsman Shows Steady Control—Has Thirteen Strikeouts.

KINGSTON, Aug. 22.—(Special).—Playing the kind of baseball that counts, the Peterborough Midgets knocked the entry from the Capital City for a loop on Saturday afternoon here in a sudden death game by the score of 8-1. The victors showed themselves to be a smart ball team and they richly deserved their victory. For almost the entire route they played a steady and consistent game with the exception of the third inning when one run was sent over. Woods, pitching for the Peterborough team, hurled a great game and had thirteen strike outs to his credit. In addition he pulled himself out of a couple of bad places by his calm and steady control and the team behind him stood with him all through.

The hitting feature of the game was provided by Cuthbertson who landed on Padget for a clean homer, scoring Sproat ahead of him. It was a lovely drive and worthy of a senior player's effort. Woods was master of the situation and the Ottawas were seldom able to cope with his delivery. He held the capitals down to two line hits in addition to having thirteen strikeouts. He walked three men.

The youngsters played nice ball and showed the result of good training. Ottawa fought valiantly to pull themselves out of the rut and get into the scoring column in large figures but their one lone tally was the best they could register.

Peterborough scored their first run in the first inning, this tally giving them confidence to start with. With Sproat already out, being thrown down at first, Cuthbertson struck out but Briggs dropped the ball on the third strike and made a poor throw to first. The play was costly, resulting later in Cuthbertson scoring. McCullough landed a clean single to advance Cuthbertson to third. Cuff lifted a deep one to second and though he was caught out the runner scored. Ottawa tied the count in their half of the third inning, getting their only run. Padget, the first man up, drew a walk. Blow was thrown at first by Cuff and Padget advanced. Briggs was safe on Cuthbertson's error and Padget raced for home to score. Briggs did not last long on the paths, however, being thrown at second by Whatley. Perley struckout to finish the inning.

Peterborough stepped into the lead with five more runs in their half of the third inning and batted around. With Woods already fanned, Sproat singled and stole second. Cuthbertson came through with his belt line clout and scored Sproat ahead of him, accounting for two runs. McCullough trailed with a single and stole second and when Howe fizzled Cuff's grounders, McCullough scored. Whatley struck out. Dallin singled to score Cuff and a single by Foley accounted for Dallin's tally. Johnston drew a walk but Woods finished by being thrown out at first by Padget.

In the next frame Peterborough added another. With one out, Cuthbertson reached first on Perley's error. He stole second and scored on Cuff's two bagger. Another in the fifth was placed. Dallin was safe at first on Jackson's error. He stole second and third. When the play was made on Foley at first when he grounded Dalling raced over with the eighth run of the game.

It is interesting to note that of the twenty-seven put outs of the Peterborough team, McCullough, first baseman, and Whatley, catcher, handled twenty-five, the former having thirteen and the latter twelve. The box score of the game is as follows:

PIRATES WIN FULL SERIES FROM ROBINS

Shave Another Half Game Off Cub's League Lead.

BROOKLYN IN 7TH.

Giants Take a Double Victory From the Cincinnati Reds.

NEW YORK, August 22 (Canadian Press). — Pittsburgh shaved another half-game off the Cubs' hold on first place in the National League yesterday by trouncing Brooklyn, 2 to 1, giving the Pirates a sweep of the two-contest series. The idle Chicago club now leads the pack by three games. The defeat relegated the Robins behind the Braves in seventh place.

Carmen Hill worked against Bill Doak in a pitchers' battle which was decided in the ninth when Wright's single drove in Cuyler, who was running for Carnhart after the latter had hit safely.

At the Polo Grounds the Giants concluded a series with the Cincinnati Reds by a double victory, 9 to 8 and 6 to 1 before more than 45,000 fans. The McGraw men came from behind with a three-run rally in the ninth of the opener, Leslie Mann's pinch double with the bases full deciding the game. Critz hit a home run in the second inning, with two on the sacks during a six-run attack by the Reds. Hornsby slammed his 22nd circuit drive in the fifth, and Jackson followed with another in the same round with one on base. Dressen also banged a homer.

In the closing tussle Mann clouted a four-bagger with one on in the third, while Roush connected for the circuit with one on in the eighth.

No other games were scheduled.

JAPAN TO MEET FRENCH STARS

In Inter-Zone Final of the Davis Cup Series.

CHALLENGE U. S.

MONTREAL, Aug. 22 (Canadian Press).—Japan will meet France in the inter-zone final of the Davis Cup series for the right to challenge the United States, holders of the historic international tennis trophy. The Japanese advanced to the final by defeating Canada in the deciding round of the American zone series, three matches to two. Japan went into the last two singles matches at the Mount Royal Tennis Club courts here Saturday leading two matches to one, as a result of a win in the doubles Friday and a division of the two opening matches. Saturday's singles games went one to Japan and one to Canada, giving the Japanese the series.

Jack Wright, Canadian champion, defeated Joshiro Ohta, Japanese singles title holder, in the opening match Saturday, scoring a decisive win in three straight sets, 6—3, 6—4, 6—4, to tie the round and leave the decision to the last match between Takeichi Harada, ace of the Japanese team, and Williard F. Crocker. The Canadian started auspiciously but wrenched the ligament of the sacroiliac joint in making a quick turn after six games in the first set when Crocket was leading 4—2. He only managed to win one game from then on. Crocker, unknown to the gallery, suffered excruciating pain but continued the match without complaining. He lost 7—5, 6—0, 6—0. The wrench was an aggravation of an old injury.

Immediately after the conclusion of the match, Crocker congratulated Harada on the victory and then collapsed on the court. Examination later by Dr. F. J. Scully, revealed that the injury was worse than at first thought. The wrenching of the ligament had led to a partial dislocation of the sacroiliac joint, which in turn had affected the large muscles at the back of the leg.

Had the misfortune not overtaken Crocker there might have been a different story to tell of the zone final. Crocker started out against Harada like the player who in the past has carried on his shoulders the brunt of the Wavis Cup fight for Canada. Up to the time that he twisted his back again, he had Harada counting errors steadily, the Japanese finding great difficulty in returning the deep drives of the Canadian. The gallery was stunned when the Montrealer weakened half way through the first set and had no inkling of the pain the Canadian was suffering. They cheered him and called out words of encouragement. Crocker chose to fight on his nerve against the physical handicap, rather than ask for time out that his injury might be given at least temporary treatment.

The accident was unfortunate and it was particularly so in this match where so much was at stake and where Harada, not knowing of Crocker's plight, played his usual style of game, that of driving from one side line to the other. With Crocker unable to move easily to the right, he was unable to cover the court in the way which it must be covered if Harada's cross-court firing is to be returned. The result was Crocker netted steadily in the last two sets and frequently was unable to get the ball at all.

Jack Wright continued his brilliant tennis of the first two days by sweeping to victory over Yoshiro Ohta. Once Wright became accustomed to Ohta's vicious forehand and found he could control it, the Canadian champion led the Japanese a merry dance. He threw a variety of tennis strokes at Ohta that had the Japanese bewildered at times.

The surprising part of Wright's game was his service. Nine times he aced Ohta in the match, twice aceing him cleanly to score game points. The ball had a deceptive hop to it which made it almost impossible for Ohta to return it. The Japanese star netted many of these and others he sent back slowly, leaving Wright a chance for a kill.

When Ohta tried to drive through Wright as he rushed up to the net, he invariably drove out of the court. The Japanese had little defence to offer against the spectacular variety of Wright's game, especially once his one big weapon—his terrific forehand—had been solved by Wright.

The Japanese team left yesterday for Boston, where they will meet the French stars on Thursday, Friday and Saturday of this week.

Over 7,000 spectators paid to witness the matches on the three days, which exceeds by one-third the previous record of galleries.

INDIANS TAKE 2ND STRAIGHT

Lead Slugging Attack on Pipgras in Seventh For 7-4 Victory.

TIGERS WIN 11-4.

NEW YORK, Aug. 22. Canadian Press. — Cleveland made it two straight from New York winning yesterday's game at Cleveland 7 to 4. The Yankees knocked Buckeye from the box in the fourth but Hudlin came to the rescue with the bases filled, none out and three runs across, and tamed the visitors. Hudlin granted only two hits after the fourth inning and led the attack on Pipgras in the seventh which produced two runs.

Babe Ruth retired with a strained side in the first inning after stopping at first base, on what was really a three abse hit.

Detroit gained its eleventh successive victory and tightened its grip on second place by beating Washington 11 to 4 in the third game of the series at Detroit yesterday.

Haskell Billings pitched the full game for the Tigers and scored his second victory in the two starts he has made as a major leaguer. The Tigers hammered Horace Lisenbee freely. In the seventh inning they bunched five hits with a pass and two errors for five runs.

At Chicago Philadelphia hammered opposing pitchers and beat Chicago 8 to 6. Cochranes' home run with two men on base in the first innings sent Jacobs to the showers, and gave the visitors a lead which was never overcome. Ward smashed out a home run for the sox in the sixth with none on base.

The Browns took two games from the visiting Boston Red Sox at St. Louis, winning the first by 5 to 0, and the second 4 to 3.

BOMBARDS WAY TO DECISIVE WIN

Francis Hunter Clinches Victory For East in Tennis Series.

FOREST HILLS, N.Y., August 22 (Canadian Press). — Playing his first singles match since selection as a member of the United States Davis Cup team, Francis T. Hunter bombarded his way to decisive triumph on Saturday over George Lott, 20-year-old Chicago star, and clinched victory for the east over the west in the annual inter-sectional tennis series.

Lott was one of Hunter's chief rivals for the fourth place on the cup team ,but he wilted after making a battle of it for two sets, and lost by scores of 7-5, 8-6, 6-0.

The east won four of Saturday's five matches and captured the two-day series by the decisive score of 6 to 3, thus retaining the supremacy established over the west last season.

Johnny Doeg, 18-year-old Californian, saved the western troupe from rout yesterday when he rallied from the verge of defeat in straight sets to conquer Dr. George King, the veteran New Yorker, by scores of 5-7, 9-7, 6-1.

John Van Ryn, of East Orange, N.J., and Princeton, second ranking intercollegiate star, figured in two of the east's other victories.

In the singles he triumphed over Granston Holman, former Leland Stanford star, 5-7, 7-5, 6-4. In the doubles Van Ryn paired with the national junior champion, Frank Shields, of New York, to defeat Holman and Lionel Ogden, also of Stanford, in another three-set thriller, 6-4, 3-6, 10-8.

Manuel Alonso, the Spanish star, who resides in Philadelphia, helped the east hang up its fourth victory of the day by combining with Watson Washburne, of New York, to vanquish the brilliant Texas doubles team, Louis Thalheimer and Lewis N. White, 7-5, 7-5.

An international mixed doubles exhibition, featuring two of this year's Wimbledon champions, added colour to the programme. It resulted in a California girl who holds the Wimbledon women's crown, and Jacques Brugnon of the French Davis Cup team, over Miss Eileen Bennett, of England, and Henri Cochet, conqueror of William T. Tilden, and winner of the British men's championship, the scores being 6-2, 9-4.

BELMONTS WIN OPENING GAME WITH FALCONS

Local Club Boys Defeat Team From Kingston at Softball.

FINAL SCORE 14-5.

Losers Fail To Hit Fielding Stride—Both Teams Hit Heavily.

Peterborough Belmonts won a 14-5 victory over the Kingston Falcons in a softball fixture, played at James Stevenson Park on Saturday afternoon, attended by the largest crowd of the season.

Harrison, hurling for the Belmonts, had excellent support, and this was needed, neither pitcher showing any individual brilliance, and each registering only one strike-out.

At the end of the second, the Falcons were up on the Club boys, but the fourth inning practically decided the game, the home team scoring five runs to Kingston's nil. Both teams had their share of errors, Falcons getting twelve and the Belmonts five. This accounts for the loss of the game, for both teams had the same number of hits.

The heavy hitting was with the Petes, both Harrison and Frick clouting for the circuit. "Jake" Hall baffled the Kingston boys by stealing bases, which he managed to perfection.

Saunders, pitching for the Falcons, deserves great credit, he being only a young twirler, and in fact, all the Kingston boys are still far under the voting age. Kingston fans declared that the home town boys were far off their stride, and one excited gentleman was eager to bet ten dollars that Peterborough would be practically shut out when they visited the Falcons on their own diamond. This should prove an excellent game if the predictions of this and other fans are true.

CAPITOL--TO-NIGHT

Star Sterling's Problem

A Serial for Boys - By BERT REED

The day of the final game in the Silver River League had arrived. The tight race for the pennant had brought hundreds from the surrounding country and they packed the grand stand and bleachers.

The Riverview team had arrived early and was warming up. Starr and his aggregation of ball tossers had become decidedly popular with the people of Beamville and although they were playing against the home team their snappy work during the warm up was applauded frequently. Bascombe arrived while Starr and his men were on the field. Singling Starr out, he came over.

"Well Sterling," he said insolently, "we're ready to wipe the diamond with you."

"As long as the process is on the level," replied Starr with a slight emphasis on the last word, "you won't hear a chirp from us."

Bascombe's glance shifted beneath Sterling's steady look.

"Getting your alibis ready so soon?" he sneered. "Where's Porter? We want to get this thing started."

But Porter could not be found. For fifteen minutes they waited. The crowd grew restless.

"Start something," yelled one. "What do you think this is, a peace conference?" shouted another. "We came to see a ball game."

Sterling walked over to Zeb Bascombe, the president of the league.

"Get a substitute for Porter and start the game," he demanded—"get Richards."

Richards was the substitute umpire for the league.

"Is that arrangement agreeable to you, my boy?" he asked Chip, ignoring Sterling's request.

"Mr. Bascombe," Starr sharply interrupted, "Richards is the substitute umpire of the league. It is not a question of any one person being agreeable. We're ready to play and Richards is ready to act."

If Zeb Bascombe had intended to remonstrate he changed his mind, for he motioned to Richards to go in. Richards stepped out upon the diamond.

"Play ball," he called. The game was on.

The Riverviews took the field.

Bull Craddock led the batting list for the Beamville team. His work throughout the season had been consistently good. His batting average was in the three hundred class and Sterling regarded him as a dangerous man.

Behind the pan, Harry Northway crouched ready for the ball. Sterling with a preliminary wind up sent the first ball whistling across the plate.

Bascombe had been rooting from the bench—"He's all in, Craddock, all in."

Craddock stepped back and swung clean drive to deep centre. When the uproar had died away Hamilton had crossed the plate and Stanners was on top of third.

A sharp inshoot from Sterling clipped Moyer's elbow and the umpire ordered him down to the initial sack.

Would the ninth prove disastrous for Riverview? Already one Beamville man had been brought in and now a man was at third and another at first with none out.

Baseball is a remarkable game. In one inning the whole aspect of the game may change. Men who have been striking out may get on their batting togs, a team that has been running in bad luck may bring out a barrel full of horseshoes they have had hidden away. Sterling was faced with one of those situations.

Henderson was the next to face Sterling. Henderson had never established a reputation as a reliable hitter. Occasionally he would do some exceptional work with the stick but he was decidedly erratic.

On the first ball the unexpected happened. With a short sharp swing he met the ball. There was a crack and a roar as the willow and horsehide met. Anderson, playing in right garden, took one glance at the ball, then turning his back on it raced in the same direction. He turned too soon, the ball missed his fingers by inches. When he finally secured it and had thrown it in to the diamond Stanners and Moyer had scored and Henderson was on third.

Beamville was only one run behind and none were out.

The bleachers were roaring like madmen. Bascombe was juvilant.

"We've got these fellows on the run—let's chase them back to their camp," he yelled.

If Starr was at all worried, his face did not show it. He signalled for Northway and the two held a whispered consultation. Then Harry returned to his position.

Some said that Northway took the ball with him and that Sterling never delivered it—like a streak of lightning it flashed across the pan. The speed bewildered Harrison who had come to bat.

Three balls were all Sterling pitched. Murray the next man up was considered a safe hitter. Beamville had learned to rely upon him to come across in pinches. He lived up to his reputation by driving a liner at Sterling on the first ball pitched.

With the speed of a bullet it came at the Riverview captain. Starr did not move from his tracks. With a short sharp one-hand stab he pulled the ball down. Then dropped it.

As bat and ball met, Henderson, on third, streaked toward the plate.

Sterling recovered the ball and whistled the sphere across to first. Murray was out. Hollway on first saw Henderson streaking home. With the speed of a rifle he lined the ball to Northway. In a cloud of dust Henderson slid, but when it cleared away Northway had nailed him with his fingers three inches away from the plate. The umpire signalled a double play.

Riverview, in spite of scheming, trickery and fraud had won the pennant in the Silver River League!

The excited spectators from the bleachers and grandstand poured on to the field. The victorious Riverviews were lifted on the shoulders of their supporters.

As the crowd surrounded Sterling, two men pushed their way through. They were Jeff Carter, the sheriff of Beamville, and Gus Porter, the man they had left on Black Island.

"There he is," shouted Porter.

"I guess I got to take ye in charge, young man," said Carter regretfully.

"Gus Porter says he just learned you stole his canoe from Black Island."

Starr caught hold of the sheriff's arm. "And I ask you," he replied, "to arrest Porter. This man has a still on Black Island and it is his bootleg whiskey that has been sold in these parts for the last three months."

Porter turned pale. "It's a lie," he shouted. For a moment it seemed as if he would spring on his accuser. Then suddenly he turned, threw men right and left, tore his way through the crowd and ran down the field. A half dozen men started in pursuit.

"I guess, young feller, you won't be took in charge today," drawled Carter in evident relief.

Sterling and Gray told their story to the authorities—how after they had overheard the plot to beat them at baseball they had waited until Bascombe and Beaver had left the hut to return to Beamville and Porter had gone with them to see them off. They had entered the hut and discovered the still. Later they had taken Porter's canoe, leaving the crooked umpire on the island and consequently had defeated his plan to give Beamville the game.

Porter was never captured and Chip Bascombe lost no time in leaving Beamville.

"Well, fellows," said Sterling as they stood on the little station platform waiting for the train that would take them to Riverview, "it's all over and we're taking the pennant to Riverview."

"All over till we get back to the academy," grinned Larkspur, "but O Boy won't we stir things up this Fall!"

He had evidently expected an in-shoot. The ball however broke sharply in the other direction. He missed by at least six inches.

"'Atta pitching, Sterling," grinned Harry through his "cage."

"Jump on him old man," yelled Bascombe.

Craddock shook his head in disgust. Starr's next was a sharp drop. Bull struck above it three inches. A puzzled expression settled on his face. The third with the speed of a bullet cut the pan in half. Craddock missed it.

In three pitched balls Sterling had struck the first man out. Craddock walked slowly to the bench where Chip Bascombe was sitting. Without seeming to, Sterling watched the two as Cameron came to bat.

Bascombe was shaking his head. A half smile crossed Sterling's face. "There's a whole lot you don't understand Bascombe," he said to himself, "and a whole lot more you won't before this game is finished."

Cameron shared Craddock's fate. He seemed unable to find Sterling on the three balls that Starr delivered.

Hamilton did slightly better. He fouled the ball once, but a strike out followed.

"Three men on nine balls," boomed a man from the bleachers.

Bascombe was holding an earnest conversation with his men. Sterling touched Gray's arm.

"Chip is wise," he smiled.

"He's onto the fact that we've changed our signals. He won't try to follow them again this game."

Paul Gray opened the batting list for Riverview. Bascombe was in the box for Beamville. On the first ball, Paul popped up an infield fly that was gathered in by Moyer, who was at short.

Larry Larkspur followed. Larry fanned the air twice, then drove a grounder between short and third. As Moyer attempted to scoop it up the ball took an erratic jump. The Beamville shortstop missed it. Larkspur reached first.

"We're off," yelled Halliday from the bench.

Sterling had selected a bat and was already at the plate. His stay was short. He was retired by Henderson, who fielded his long drive to centre.

Northway was the fourth batter to face Bascombe. Larkspur was still on first and Harry was anxious. His anxiety was his undoing. Bascombe pulled him off his feet with a wide ball, drove him back with an in, then with a ball that floated slowly up to the plate fanned him.

"Fellows," said Sterling as they returned to the field, "Bascombe realizes that he has made a mistake in using our signals. He knows now that we have changed them. For the next eight innings it's going to be straight baseball with no favors. Play ball for all that you have and all the time. The pennant is waiting for us."

For the next seven innings the spectators were given an exhibition of ball playing that had not been equalled the whole season. Sensational drives that were stopped by yet more sensational fielding. Base running that brought the entire crowd on its toes, phenomenal pitching from both twirlers that held the bleachers and grandstand in breathless suspense. This was a game worthy of a season's finish.

But at the end of the eighth the score stood seven to three in Riverview's favor, for in the breaks fortune had favored the campers.

"It's all over but the cheering," yelled Larkspur from the field. "Hold 'em Sterling, they're about to pin the pennant on our chests."

Hamilton was the first to face Sterling in the ninth. He proceeded to hammer out an erratic grounder that Larkspur at short only cuffed as he stabbed for it. It was good for one bag.

Undisturbed, Starr caught the ball as it was thrown in. Stanners was the next batter. Big Stick Stanners they had called him. He had established the record for the greatest number of home runs in the league.

Starr sent a sharp inshoot across. Stanners stepped back. It was a long

TORONTO C.N.R. DEFEATS LOCAL CRICKET TEAM

Visitors Win Exciting Game By Narrow Margin of 11 Runs.

SCORE 40 TO 29.

Low Scoring Game Run Off in Very Short Time at Oval.

In an exciting finish the Toronto C.N.R. team defeated the local club by the narrow margin of eleven runs in a low-scoring match, the game being over before 4 o'clock, something unusual in cricket. The C.N.R. started batting shortly before 1.30 with Ross and Mackie to the bowling of Jefferson and Elliott. With only four runs scored Mackie was easily run out on an almost impossible run. Davison, the next man in, failed to score, being neatly caught by Monkman with the score at 10. Only one more run was added when Ross was caught by Smith off of a skier. The retiring batsman had batted confidently for 11 runs.

Huddleston was the next batsman and with Worsencroft carried the score to 24 before the next wicket fell. The latter was then clean bowled by Elliot. Huddleston made eight good runs when he was cleverly caught by Gore in the slips, the fielder reaching out and gathering the ball as it was going away from him. This was a stroke of good luck for the Peterborough team, as this man is one of the leading batsmen in Toronto league cricket. Two more wickets fell at the same total.

Elliot and Jefferson were bowling wonderfully well, the former mixing his balls cleverly, while the latter bowled fast and was keeping a good length. The side was finally all out for 40 runs. The Peterborough fielding and bowling was excellent and this score was one of the lowest of the season for the C.N.R.

Peterborough opened their innings with Thorpe and Stuart, to the bowling of Huddleston and Davison. Both batsmen opened cautiously. Huddleston was bowling very fast and a number of his deliveries went high over the wicket, chiefly due to the hard ground. With only four runs scored Stuart was snapped at the wicket. Jefferson was next in and the score mounted steadily to 15, when Thorpe was caught at mid-off from a rising ball. Smith was clean bowled with two runs added when attempting a big hit from a short-pitched ball.

Three good wickets down for 17 put the game in an interesting position. Then started a collapse. Dyer and Elliot both failing to add to the score, while Jefferson was brilliantly caught at point by B. Dorkin, the fielder falling in making the catch. Monkman was then bowled by Huddleston and Manning was given out, caught at the wicket, eight wickets being down for 23 runs. Eighteen runs were needed for victory with two wickets to fall. Hart, a member of the Peterborough Club, who lives at Deloro, next partnered Gore, who was playing an excellent defensive game, carried the score to 26 before being bowled. One more wicket to fall and 15 runs were needed for victory when Massey-Cooke joined Gore. The former cut the first ball for two and then hit a single but in attempting a sharp run Gore was most unfortunately run out and the C.N.R. won.

For Peterborough Elliot took six wickets for 21, and Jefferson three for 16.

For C.N.R. Huddleston took 4 for 13 and Davison 5 for 12.

The Peterborough Club entertained the visitors to lunch at the Paragon Tea Rooms before the game, and refreshments were served on the grounds after the match.

The C.N.R. Club President thanked the members of the local club for their hospitality and hoped to visit the city for another game next season. Mr. Stuart, the president of the local club, responded suitably.

GORDON SOCCER CUP.

The Masseys won the Hon. G. N. Gordon Soccer Cup from the Thistle on Saturday, who have held it for three years.

HIS GOOD LUCK ENDS.

MADISON, Wis., August 20. — Not for 40 consecutive years did it rain at the commencement exercises of the University of Wisconsin. Many attributed this to the fact that Julius Olsen had attended every one of those commencements. But Olsen attended the last exercises and got drenched to the skin.

HOLE IN HOLE.

LINCOLN, Neb., Aug. 20.—H. C. Koch, golfer, made a hole-in-one, but not the usual kind. Teeing off on a 213-yard hole, he drove his ball into the right trousers pocket of D. F. McCauley, who was crossing the fairway.

OUR BOARDING HOUSE — By Ahern

MASSEYS WON GORDON CUP FROM THISTLE

A Superb Display of the Soccer Code Given By Both Teams.

LOGAN AND GRIFFINE GOOD.

A Large Crowd Witnessed a Real Old Time Cup Tie Battle.

A large crowd of soccer fans enjoyed the G. N. Gordon Cup final on Saturday afternoon at King Edward Park, when the Masseys defeated the cup holders for the last three years (Thistle) by two goals to one in a superb exhibition of the soccer code that was productive of many thrills during the ninety minute tussle.

Full credit of the win must be given to George Logan of the Masseys, who was the star performer on the day's play that aided his forward line to function in unison, while Griffine was the outstanding star on the Thistle team. It is three years since the losers won the trophy and the Masseys have won it for the first time.

Donor Presented Cup.

Hon. G. N. Gordon, donor of the trophy, presented the cup to Capt. Sharman of the Masseys at the conclusion of the game in his usual witty manner and complimented the two teams for such an excellent brand of soccer. Three cheers all round were given.

FIRST HALF.

Both teams made repeated attacks upon goal in the opening minutes, with the half-backs being the stimulant influence when in the proximity of shooting distance.

Well Taken Goal.

After a continued piece of headwork in heading the ball George Logan trapped it from a header and without hesitation landed the ball in the corner of the net on the ground. Even exchanges were the result of keen play and anticiption of combination was pleasant to witness. Throw-ins were now the most prominent factor at this period that never ended to any advantage in team play except the occasional foul that called upon the services of the custodians to prevent a goal.

Laidler's Clever Work.

From a throw-in Laidler carried the sphere into the "Jaggs" territory to drive ahead into goal where Griffine made a spectacular save then again Willis struck the upright from the touch line as the custodian was up-in-the-air to save, but finally Sharman failed in two attempts.

Poor Shooting Near Goal.

Time and again the Thistle would reply with combination that was lacking in marksmanship, but Cameron ws unfortunate with his shot when his parting kick nit the cross-bar. A five minute seige by the Thistle brought out the defensive tactics of the Masseys' half-back in which the attacking forwards tried to penetrate just before half time. Half-time—Masseys 1, Thistle 0.

HALF TIME.

After the customary respite, the teams opened up at a fast pace, with Dawson (Thistle) at centre half in place of Millar, who took up the inside left position. The first excitement was caused through Livingstone who rapped a low grounder into Fenner's hands, that was followed up by Dawson from close range and the same performance was enacted by Sharman when the Thistle custodian saved smartly.

Dawson Forces Issue.

On mid-field play, the Thistle centre half forced the issue against the full backs that never allowed him any latitude, while Hanson on the left wing tested Griffine from large range. A few minutes later, Blowers tried one of his "left footers" that sailed over the bar. Then George Logan harassed the Thistle defense to compel Griffine to clutch a hot one from the Massey forward.

G. Logan Again Scored.

Two corner kicks in succession in favor of the Masseys were well placed from the flag-kick by Hanson, who lobbed the ball in dead centre where George Logan's cranium connected to divert it into the net amidst great enthusiasm.

Scored From Penalty Kick.

Fast, hard and keen tackling took place in the remaining minutes in which Frank Wade handled in the goal mouth to allow the Thistle the opportunity to register a goal from the foot of Burgess. This brought forth great enthusiasm during the next onslaught by the Thistle forwards to find the goal post save an equalizer, then Fenner coming out of his charge to prevent Millar and Cameron putting the ball into an empty goal. Buchan relieved from a goal kick and had to be cautioned repeatedly for ungentlemanly conduct by the referee who should not have permitted such infringements that the spectators knew were illegal.

Griffine's Brilliant Goal-keeping.

Two minutes from the finish, the Masseys tore down in a perfect alignment of formation with George Logan leading in dribbling and combination that demonstrated the excellent qualities of goal tending by Griffine as the final whistle concluded a real old-timer in soccer annals in the city as the Masseys won the trophy by two goals to one.

Goal scorers—George Logan (2) for Masseys and Burgess for Thistle.

Thistle — Griffine, goal; McLeod and Cameron, backs; Burgess, Dawson and Bromley, halves; Lang, Livingston, Cameron, Millar and McPhate, forwards.

Masseys — Fenner, goal; Buchan and Wade, backs; W. Logan, Mann and Blowers, halves; Willis, Geo. Logan, Sharman, Laidler and Hanson forwards.

Referee—John Ward. Linesmen—Alex. McKinley and Tom Wilson.

IS FASTING A CURE-ALL?

Those physicians who advocate the fasting cure recommend it alike for all acute and chronic disorders. The fast should not be considered as a remedy in the same sense as many regard certain medicinal preparations. It is more a method or plan of control over assimilation, which gives the body a chance to readjust the metabolistic processes.

It is easy to understand that the body cannot assimilate food in a satisfactory manner if one is suffering from any kind of pain or bodily distress. Acute disorders, by the effect of their symptoms, discourage the appetite and make one disinterested in his meals. If we were not continually told that we must "eat to keep up our strength" we would certainly stop eating when sick and show as much intelligence in this regard as our domestic animals.

Many naturalists have claimed that wild animals suffer very little from disease, except that produced through injury in fighting with other animals. Our domestic pets are petted and stuffed into being sick quite often, but will always fast at these times if food is not actually forced upon them.

Doctors who urge their patients to eat when sick have a good deal to answer for because of such senseless advice. Those who have not had the experience of seeing the benefits of fasting for the cure of chronic disease may be more easily forgiven for not understanding this method of treatment, but there is positively no excuse for the parrot-like repetition of "eat to keep up your strength" which has been the means of urging many into early graves, who would have quickly recovered from acute ailments by missing a meal or two.

Fasting is probably as much of a cure-all as will ever be found for acute or chronic diseases. The reason for this is plain. When the assimilative powers are rested, elimination of bodily toxins takes place more rapidly. The energy which has been used in digesting and assimilating foods is then turned entirely into eliminative channels and poisons are thrown out more rapidly through the skin, breath, kidneys and bowels.

The body is constantly eliminating poisons at all times, but during a fasting period the functions of all of the eliminative processes are increased. It is difficult to measure exactly the amount of this increase, but it apparently is at least ten times greater. Thus, during four or five days of fasting, with the help of internal and external bathing, the body will pour out as much impurity as it would ordinarily in forty or fifty days. Is it not easy to see that this increased elimination would be tremendously effective in the cure of any kind of disorder?

Many of my readers are only four or five days away from feeling better than they have for many years. Missing a few meals, and giving the body a chance, will work wonders for you if you only have the good judgment to try such a simple method.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

QUESTION: Mrs. A. T. F. writes: "I have been paralyzed for 18 months from high blood pressure. Doctors claim it first started in two fingers on the left hand and finally went up in the arm and all over the left side. Have taken electric treatments, and have done everything I know, but get no better. Can you help me in any way?"

ANSWER: Your high blood pressure can be reduced to practically normal through fasting and dieting. The paralysis will disappear as soon as the blood clot has been absorbed, but you can only accomplish this by living on the most rigid diet. The D'Arsenvol high frequency treatment will temporarily reduce your blood pressure after each treatment, but does not have any permanent effect.

QUESTION: Student writes: "I am much interested in your health column, and am being greatly benefitted, but I am having difficulty in getting it through my head just which foods to combine. Will you be good enough to give some kind of a rule to go by?"

ANSWER: Proteins, which are the meats, cheese, nuts, etc.; properly combined with non-starchy and salad vegetables, such as string beans, spinach, celery, etc., are extremely easy to digest. The starches, such as potatoes, macaroni, rice, should also be combined with the non-starchy or salad vegetables, but never with the proteins. Just remember this, and study the menus given in this column each week, and it will soon become very easy for you to select good foods and correctly combine them.

Lyrics Of Life

(By Douglas Malloch.)

TAKE IT ALTOGETHER

Rain again, and yet—well, what of it?
Now and then you can learn to love it.
Raining now, and it's dark at present,
Yet, somehow, it's been mighty pleasant.
Had more shine than of days to wet us,
More days fine than of days to fret us.
Rain once more, but, at that, the weather
Didn't pour, take it altogether.

Life's that way, let us all remember,
Not all May, and not all November:
Songs and smiles, when it's sunshine only,
Afterwhiles when the heart grows lonely.
Rain we find, and we call it sorrow;
Never mind, it will clear tomorrow.
Though we've had many kinds of weather,
Life's not bad, take it altogether.

Rain again, but it soon blows over.
Now and then, but it brings the clover
Rain once more, but the sun breaks through it,
Has before, and will always do it.
When it's wet, when you hear no swallow,
Don't forget there are days to follow
When pat-pat goes the rainy weather,
Do just that—take it all together.

"IRISH HEARTS," with May McAvoy, is a Warner Bros. picturization of this novel.

SYNOPSIS

Sheila Kildare and her father emigrate to America, following Emmett Murtough, to whom she is betrothed. Neither Kildare nor Murtough hold steady jobs and Sheila is compelled to work as a waitress. She makes friends with Rory O'Shea, a professional boxer whose kindness interests her. Rory wins his last fight. Murtough has joined a band of bootleggers and reveals plans to move $150,000 worth of contraband to a cabaret girl. She sends Murtough to join the rivals.

CHAPTER X—Continued

Murtough read the note. He could not understand why he should be summoned from his bed at this hour in the morning, but he knew that Clarice was a clever girl and he accepted her statement that a big thing for him was waiting in Room 717. Quickly he dressed and after a cup of coffee at one of the all night lunch stands he hailed a taxicab and gave instructions to drive to the Marmaduke Hotel. The elevator boy showed no surprise when he stepped in and asked to be taken to the room. When he knocked on the door it opened and Schermer stepped out.

"I'm Murtough. Did you send for me?"

"What have you got to show for it?"

Murtough after a search found the note which he had crammed into his inside pocket. In looking for it he revealed the gun holster under his coat. Schermer read the note.

"Give me your gun," he demanded. "This is a friendly talk."

"How do I know?"

"You know this lady, don't you? Can't you take her word for it?" Murtough drew his gun and handed it to Schermer, who threw open the door and let Murtough enter the room in front of him. Schermer closed the door and called:

"Give me your gun," he demanded.

"All right, he's here!"

The room was evidently a parlor with bedrooms connecting, one on either side. Curtains screened the doors. The curtains were thrust aside and two men in dressing gowns stepped into the center of the room. They were—the men who were the companions of Schermer the night he had first talked with Clarice. The tall, thin stranger took the situation in hand.

"Sit down," he invited, pointing to a convenient chair. "Gus, pass the glasses, he may want a drink." Murtough filled the small glass and swallowed it. He drew a package of cigarettes and lighted one. Schermer's two companions sat down comfortably opposite him, but Schermer kept to his feet and idled between Murtough and the hallway door.

"We think you can help us. If you do, we can help you. We know all about you. You are working for Mannie Clocker and we asked you to come here to offer you a better job. That's all right, isn't it?"

"Yes, sir." Murtough was abashed at the coolness of the spokesman. "What is it ye want me to do?"

"We'll come to that. First, let me set something straight in your mind which you may not have thought of. A man is worth just so much to his employer, and an employer never pays for more than he gets. Right?" Murtough nodded. "All right, you are worth just a driver's pay to Clocker. We think you'll be worth a lot more to us, if you learn how to play our game."

"What is it—driving?"

"Driving to a certain spot and doing what we tell you to do."

Murtough squirmed and nervously flung his cigarette into the empty fireplace. He could not understand what this mystery meant. Instantly there arose the fear of a trap and a frame-up! He had walked blindly into it, had even given up his gun to his captors, if captors they were. But Clarice was all right, she was smart and must have known what she was doing when she sent him there.

"What do you mean?"

"You have been driving to Clocker's landing station in Long Island. We know that he is unloading a shipful of stuff there next Friday and Saturday nights. We want you to drive us to that landing station tonight and give us the lowdown on how the land lays around it."

"You mean to frame-up Mannie? Not much! I've never been an informer an' I won't be one now." Murtough started to his feet and Schermer backed to the door, his right hand in his pocket. Murtough saw the point of the gun bulging out the cloth of the coat.

"Sit down, sit down. You're a business man and you're among business men. I haven't finished yet." Murtough sat back and lighted another cigarette. "Better have another drink, you seem nervous." Murtough did and the leader continued:

"We'll have a car ready at three this afternoon. You are to guide it. When we get to the vicinity of the landing station, you are to show us just what the layout is, how far it is from the shore to the buildings, where the trucks can be parked and all about it."

"Mannie'd bump me off!"

"Anybody with enough money in his pocket doesn't have to fear that; besides, we'll employ you permanently and see that you work outside where Clocker's gang would never find you. Besides, he will never know who gave us the information, if you feel you'd like to stay on with him. But he's no good, never has been, never pays his men enough money. He makes thousands; they, one dollar bills."

"But he'd find out sure," muttered Murtough, wetting his lips, "and he'd get me sure."

"He didn't get the follows who shot you up, did he?" sneered the thin stranger. "Now, there's five thousand dollars in this for you, if you do your job well, and nobody will ever be the wiser. Five thousand dollars! That's a lot of money, and it shows that we play fair with those who play with us."

The speaker stopped. Murtough reviewed swiftly what this fortune would mean to him. Murtough was not a born crook. He was a weak man, a boastful man, but not at heart a deserter of his friends. His first chance to earn real money had come from Mannie Clocker, who had trusted him.

"No, not by a long shot. I won't turn up Mannie for none of ye. Who are ye, anyway," the thought suddenly flashed across his mind "Why, how did ye know Mannie never got the men that hi-jacked us? Ye must be some of the Stevens gang yourselves."

"Shut up and listen to me! Never mind who we are," the thin man arose and stood towering over him. "We asked you to do this job. We offered you good pay for it. Now, let me tell you that you are going to do it, and whether you get paid or not is going to be up to us. Hear me!"

"I won't turn up Mannie Clocker!"

"All right, we'll turn you up to Mannie Clocker."

"Me? Turn me up?"

"Certainly, where do you suppose we got the information? It came right from you. We'll turn our trick and we'll let Mannie know just how and where we got the information."

Murtough's thoughts raced back to the night he had spent with Clarice. What had he said? Who had overheard him? Had Clarice given the information to these men?

"More than that, Mannie will get that little moll of yours that you tell too much to as well."

So Clarice had broken confidence. It was she who had let these men know about the cargo due in from sea.

"Did she tell you?"

"Never mind. We know that you talked too much and we can prove it to Clocker's satisfaction, prove it so well that the police will find you floating in the Hudson some morning."

"I'm not afraid."

"You may not be afraid for yourself, but you certainly are man enough to protect a girl when her life is in danger, and all due to your own stupidity."

The tall man sat down again and sipped from a glass. He pressed no further on Murtough while several minutes passed. Murtough suddenly felt himself responsible for all that had occurred. Why had he talked so much that night? Someone in Corrigan's must have listened and repeated his conversation to these men. But that should not complicate Clarice. She was in no wise to blame. And she must not suffer because of his carelessness with the secrets of Mannie Clocker. Schermer renewed the proposition.

MANY SEEKING KIDD'S HOARDS

Treasure Seekers Active Along Nova Scotia Coast This Year.

NO GOLD FOUND YET.

HALIFAX, N.S., Aug. 22 (CP).—This summer the hoary legend of piratical treasure buried somewhere along the coast of Nova Scotia took a new lease on life and the ghost of Captain Kidd, cutlass, pistols and all, revived to haunt isolated harbors. Many amateur treasure seekers furtively resumed their operations with pick and shovel, but thus far no Spanish gold has been brought to light.

Captain Kidd, who according to some histories was a much-maligned mariner, is supposed to have scattered his loot in carefully selected hiding places along the coasts of New England, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. If all the local legends be true, then he must have spent the greater part of his life not in acquiring gold, but in burying it, for there is scarcely a harbor from Virginia to the Miramichi which has not at one time or another claimed to possess one of his hoards. One is forced to the conclusion that the dreaded buccaneer led the unromantic existence of a navvy.

For many years a small group of islands in Mahone Bay, near Chester, was strongly favored by the adherents of the legend. Occasionally some enthusiast unearthed a scrap of old ship wreckage, a rusted axe, or even a solitary coin. These finds strengthened the believers and brought new converts to the cult of Captain Kidd. No actual treasure was ever discovered, but there are still those who believe that the pot of gold is just around the corner for them. Years ago a particularly-favored island was christened Captain Kidd's Island.

Whether or not the treasure myth is entirely without foundation, it has given birth to a varied litter of minor legends, each with its individual twist and dash of local color. Supernatural agencies are called in to heighten the romance of these folk tales. Thus a wild and secluded cove near Saint John, N.B., is credited with the special guardianship of a titular demon of the old buccaneer's. Fisher folk will tell you, more by implication than by direct statement, that the cove undoubtedly harbors a fabulous wealth of doubloons, pieces of eight, rings and precious stones, but that indescribable dangers beset the path of the would-be treasure hunters.

One venturesome romanticist sallied forth by night, armed with spade and lantern. When he was found in the morning he was a gibbering maniac. Others who claim to have braved the unknown horrors relate that, when they had dug a few feet below the surface of the sand, their lights were extinguished and a thunderous voice ordered them to be gone. They were!

It is highly probable that the captain, who is reputed to have been a thrifty man, did salt away some of his "earnings" against a rainy day. His known addiction to islands and caves probably arose from the fact that he was not in good odor with the banks of his day.

So there is still a chance that one of the myriad coastal legends will turn out to be truth and that some credulous fisherman will blossom into a millionaire overnight.

OPIUM TRAFFIC IS STILL LARGE BUT REGULATED

British Governments First Official Report Illustrates Difficulties.

RESTRICTION HARD.

Plant is Cultivated Freely in China, Persia, and Turkey —Process Controlled.

LONDON, Aug. 22 (By Canadian Press).—That the illicit traffic in opium and other drugs continues on a large scale all over the world is shown in the report on the control of the traffic by the British Government, which the Home office this year has for the first time made public. The report proves however, that the revenue and police officials of the British Empire are alert in detection and quick to confiscate. It demonstrates, also, that relevant information is instantly conveyed to any foreign country that may be concerned, and to the league of nations, while it testifies to the efficiency of the methods always advocated by the British delegates at Geneva.

It is not possible at present to control the growth of a plant which is cultivated freely in China, Persia and Turkey, and in restricted quantities in India, but it is possible to strictly regulate its preparation for medicinal use and the complicated process by which raw opium is transmuted into morphine, heroin and other derivatives, and to supervise its distribution.

The British government has controlled the traffic since 1920, and although a new international instrument was signed in 1925 the international central board which in future is to supervise the traffic, has not yet been established. The report is interesting as showing how the British government's methods have largely been embodied in the new instrument, which is not yet fully ratified.

Half-seen beneath the surface of official reticence in this report lies the romance of criminal stealth foiled by the alertness of revenue detectives. A certain box on board a steamship plying between Amsterdam and Bluefields, Nicaragua, was, for instance, held up at Kingston, Jamaica. After communication with the Government of Nicaragua, it was found that the consignee was not the owner of a legally inscribed establishment for the sale of drugs, and that the consignment addressed to him contained more opium than the medical practitioners of Nicaragua would have consumed in the ordinary course in 15 years.

A particularly interesting seizure was made at Southampton. A shipment of a mixture labelled "Lubrinole" excited suspicion. On analysis this was found to be morphia mixed with some unctuous substance, from which it could later easily be recovered by chemical process. A new artifice of the drug traffickers was thus revealed. The shipment was from France to the Far East through Canada.

Full particulars were communicated to the League, which already has records of many ingenious tricks—of the drug being passed from place to place in the lining of hats, in hollow walking-sticks, in the stuffing of chairs, in chocolates, and so on. The Advisory Committee on Opium should, indeed, in time collect a record of crime to which Dr. Watson might turn for material now that Sherlock Holmes has really made his final bow.

COUNSEL TURN TO FULLER

The Case Reviewed.

BOSTON, Aug. 22 (Canadian Press) —Nicola Sacco and Bartolemeo Vanzetti are under sentence of death by electrocution shortly after midnight to-night. Both were born in Italy. Sacco became a prosperous shoe worker in Stoughton, with a family of a wife and two children. Vanzetti was a fish pedlar in Plymouth, with no relatives nearer than Italy.

A paymaster and his guard were killed in a hold-up in South Braintree on April 15, 1920. Vanzetti was convicted after this crime of a robbery while armed a short time before. He was known to Department of Justice operatives because of radical activities. A jury in 1921 took only a few hours of deliberation to reach a verdict of guilty of the Braintree murders. Repeated motions for new trials were made and denied, the case three times going to the State Supreme Court.

The Two Cases.

The State's case rested on identifications by eye-witnesses, the fact that both men were heavily armed when arrested, Sacco with a revolver claimed to be that carried by the slain guard, a cap identified as Sacco's found on the murder scene, and various other circumstantial evidence.

The defence contended the men were armed because they feared deportation as radicals, produced witnesses to contradict the identification, charged collusion between Federal and State officials, persecution for political ideas, prejudice on the part of the trial justice and jury foreman, and a general denial of the State case.

Execution Plans Finished.

CHARLESTOWN STATE PRISON, Boston, Aug. 22 (Canadian Press).—All details of the plans for the execution of Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti, due to die in the electric chair some time after midnight tonight, were completed at the prison to-day. The witnesses will start for the death chamber soon after 11.30. They will walk within the prison to the death-house, a small one-storey brick building which houses the death cells and the chamber with the chair.

Sacco, Vanzetti, and Madeiros occupy adjoining cells, facing the corridor. On the opposite side of the corridor a door leads into the death chamber. The chair stands at one side of the room. A few feet away is a small niche in the wall, in which are hidden a series of electric switches. There Executioner Robert Elliott will take his position. The witnesses will find places opposite the chair.

The order in which the three men will be executed lies in the discretion of the warden, and it may be altered up to the final minute, although it is likely that Madeiros will go first. If that is the case, he will start from his cell within a minute or two after midnight. On each will be a guard. Thirteen normal steps will take him across the corridor, through the door of the death chamber to a place in front of the chair. Sacco probably will be second to go to the chair and Vanzetti last.

From twenty-five to thirty minutes is expected to suffice for the execution of the three. After the execution the witnesses will return to the prison office, where an Associated Press representative, acting as representative of all the press, will describe the execution to all of the newspapermen so that the story may be sent out simultaneously over the dozen or more telegraph and Press Association wires that have been installed for the purpose.

PEACE BRIDGE OPPORTUNITY.

A condition exists here to-day that, in my opinion, may never exist again anywhere.

The Peace Bridge, dedicated by the Prince of Wales, and the first big traffic bridge connecting Canada with the United States, has just been opened from Buffalo, New York, to the small village of Fort Erie, Ontario.

If history repeats itself this bridge will add untold millions to the real estate values of nearby Canada.

In the past twenty-five years, somewhat similar conditions have prevailed, possibly only half a dozen times, and in every single instance investors have reaped profits of 500 to 5,000 per cent.

Don't take my word for this; all I ask is permission to present the facts, all taken from authentic records, and if you do your own thinking, your common sense will tell you this is a genuine lifetime opportunity.

These records show how thousands of people invested $500 or less, and only a few years later sold out for $20,000 or more.

A post-card will bring you the facts without obligating you. Walter F. Mullen, Realtor, 110 Delaware Ave., Buffalo, New York.

THE PEOPLE'S RAILWAY.

Those who have not been to the Georgian Bay over the Canadian National for a number of years, had an opportunity for comparison of the conditions prevailing now with those of only a few years ago. For the greater portion of the way, the train conveying the pilgrims to the St. Marie Shrine, consisted of twenty coaches, each one loaded to capacity, and notwithstanding the train's unusual length and weight, one locomotive (No. 3491) pulled the train to its destination and return, with apparent ease, and with express speed. So much for improved roadbed and modern motive power

TRUTH VERSUS ERROR.

A friend of mine has the pleasant memory of meeting a little tot, who said she was going to ride on the back of a lion in the Millenium, and with happy laughter spoke confidently and intelligently of the great blessings in store for mankind. Another little miss smilingly told him she knew the truth, and that she was a restitution girl. To hear innocency express the truth in their own way is like the sweet perfume of roses; but how much like the lingering obnoxious smell of the pole-cat, is the utterances of certain persons presenting and picturing to our minds a "hell" filled with millions of sinners, suffering horrible agony, and a heaven with a few saints, playing on harps, while they look down into "hell," and enjoy the plight of their brothers and sisters. It is no wonder many become infidels when, from pulpit and desk, all over the land, a false interpretation is given to the English word "hell," giving "endless torments" as its meaning, and claiming that this devilish idea is supported by the Scriptures.—M. T. Butcher.

WEDDING BELLS.

HALL—SMITH

MILLBROOK, Aug. 22 — A quiet but pretty wedding was solemnized in Trinity College Chapel, Toronto, on Wednesday, August 17, at 3 p.m., when Marjorie Lucy Smith, B.A., youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Smith, Millbrook, was united in marriage to Henry Wilfred Hall, B.A., only son of Mrs. T. E. Hall, of Lucan, Ontario.

The bride, who was given away by her father, wore a becoming French gown of peach georgette, smocked and daintily embroidered, shoes and stockings of a matching shade, and large black hat; her bouquet was of ophelia roses and baby's breath. Miss Helen Sloggett played the Wedding March.

Rev. Dr. Cosgrave, the Provost of Trinity College, performed the ceremony, assisted by Rev. P. C. Howard, of Millbrook. During the signing of the register, Mrs. Howard sang very sweetly, "O Perfect Love." There were no attendants.

Immediately following the ceremony an informal reception was held at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. Havelock Graham, and a buffet luncheon was served. Only the immediate relatives and friends were among the guests.

Mr. and Mrs. Hall left later on their wedding trip, going by motor by way of Northern Ontario to Michigan, the bride travelling in a rose crepe sports dress, with tweed coat and hat to match. Upon their return they will reside at Essex, the groom being principal of the Collegiate Institute in that town.

OBITUARY.

MRS. J. R. McKELVIE.

NORWOOD, Aug. 22.—A pall of sorrow was spread over Norwood on Sunday evening, when it became known that Mrs. J. R. McKelvie, a well-known and highly respected resident of Norwood, had passed away very suddenly. The deceased had been afflicted with rheumatism for some time, but otherwise seemed to be in very good health, and her sudden demise was therefore a great shock to the community.

POLITICAL LEADERS

Absolutely Neutral

Preliminary instruction to correspondents covering provincial elections last year were mailed on October 20. The fact of The Examiner's non-partizan attitude was specially emphasized in this notice. The second paragraph is thus:

It must be positively understood by all correspondents that The Examiner is absolutely neutral in politics and in the liquor question. What you think or what I think has nothing whatever to do with what we write for The Examiner. Correspondents must report just what other people say in meetings or in interviews without the slightest taint of the correspondent's personal opinions.

The third paragraph says in part:

Anything that is said in the meeting is legitimate news. I am going to watch the reports very closely to see that we are giving both sides in every locality the same show.

Further down the sheet comes the following:

Because of the liquor issue this election is going to be one of the hottest we have ever had in Ontario, and the only way you can adequately cover it in your district is to adopt a detached attitude, not caring which way it goes, but taking pride in having both sides say at the end: "Well, we got a square deal from The Examiner."

E. A. Peck, M.P.

E. A. Peck, M. P., for West Peterborough, studied the Port Hope editorial, and Colonel Price's reply very carefully, before expressing an opinion He thought there was something absurd in the statement of the Port Hope paper.

Questioned regarding the reference to Col. Price's reply regarding the presence of a Liberal organ in Peterborough, Mr. Peck, while pointing out that The Examiner had never at any time since the amalgamation made a formal declaration of neutrality, said he personally had always received fair treatment.

"In the last two elections in which I was directly concerned I consider I got fair play. I never had any reason to complain. The editorials were reasonable and were fair all around. They were never partizan. The Conservatives got a fair show, and the Liberals got a fair show. I think, however, that in view of the fact that The Examiner has never announced a change in its political attitude that Colonel Price's statement was not unjustifiable.

V. J. McElderry.

V. J. McElderry, president of the Liberal Conservative Association, while reluctant to comment on Col. Price's statement, readily complimented The Examiner on its reports of the local meetings during the 1925 and 1926 elections. The reports of the meetings were fair. The meetings were well reported and equally reported. "Their attitude was impartial," affirmed Mr. McElderry.

John Corkery.

John Corkery, a prominent local Conservative, and one of the speakers on behalf of the party candidate at the last two general elections, said:

"Since the amalgamation of The Examiner and The Review, I have certainly found that The Examiner faithfully kept aloof altogether from party politics, and pursued an independent attitude to all political questions. Never at any time since the union of the two Peterborough papers has The Examiner in its editorials leaned one way or the other in support of any party. I read the reports of all the speeches, and can safely say that there was no preponderance of space given to one party as compared with that given to the other."

Ald. Roland Denne.

"So far as I am concerned, I can safely say there has been absolutely no evidence of Liberal bias on the part of The Examiner in recent years," was the terse summary of the situation of Alderman Roland Denne, a life long Conservative and official candidate of the party in the Dominion election in 1921.

"Speaking for myself I can say The Examiner has always played fair; I would say it has been fair in all things," continued Mr. Denne "and so far as I know it has been just in its attitude to everybody. In the elections of recent years there was no evidence of partizanship in its editorials. Its allocation of space in reports of meetings was fair to both.

Discussing the suggestion of Col. Price that the Port Hope paper may be going out of business, Mr. Denne said, "If every merchant and manufacturer in the city of Peterborough would order his stationery and supplies from the local printing houses it would add greatly to the employment in this industry. I am sure that customers will get as fair a price in Peterborough as they would get elsewhere, and as good service. In return for increased patronage the proprietors could give more employment, which would mean more families for Peterborough, and increased prosperity. Let them 'try it out. 'Boost your own home town' is a good principle."

J. F. Strickland.

J. F. Strickland, secretary of the Conservative Association of West Peterborough, declares that in all three elections of 1925 and 1926, The Examiner's attitude was independent and impartial. "Personally," he said, "I see very little grounds for complaint. No doubt at times there were things in it that we as Conservatives did not altogether like, and I am sure there were things in it that did not appeal favorably to the Liberals. The Examiner's editorials and reports of local meetings were independent and impartial."

H. B. Rye.

H. B. Rye declares that repeatedly in recent years in the Conservative committee rooms he has heard words of commendation for the fairness of The Examiner's treatment of both parties. He believed that The Examiner had made an honest effort to ensure fair play for both parties. Both reports and editorials were free from favoritism.

Joseph Wearing.

Joseph Wearing has been for many years a stalwart of the Liberal party in this city; he has been on many Liberal platforms and has been a speaker on behalf of numerous Liberal candidates and policies.

In answer to The Examiner's query as to what he thought of the position taken by it, both regarding its editorials and news items, with respect to politics in the last few years, Mr. Wearing said:

"'I can only say that it has most cleverly stood right on the fence and has consistently avoided any indication of having any politics of its own. When it comes to issuing a daily paper during the heat of a political election, 'Mr. Facing Both Ways' could have nothing on the editor of The Examiner. However, neither Liberals nor Conservatives could complain of the slightest unfairness, and both sides have had their meetings fully reported."

The Hon. G. N. Gordon, K.C.

The Hon. G. N. Gordon, K.C., Liberal M.P. in the House of Commons from 1921 till 1924, candidate for West Peterboro, under Liberal auspices, in three Dominion elections, and Minister of Immigration in the Liberal administration of the Rt. Hon. W. L. McKenzie King, declared The Examiner's attitude during the elections of 1925 and 1926 was that of a nondescript. The newspaper, he declares, was fair to all parties and seemed to be obsessed with the fear of infringing its neutrality.

Ex-Ald. J. W. Meyers.

Ex-Alderman J. W. Meyers, whose Liberal convictions are known to all said he had always looked on The Examiner in recent years as being an independent journal. It was fair and just towards the Liberal party, he thought, but not biased in its favor.

"There may be some people in The Examiner who have Liberal leanings, but these were not noticeable in the policy of the paper during 1925 and 1926. I have always regarded it as an independent paper that was prepared to give either party a fair show," concluded Mr. Meyers.

J. J. Duffus.

J. J. Duffus, a former Mayor of Peterborough, one who has been for many years recognized as an influence in Liberal counsels, and official candidate of the party at the general election in 1926, declares that the Liberal party has received fair play at the hands of The Examiner. The Examiner, he says, both in its editorials and in its reports, steered a middle course, containing no evidence of partizanship.

Ald. N. E. Phelan.

Alderman N. E. Phelan, a life-long supporter and worker on behalf of Liberalism in this city, has no hesitation in giving his verdict that The Examiner has steered a scrupulously middle course on political matters since the amalgamation of Peterborough's two dailies.

"I read Col. Price's statement," explained Mr. Phelan, "and it set me thinking. I wondered where he got the idea that The Examiner was still Liberal in polity. Since the amalgamation it has been noticeable that The Examiner took no sides at any election. The editorials were unbiased and the paper seemed to be making an endeavor to give equal space to both parties; in fact it has been neutral in every detail. I have not missed reading The Exmanire in 15 years, and since the amalgamation have seen nothing in it savoring of party politics."

R. J. Soden.

R. J. Soden, a former Conservative candidate, and one of the outstanding speakers on behalf of E. A. Peck at the two latest Dominion elections, when seen this afternoon, said The Examiner was neutral, and straightforward during the campaigns. "In my opinion," he said, "The Examiner is not now a Liberal paper. It is independent and non-party."

W. F. Huycke.

W. F. Huycke, one of the Liberal speakers on behalf of G. N. Gordon and J. J. Duffus during the campaigns of 1925 and 1926, said The Examiner played no politics. He did not look upon The Examiner as being at present a Liberal paper, but it had been fair to the party as it had been to the Opposition party. The reports of the meetings were able and accurate. This applies to its reports of the activities of both parties. But it is to the editorial page that people look for guidance as to how to vote. This guidance was not given in The Examiner's editorials. As far as I can recollect The Examiner was content to confine itself to urging the electors to vote as they liked, but vote."

Opinions were sought from W. H. Bradburn, G. A. Gillespie and J. A. Dewart, but none of these gentlemen was available, all being out of town. The Examiner was also unable to get into touch with W. A. Anderson, M.L.A., in time for a message for to-day's issue.

Laval Quebec Leads Mine Market Trading

TORONTO, Aug. 22.— (Canadian Press.)—Laval Quebec, in a turnover of almost half a million shares, dominated this morning's session of the standard mining exchange, when transactions were well over a million and a half shares. Laval soared to 50 and eased to 53 at the noon close for a net gain of five points. The other Quebec stocks shared in the activity but were not all bullish. Noranda slumped 65 cents at 23.75. Ribago in heavy dealings lost two at 33, after reaching 38 in the morning. Amulet lost six at 5.19 and Area sold down 17 cents at the noon close of 80.

Barry Hollinger and Crown Reserve gained a point or more at 41 and 13 but Kirkland Lake softened three at 183. Central Manitoba in a moderately heavy turnover was up 37 cents at 2.00.

Oil and Liquor and High Class Issues Firm

TORONTO, Aug. 22. Canadian Press. — Higher class issues and the unlisted oil and liquor leaders were firm on the Toronto stock exchange this morning but the mining stocks slumped sharply in line with the mining exchange. The regular list was very quiet. Shredded wheat advanced three at 68 and Dominion Stores 1½ at 23, while Brazilian went up 1¼ to 173¼ on a couple of small sales. The Page Hersey issues, more active, had good gains, the Common of 1¼ at 79 and the preferred of 2½ at 158.

Carling Breweries, the liquor leader, closed steady at 29¼. Walker firmed slightly at 49 7-8, and Bakeries at 29 7-8 was 1-8 higher. British American Oil gained ¼ at 27.

Wheat Goes Higher Following Liverpool

CHICAGO, Aug. 22 (Canadian Press).—Wheat took an early swing upgrade today, due to strength in Liverpool and reports of continued unfavorable weather in Europe and in parts of the American and Canadian Northwest. Profit-taking developed on the swells, but the upturn was generally maintained with commission houses on both sides. Opening ⅜c to 1¼c higher, wheat continued to score moderate advances. Corn was firmer with wheat and on local buying. Staring ⅛c to ⅞c up, the market subsequently showed futher fractional gains. Oats were affected by other grains, and provisions were firm in line with a rise in hog values.

Opening prices were: Wheat, September 1.41⅝, December 1.45⅞. Corn, September 1.11¼, December 1.15⅝. Oats, September 47c, December 50¾c.

M'DERMOTT FACES TRIAL FOR STEALING

Hearing Held To-day—Accused of Conspiracy To Rob Hodges.

BARRIE, Ont., Aug. 22 (Canadian Press).—Joseph McDermott, cattle drover of Beeton, was committed for trial on certain charges of cattle stealing when the preliminary hearing of the charges against him opened before Magistrate Jeffs today. The County Council Chamber, in which the hearings of others in the same connection had taken place on Friday, was again jammed with farmers and their folk who came from all parts of the county and had waited since early morning.

A new charge, of conspiracy with Daniel Forsythe to rob Alex Hodges, as well as the charges of perjury, were yet to be heard. Inspector William Stringer of the Provincial Police, testified that McDermott had confessed to buying cattle which he knew to be stolen.

IN MEMORIAM.

MEHEW—In loving memory of my dear husband, Walter John Mehew, who passed away seven years ago, August 22, 1920:

Our family circle is broken within our happy home,
A husband dear, a father true, from loving ones has gone.
My lips cannot tell what to say I have lost.
Heaven has gained one of the best the world contained.

There is not a day, dear husband
that I do not think of you,
Just a thought of sweet remembrance,
Just a memory fond and true;
Just a token of affection and a heartache for you.

Skeeter Trap

Garland Rhodes, of Stuttgart, Ark., was bothered greatly by the hordes of mosquitoes that infested the neighborhood of that town. So he invented this mosquito trap and is making a good living with it, killing 11 pints of the insects in one week and getting $5 a pint for them. The trap consists of a tub of water covered with kerosene, an electric light and a mirror.

SELF-SACRIFICE EXAMPLES GIVEN

Rev. T. A. Rodgers Gives Interesting Address To Rotarians.

Examples of heroic self-sacrifice which have come within the orbit of his own observation during his extensive journeys from coast to coast and farther north than the Arctic Circle were related to-day to the Rotary Club at the weekly luncheon in the Empress Hotel by Rev. T. A. Rodger, who is conducting the services at St. Paul's Presbyterian Church during the vacation of Rev .William Allan.

Two outstanding examples of self-sacrifice were quoted by Mr. Rodger. The first was that of an aged man living as a bachelor on a ranch in Western Canada. Struck by the man's extensive knowledge and by his large library ,Mr. Rodger queried him about his early life, and soon learned his story. In his youth the man had visions of the career of a surgeon. Just as he was ready to enter the University of Toronto, his father died. After fighting the battle within himself for a whole night, he resolved to sacrifice his career for the sake of his mother and younger brothers and sisters. To-day, said Mr. Rodger, three of that man's brothers are eminent surgeons and his four sisters are high in the teaching profession.

The second example concerned a young man who voluntarily sacrificed his summer vacation in order to instruct the children grown up in ignorance in a remote community in the West.

These, said Mr. Rodger, were examples of the following of the spirit of Jesus Christ. The remainder of Mr. Rodger's address was a plea for self-sacrifice in the service of others and the following of Jesus Christ as the rule and guide in daily life.

Mr. Rodger was introduced by Rotarian Tom Dutton, who described him as an evangelist and a preacher of the highest type, ever seeking to serve Christ and his fellow-men.

"PERFECT CITY" IN CHINA

CHENGTU, China, Aug. 22.—The strife of civil war never has ruffled the placidity of Chengtu, the "perfect city" of China. It lies 1000 miles up the Changstu Kiang River. The streets are newly paved. There are many automobiles and motorcycles, and foreign missionaries go about entirely unmolested.

Among the Chinese the idea of worship is to please the Deity, not to obtain blessing for their souls. Their prayers are said merely as a duty to their god and are a matter of mere formality and custom.

TWO AVIATORS READY TO FLY TO AMERICA

Courtney and Hamilton Expect To Start Within Few Hours.

PLANES PREPARED.

Courtney Will Go To New York Via Azores—Hamilton To Ottawa.

PEWSEY, England, Aug. 23 (Canadian Press).—Capt. Leslie Hamilton, British aviator, today told the Associated Press that he was ready to start at eight o'clock tomorrow morning, from the Upavon Airdrome, near here, to Ottawa, if the present thirty-mile-an-hour wind from the west moderated.

"And I am going to put in a good night's sleep" Capt. Hamilton, who will make the flight with Col. F. F. Minchin, added. The 750 gallons of gasoline which they will carry have been loaded into their Jupiter Fokker for the flight, which it is hoped eventually will take them to London, Ontario, for the $25,000 prize which has been offered.

Courtney Ready to Go

SOUTHAMPTON, England, Aug. 23 (Canadian Press).—Frank Courtney, British aviator, who is planning a trans-Atlantic flight by way of the Azores, was preparing shortly after six o'clock tonight to start within half an hour. He was ready for the take-off at six-thirty and said he would hop off immediately.

Preparing Four Planes.

CURTISS FIELD, N.Y., Aug. 23.—(Canadian Press.)—Groomed for overseas flights, four airplanes, in one of which its backers hope to lower the record for encircling the globe, to-day stood in various stages of preparation on this Long Island flying field. The newest arrival to the gathering galaxy of seekers after flying honors is the Stinson-Detroit monoplane, 'Pride of Detroit,' in which Edward Schlee, a Detroit business man, and William Brock, a pilot, expect to hop off at dawn to-morrow for Harbor Grace, Nfld., on the first leg of their journey around the world.

Adjustment of instruments on the Stinson-Detroit 'Sir John Carling,' in which Capt. Terry Tully and Lieut. James Medcalf will attempt a hop from London, Ont., to London, England, was expected to be completed to-day. They also plan to start at dawn to-morrow for Ontario, stopping at Detroit for the final check up of their plane.

Meanwhile unfavorable winds again prevented the take-off of the Fokker monoplane, 'Old Glory,' which Lloyd Bertraud and James Hill plan to fly to Rome.

The fourth plane is that of Capt. Rene Fonck, French war ace, who expects to hop to Europe next month. His plane is a Sikorsky twin-motored biplane and is the largest of the four.

COURTNEY POSTPONES FLIGHT.

SOUTHAMPTON, August 23 (Canadian Press). — At the last moment, Captain Courtney postponed the trans-Atlantic flight until to-morrow.

BILLS POSTED FOR EXHIBITION

Streamers and Stickers Assist In Advertising Big Fair.

FROM SEPT. 12 TO 17.

Advertising for the Peterborough Exhibition is getting well under way. Already long streamers hanging on the rear of transport trucks travelling through the country and on the main highways tell people of the great show that is to be held this year, and the duration of the exhibition.

Small stickers may be seen on the windshields of cars belonging to citizens anxious to make the Peterborough Exhibition, which will be held from September 12 to 17, the biggest and best in the history of the local board.

Placards have also been distributed along the country roads, and large billboards face travellers at almost every station of importance to the four points of the compass for miles around.

TORONTO MEN DESIGN COINS

Win $1,500 For Jubilee Issues of One, Five and Twenty-five Cent Pieces.

NO TEN CENT DESIGN.

OTTAWA, Aug. 23 (Canadian Press).—Two Toronto residents, Gustav Hahn and J. E. H. McDonald, A.R.C.A., were the successful contestant in the Dominion-wide contest for designs for the proposed new coinage to mark the Diamond Jubilee of Confederation, it was announced here today.

Mr. Hahn submitted the design chosen for the one-cent bronze piece and Mr. McDonald was successful with his designs for the five cent and twenty-five cent pieces. Under the terms of the contest, the national committee for the celebration of the Diamond Jubilee announced a cash prize of $500 for each design and of the $1,500 awarded, $500 goes to Mr. Hahn and $1,000 to Mr. McDonald. The judges did not consider any one of the designs for the ten-cent piece were suitable for recommendation to the Minister of Finance.

HONEYMOON FLIGHT ENDS IN FATALITY

Philadelphia Man Killed When Plane Crashes at Niagara.

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., Aug. 23 (Canadian Press).—Stanley Brzusziewicz, 32, of Philadelphia, died to-day from terrible injuries sustained last night when an aeroplane in which he was passenger crashed above Chippawa. Almost every bone in his body was broken and he never regained consciousness.

The pilot of the plane, Fred Hardwick, Hamilton, Ont., has a broken leg and possibly internal injuries, but will probably recover. The dead man was here on his honeymoon, and his wife, after staying with her husband until he died, returned to the Chippawa House, where they had been staying.

Neat Man Prevents Untidiness In Death

NEWARK, Aug. 23.—(United Press).—Andre Kundorski had a neighborhood reputation for his neatness. Desiring to maintain this reputation even in death, he held his head out of the window of his home, and cut his throat with a razor, thus making certain that none of the blood would stain the carpet. He died at a hospital.

DIED TO-DAY FOR MURDER SEVEN YEARS AGO

Bartolomeo Vanzetti, fish peddler, and Nicola Sacco, shoemaker, shown left to right in centre, were convicted on July 14, 1921, and electrocuted on August 23, 1927. The jury decided that these two men, admittedly anarchists, had shot and killed Fred erick Parmenter paymaster, and Alexander Beradelli, his guard, in a $15,000 hold up at South Braintree, near Boston, on April 15, 1920. In subsequent appeals to the courts and Governor Fuller, right, the defense contended that Sacco and Vanzetti had not received a fair trial, because Judge Webster Trayer, left, was prejudiced, and that the defendants had been "railroaded" because of their anarchistic views. Seven years, four months and seven days after the crime, Sacco and Vanzetti died in the electric chair.

BODIES TO BE TAKEN ON TOUR THROUGH EAST

Sacco-Vanzetti Committee Will Have Special Caskets Made.

COURAGE PRAISED.

Government Offices Still Guarded in Washingtotn—Pickets On Trial.

BOSTON, Aug. 23 (Canadian Press).—The bodies of Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti are to be taken in specially constructed caskets through the cities of the East. This was announced by the Sacco-Vanzetti defence committee today. First they are to lie in state at committee headquarters here. When this will be, the committee were unable to say at noon, as they had not been informed at that time when the bodies would be turned over to them by Medical Examiner Magrath.

The visits to various cities might extend as far as Chicago, it was added.

The body of Celestino Madeiros, who was executed with them at the State Prison today, will be delivered to a New Bedford undertaker. This is at the request of his mother.

The Charlestown district and all other parts of Boston were quiet today. An echo of the last minute demonstrations in sympathy with Sacco and Vanzetti came with the arraignment in the Municipal Court of pickets arrested in front of the State House. Mrs. Glendower Evans, who has been active in the Sacco-Vanzetti defence, said today that death masks would be made of both men and many copies distributed.

Courage is Praised

NEW YORK, Aug. 23 (Canadian Press).—The courage with which Sacco and Vanzetti met death was praised in a statement issued early today by the Sacco-Vanzetti emergency committee of New York, which described the execution of the anarchists as a "legal class lynching, bringing sorrow to millions of workers."

Offices Still Guarded

WASHINGTON, Aug. 23 (Canadian Press)—Government offices and residences of prominent officials in Washington today remained under the protection of a large force of policemen and special guards against reprisals by Sacco-Vanzetti sympathizers. No demonstration or untoward incident occurred, according to the police.

Demonstration in Geneva

GENEVA, Aug. 23 (Canadian Press).—About two thousand manifestants assembled before the United States Consulate early this evening in protest against the Sacco-Vanzetti executions. Firemen were called out and drenched the mob with water.

U. S. Offices Guarded

VIENNA, Aug. 23 (Canadian Press) —The United States Legation, Consulate, and residences here were strongly guarded by police today. Newspapers have thus far not commented on the Sacco-Vanzetti executions.

WORLD-KNOWN RADICALS DIE FOR MURDER OF PAYMASTER; MADEIROS IS ALSO EXECUTED

Three Electrocuted After Many Delays Gained By Lawyers.

CRIME SEVEN YEARS OLD.

Sacco and Vanzetti Suffer For Killing of Paymaster in April, 1920.

CHARLESTOWN STATE PRISON, Boston, Mass., Aug. 23.—(A.P.)—Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti shortly after midnight this morning paid the penalty of death exacted by the State for murder.

Celestino Madeiros preceded them to the electric chair by a few minutes, the world-known radicals following as rapidly as the execution routine would permit.

Madeiros died at 12.09 a.m. for the murder of a Wrentham bank cashier. Sacco and Vanzetti were executed for the murder of a paymaster and his guard at Braintree April 15, 1920. Sacco was dead at 12.19 and Vanzetti at 12.26.

Inside and outside of the high prison wall stood a small army of armed guards. Waiting also were the press wires to inform the world that the long fight to save the men was at an end. The fight in behalf of the men continued until the last minute.

Both Sacco and Vanzetti made brief speeches in the death chamber before they took their seats in the chair; Vanzetti protesting his innocence to the last.

Sacco pale but steady, shouted in Italian "Long live anarchy" as he sat down in the chair.

Then in broken English he went on, "Farewell my wife and child and all my friends."

The straps were being adjusted as he said his last words:

"Good evening, gentlemen. Farewell, mother."

Vanzetti entered the death chamber the calmest of all the three men. Shaking hands with two of the guards as he came through the door of the execution chamber, he walked unassisted to the chair and seated himself.

As the guards began the hasty adjustment of straps to his head and body he began a speech.

In the broken English that characterized his dramatic plea for "justice" when sentence was passed on him in Dedham on April 5, he declared:

"I wish to tell you I am innocent and never connected with any crime, but sometimes some sin. I thank you for everything you have done for me. I am innocent of all crime, not only of this one, but all. I am an innocent man."

Then just as the guards slipped the straps and head cap in place, cutting off further speech, he shouted:

"I wish to forgive some people for what they are now doing to me."

"It's All Over," Avers Counsel.

BOSTON, Mass., Aug. 23.—(A.P.)—Attorney Michael A. Musmanno of the Sacco-Vanzetti counsel came from Governor Fuller's office shortly after 11 o'clock last night and said:

"It's all over."

Without another word he walked away.

A final appeal to Governor Fuller to grant "any form of clemency" to Sacco and Vanzetti rather than allow the two men to be executed was made last night by Musmanno.

Musmanno arrived at the State house shortly after six o'clock and was immediately admitted to the Governor's office.

The attorney before entering said that Arthur D. Hill of defense counsel had been detained in Maine and could not return to Boston before to-day.

Series of Legal Moves.

The swiftest succession of legal moves in the seven years' fight to save Sacco and Vanzetti marked the last hours before the time set for their execution.

The day had marked defeat for them at every step. With the evening they not only appealed again to Governor Fuller for "any kind of clemency," but tried one judge after another.

Church Bombed.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Aug. 23.—(United Press.) — The Franciscan Monastry of St. Joseph's church was bombed here early to-day shortly after the execution in Boston of Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti. No one was injured, but a motorcycle officer who passed the church just a minute or two before the explosion was blown from his machine by the force of the blast.

The monastry was damaged to the extent of $10,000, and windows in houses for blocks around were shattered. Residents were thrown from their beds. No arrests have been made.

Demonstration At Geneva.

GENEVA, Aug. 23.—(United Press.) —Sacco and Vanzetti sympathizers smashed property, killed one person, and wounded 25 others last night.

An Expensive Hour For Charlie Chaplin

LOS ANGELES, Calif., Aug. 23.—(Canadian Press.)— Charlie Chaplin's price of domestic peace to-day provided a wealth of figures for conjecture and gossip of the movie going and newspaper reading worlds that know of the film jester and his marital difficulties. Sixty-two minutes in court yesterday, in which the graying comedian's young wife, Lita Grey Chaplin, won in perfunctory fashion an interlocutory decree of divorce, probably cost the actor in excess of a million dollars.

WOMAN PLANS ATLANTIC HOP

Russian Aviatrix May Start Soon "For Glory Of It."

ROUTE UNDETERMINED.

NEW YORK, Aug. 23.—Mrs. Liuba Philipps, Russian pilot of sixteen years' experience, who came to this country four years ago, plans to take off in a few weeks for a yet undetermined destination on the European Continent "for the glory of it and to show that what men can do woman can." Announcement of the plans for the flight was made yesterday by the flier and her manager, Oliver Morosco.

The two backers of the flight prefer to remain anonymous. A contract for one year was signed by Mrs. Philipps a week ago. While Mr. Morosco hinted that she might choose the route followed by Columbus in his famous voyage of discovery, Mrs. Philipps said that she has reached no decision regarding either the route or the landing place, but that there were several possibilities.

Whether a navigator will accompany the woman pilot is another point left in doubt. The plane will be a single motored Fokker, a type of airship with which Mrs. Philipps is familiar. It is expected that the order for the plane will be placed within a few days, and that the necessity of waiting for a plane to be assembled will be obviated by arrangements to obtain a plane which has been in process of construction for another purpose.

Mrs. Philipps made it clear that she would be the sole judge regarding the plane chosen, the route to be followed and other purely technical arrangements.

Mr. Morosco will precede Mrs. Philipps to Europe by boat. He, as well as the flier and her husband, emphasized that this is no commercial venture. Mr. Morosco admitted, however, that the contract deals also with picture rights.

YOUNG PEOPLE SWIM CHEMONG

Miss Eleanor Hiland Makes Double Trip Across Lake.

BROTHER CROSSES ONCE.

Swimming Chemong Lake from the Smith to the Ennismore shores, three times in one day is an honor that has been shared by two members of the family of E. G. Hiland.

Accompanied by her two younger brothers in a skiff, Eleanor Hiland, Mr. Hilands 18-year-old daughter, set out to swim across the lake and back to her father's boathouse, about a quarter of a mile north of the village of Bridgenorth. When the party reached the Ennismore side in safety, one of the little fellows, aged 11 years, expressed the opinion that he was quite capable of covering the distance of the return journey, and promptly plunged into the water and swam alongside his sister on her way to the point from which she had started. Both reached their destination appearing none the worse for their long swim.

Miss Hiland enjoyed a good reputation around the Chemong district before accomplishing her feat, which many regard as winning the blue riband of Chemong Lake, but Joseph Hiland's fine performance came as a great surprise to all his relatives and acquaintances.

CHARLES PERRY DIES SUDDENLY

Former Proprietor of American Hotel Has Had Heart Trouble.

END NOT EXPECTED.

Shortly after noon today, having partaken of a hearty meal preparatory to making a journey to Lindsay, Charles G. Perry, for many years proprietor of the American Hotel, on Hunter Street, died suddenly.

Dr. T. G. Louden, who was called by Mrs. Perry, responded immediately, only to find Mr. Perry's breath coming in great gasps at the point of death.

Mr. Perry had been suffering from heart trouble for more than a year and had been in receipt of medical treatment, but none of his relatives had any apprehension today that death was so close to him.

GERMANS ARE KEYED UP FOR OCEAN FLIGHT

Koennocke Becomes Owner of Biplane Germania—Chooses Flying Partner.

WAITS ON WEATHER.

Junkers Fliers Determined Not To Be Beaten in Race Across.

COLOGNE, Aug. 23. — Only the weather, the official reports on which continue to be unsatisfactotry, is preventing Otto Koennecke from soaring forth on his attempt to fly the Atlantic. His Caspar biplane Germania is fully loaded for the flight and its Junkers motors have passed all final tests.

Yesterday the machine formally became the property of Koennecke and his financial backer, Count Solms. The purchase price was handed over to a representative of the Caspar Company and the insurance premium was also paid.

From among several applicants the pilot chose I. A. Wall, a professional wireless operator with twelve years' experience on land and sea and in the air, as his overseas companion. The plane is equipped both for radio telephony and telegraphy, the sending radius in the former case being 200 kilometers and as high as 600 in the latter.

Plans Southward Route.

Koennecke purposes to operate the machine single handed the whole way across the ocean. He has had a specially comfortable seat constructed for himself, but denies there is any danger of his falling asleep. He plans to take a route considerably further to the south than those followed by any American flyers or contemplated by the German Junkers pilots. His start will be in the early morning so that he will be able to traverse Belgium and France in daylight and arrive over the open sea at nightfall.

Last night's weather news both from the Hamburg Central Bureau and the United States indicates a slight improvement in conditions over the Atlantic.

The Caspar plane carries gasoline sufficient for fifty flying hours, bringing its total weight to 3,800 kilograms. The tanks that will be emptied by the time the ocean is reached will serve to keep the craft afloat if it becomes necessary to descend at sea.

Junkers Watch Koennecke.

DESSAU, Aug. 23.—The two Junkers planes are prepared to repeat their transatlantic effort whenever the weather permits. They and their pilots and passengers are here waiting to start. The Junkers flyers are determined not to let Koennecke beat them across.

DOLLAR DAY TO-MORROW SEE WINDOWS TO-NIGHT

Capt. Ayres Has Billed All the Surrounding Towns and Villages By Aeroplane.

The merchants of Peterborough have undertaken a novelty in the way of adding to their advertising of Dollar Day. Captain Ayres is visiting all the surrounding towns and villages by aeroplane and dropping advertising matter in each centre.

The merchants have gone to an unusual lot of trouble this year to give big values in all the Dollar Day Stores.

It will pay to come down town to-night and see the windows dressed with Dollar Day Values.

Be down early tomorrow, as a big crowd of out-of-town shoppers is expected.

SCHLEE STARTS WORLD FLIGHT

Arrives at Curtiss-Field, N.Y., in Stinson-Detroiter Monoplane.

ESTABLISH RECORD.

CURTISS FIELD, N.Y., August 23 (Canadian Press). — Out to establish new time records for encircling the globe, Edward F. Schlee, Detroit business man, landed here in his Stinson-Detroiter monoplane late yesterday afternoon, piloted by William Brock. The plane left the Ford airport at Detroit at 10.21 a.m., and arrived here at 5.40 p.m.

Schlee and Brock plan to hop off at dawn on Wednesday for Harbor Grace, Newfoundland, from where they will make their official start on their round- the-world flight. They will wait at Harbor Grace until the weather is favourable for a hop across the Atlantic . London is their first scheduled stop.

Before leaving for Harbor Grace, Schlee expects to make arrangements with James H. Starr, of the United States Weather Bureau, for the forwarding of the latest reports on the weather over the Atlantic. It is his intention, Schlee said, to have these reports radioed to Cape Race and then telephoned to him at Harbor Grace. His departure from there will depend on the contents of these reports. Schlee added that he has expended $15,000 for the construction of a special runway at Harbor Grace.

While here, Schlee said, some necessary adjustments to the earth inductor compass on his plane will be made.

The record which Schlee and Brock hope to break was established last year by Edward S. Evans, another Detroit business man, and Linton Wells ,newspaper correspondent. Using aeroplanes, railroads and steamers, Evans and Wells circled the globe in 28 days 14 hours 30 minutes ,departing from New York and continuing in an easterly direction until they arrived back at that city again. Schlee and Brock, however, intend to start at Harbor Grace and keep going until they return to that point.

He was lodged in the police station and will face a charge of assault.

FINAL APPEALS ARE DENIED TO RADICALS

Defense Counsel Try One Judge After Another For Respite.

RIOTERS ARRESTED.

Sacco and Vanzetti Visited By Relatives at Death House.

BOSTON, Mass., Aug. 23 (Canadian Press).—The swiftest succession of legal moves in the seven years' fight to save Sacco and Vanzetti marked the last hours before the time set for their execution.

The day had marked defeat for them at every step. With the evening they not only appealed again to Governor Fuller for "any kind of clemency," but tried one judge after another.

Judge Lowell of the Federal District Court, refused to grant a writ of habeas corpus or a stay; then the attorneys went to Beverly to appeal once more to Justice Holmes of the United States Supreme Court, who twice previously had declined to intervene. One of their number talked with the Governor and then with Attorney-General Reading.

At the death house Sacco and Vanzetti were visited last evening for the third time yesterday by Mrs. Rose Sacco and Miss Luigia Vanzetti, who later went to the State House to see the Governor. Gardner Jackson, head of the defence committee, called at the prison and asked Warden Hendry about arrangements for receiving the bodies of the two men after electrocution.

Refuses Stay

Earlier in the day Justice Stone of the United States Supreme Court had refused, at his summer home at Isle Au Haut, Maine, to grant a stay of execution. Similarly, Judge Sisk of the Massachusetss Superior Court, had declined to intervene. Governor Fuller, who had before him a petition for another respite, spent the day at the State House, receiving several delegations and individuals who pleaded for clemency for the two men.

Chief Justice Taft telegraphed from at Murray Bay, Que., his refusal to intervene because the matter was out of his jurisdiction.

In the death house at the State Prison Sacco and Vanzetti and Celestino Madeiros, condemned to die at the same time for another murder, spent the day reading, eating the prison fare and receiving visits from counsel and relatives.

Rioters Arrested

During the day there were several attempts at picketing in front of the State House. As fast as a picket line developed, the police broke it up. More than 100 persons, some of them women, were arrested.

The response to a call sent out by the Sacco-Vanzetti defence committee for a sympathetic strike yesterday was small in Boston, where labor union officials had refused to sanction it. Only a few hundred workers left their benches. In Montpelier and Barre, Vt., granite manufacturing centres, a large number of workers left the granite sheds and paraded.

Many echoes of the situation came from outside New England. A State trooper was killed after dispersal of a Sacco-Vanzetti demonstration in Springdale, Pa. Expressions of sympathy with the two men came from many points abroad.

At Washington the defence petiti-

Voodoo Doctor and Four Priests Jailed After His Reported Patient Succumbs

MOBILE, Ala., Aug. 23 (A.P.). — "King" William Carpenter, voodoo doctor, and his "four high priests of the temple," were in jail here yesterday while Sheriff Pat Byrne continued his investigation of alleged practices in the temple and into the death of a 73-year-old negro, who was reported to have undergone "treatment" there.

A hitching post, where the "patients" were fastened with a trace chain while the process of "exorcising evil spirits" from their heads went on, was one piece of equipment found, the officer said.

One of the "priests" explained, Sheriff Byrne said, that a negro woman had been secured to the post awaiting the removal of the "spirits" until "King" William became alarmed and released her.

Membership in the colony, officers said, except for Carpenter and his prophets, consisted of negro women and girls, who expressed themselves as believing that "King" William and his assistants were endowed with supernatural powers. The "prophets" confined their operations to the temple and waited there for the "angels" to go out and bring in patients, the investigation disclosed.

Sheriff Byrne discovered a green fluid, he said, which was supposed to be highly efficacious in driving the "spirits" from patients.

AIDED BY GOVERNMENT.

NEW YORK, Aug. 23.—(Canadian Press).—A special despatch to the Herald and Tribune from its correspondent at Rapid City, South Dakota, says that with the co-operation of the Federal Department of Agriculture, machinery has been set in operation to band middle west farmers together in a gigantic wheat pool to attempt control of the winter wheat price situation, according to a plan laid before President Coolidge.

C.P.R' WILL RUN INTO MIDLAND

Agreement Reached With Railway Officials After Months of Negotiating.

HOLD CELEBRATION.

MIDLAND, Ont., August 23 (Canadian Press). — After months of negotiating with the C. P. R., Midland citizens were delighted yesterday afternoon to learn that an agreement had formally been reached for a line to be run into this town. The announcement was made by Mr. F. W. Grant at a special meeting of the Town Council. Connection will be made with the C.P.R. at Port McNicoll and the new branch will likely parallel the C.N.R.

Among the properties affected by the line is the Walker Biscuit Company's block, which was taken over by the town a few months ago. The C. P. R. has also purchased the 21 million bushel elevator which is nearing completion on the north shore of the harbour. This long-looked-for event was celebrated here last night by a huge parade and a public banquet to Messrs. Grant, Playfair, White and Pratt, who were solely responsible for the success of the negotiations. The proposition is being heartily supported by Mayor George R. Gooden and the Council. The Free Press issued an extra edition in celebration of the entrance of the C. P. R.

DAILY TIMES IN NEW DRESS

Port Hope Paper Broadens Territory and Publishes Larger Issue.

HAS NEW PRESS.

PORT HOPE, Aug. 23.—"The Daily Times," published in Port Hope, greets its readers in a new dress and stature. The new duplex press is just devouring a roll of paper and Peter Laurie Brown, the [illegible] editor, stands watching it, thinking of the one clinder contraption that printed the moribound sheet he resurrected.

The Daily Times as a local medium will serve the counties of Ontario, Durham, and Northumberland, including Oshawa, Port Hope, and Cobourg. Charles Adamson, for some time telegraph editor of the Mail and Empire, is news editor of the new paper. Russell Stuart, who worked for the London Advertiser and the Montreal Star is manager of the Oshawa office. Gordon C. Garbutt, a member of the old Times staff, is manager of the Cobourg office. Jack Nott of Oshawa, one of the executive of the O.B.A.A., will have charge of sports. The paper's first issue is sixteen pages but the standard run will be an eight page paper.

GREGG SHORTHAND WINS ONCE MORE

Championship Won By Writer of This System—Taught in Peterborough Business College.

Thousands of users and prospective students of shorthand found interest in the world's championship shorthand contest concluded recently and won by Dupraw who uses the Gregg system. Dupraw now holds the championship cup permanently.

This is the National Shorthand and Reporters' Association contest, held annually, and it is participated in by writers of all systems of shorthand. A significant feature of this yearly test of speed, combined with accuracy, is that writers of the Gregg system have won every contest since 1921, excepting only 1922, when the contest was won by a writer of Isaac Pitman shorthand.

In this connection, young people contemplating a business course are reminded that the Peterborough Business College, includes in its curriculum the teaching of Gregg shorthand. The slogan adopted for this modern method of recording verbatim speech or dictation for business or professional use is "easy to learn, easy to write, easy to read." And the peculiar appropriateness of this slogan is substantially exemplified by the fact that many unsuccessful students of Pitman shorthand have taken up and qualified in the Gregg system at the Peterborough Business College.

The majority of such graduates are holding responsible and remunerative positions, which speak highly for the efficiency of the teachers in this local business school, and the interest taken in its pupils by Principal J. A. McKone.

SCHMIDT MAY ESCAPE SENTENCE

Counsel Secures Hearing Before Court of Appeals on Wednesday.

REGINA, Sask., August 23 (Canadian Press). — Valentine Schmidt may yet escape the sentence of death passed upon him by Mr. Justice Bigelow last April for the murder of his wife. In the hope that the execution may be stayed as a result of the reprieve granted by the Trial Judge last week, placing the date on August 26th, counsel for Schmidt have secured a hearing before Court of Appeals which will sit specially on the case on Wednesday morning.

It will be the contention of counsel for the appellant that the reprieve was not within the Criminal Code, and that the failure to execute the sentence of the Court as ordered now makes it impossible to proceed. The argument will be that the authority for hanging Schmidt has now lapsed; that he could not be re-sentenced without re-trial, and that he could not be tried again, twice, for the same offence.

WINNIPEG WHEAT.

WINNIPEG, Man., August 23 (Canadian Press). — The bulge of 1⅞c recorded in the October option during the first hour was partly lost in the subsequent trading yesterday, when locals and others sold liberally, and the wheat market closed with gains of ⅝c to ¼c for the day. The initial upturn was due to unfavourable weather over the week-end in the West ,and strength in Liverpool.

Rainfall was fairly heavy at points on the Prairies. Trading on the whole was of an uninteresting character.

Rye featured trading in the coarse grains market. A good foreign demand boosted prices 3 cents. Barley was also in good export demand, and was up 1¼ cents. Flax and rye were dull.

There was little business in cash wheat despite a fair inquiry.

CONGRESS TO STOP LONG STUNT FLIGHTS

Acting Secretary of U. S. Navy Predicts Passing of Law.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 23.—(Canadian Press).—Prediction that Congress will enact a law to prohibit long distance aeroplane stunt flights, except under rigid conditions, was made by Admiral Eberle, acting secretary of the navy.

The navy will continue until Thursday its search in the Pacific Ocean for the lost San Francisco to Hawaii aviators, it was announced. Naval statisticians estimated that the search for the lost Pacific aviators will cost the navy ninety thousand dollars. This amount, chiefly for fuel, is above the normal operating expenses of the fleet of 42 vessels in the search. In addition, twenty million dollars worth of property in the form of ships and three thousands men have been tied up for eight days and Pacific manoeuvres have been interrupted.

JANNEY DISCUSSES PLANS WITH MAYOR

Hopes To Fly To England Next Month—Has Special Gas Tank.

OTTAWA, Aug. 23.—(Canadian Press).—Plans of Capt. E. J. Janney to fly from Ottawa to Croydon, England, and back again were discussed by the airman and Mayor Balharrie yesterday. The Mayor expressed confidence in the success of the trip. Capt. Janney returned to Ottawa over the week end from a visit to the United States where he states he arranged for the construction of a special plane for the flight.

"I expect to make the flight between the tenth and fifteenth of September", said the airman. "In my new plane there will be a specially constructed gasoline tank. In case of a mishap I can empty the tank in two minutes and the air space in the empty tank will more than support the weight of the plane. It would keep afloat till the waves demolished it.

COTTAGERS GIVE FINE PROGRAMME

Four Well Known Visitors To Upper Lake Entertain Fellow Residents.

CROWE'S LANDING, Aug. 23. — The summer colony of Upper Stoney Lake, their numbers augmented by quotas of down-the-lake visitors enjoyed an unusual treat in the pavilion here Thursday night when a most enjoyable programme was given by a quartette of well known sojourners at this delightful part of the Kawarthas. The artists were Mrs. Harriet Stark Brown, mezzo-soprano and Mr. Marvin Burr, baritone of Rochester, N.Y., Mr. Maynard England, pianist and accompanist of Cleveland, O., and Honourable Judge Robert S. Hudspeth of Princeton, N.J., who gave an address on "Early Days at Stoney Lake."

Mr. W. J. Peck of Toronto was chairman. The prettily decorated pavilion was crowded to the doors with an appreciative audience.

Mr. Burr, one of Rochester's best known vocalists is the possessor of a rich resonant baritone of wonderful range and he sings with a wealth of expression that made his every offering a delight. His first number the aria "Vision Fugitive" from Massenet's "Herodiade" was a fitting introduction and his varied group of four songs Wagner's "Evening Star", "The Wreck of the Julie Plante", and two old Irish numbers, "Kitty of Coleraine" and "A Ballynure Ballad", was delightfully presented.

Mrs. Brown, whose voice is of fine richness and exceptional power, scored a triumph in her aria "Ah Mon Fils" from Meyerbeer's "Le Prophete" and in a group of four numbers, the ever popular "Come to the Fair", 'The Star' by Rogers, Rachmaninoff's "To the Children, and "Charity" by Hagerman.

Mr. England not only filled his important post as accompanist with splendid effect but contributed three solo numbers that were among the high lights of the programme. Notable was his rendition of Rachmaninoff's Prelude in C Sharp Minor.

Most interesting were Judge Hudspeth's reminiscences of early days at Stoney Lake. The Judge is one of the senior members of the Upper Stoney Lake colony and although he has lived for many years in the United States he is a native of Ontario and his boyhood was spent in Lindsay. He was able therefore to tell of the canoe voyages from that town round to Stoney Lake half a century or more ago when the rapids at Buckhorn and Burleigh were run by the canoeists and when fish and game were unbelievably plentiful. Judge Hudspeth was outspoken in his admiration of Stoney Lake. He had seen the famous lakes of Europe, had travelled the far East and extensively in the United States but there was no district more favored in the matter of beautiful scenery than Stoney Lake, a sentiment that was enthusiastically applauded as was the Judge's reference to the most happy relations existing between American and Canadian sojourners at the lake.

GROANING THAT IS GLAD MUSIC.

Barns are beginning to bulge and groan with the bounty of Providence in this year's harvest.

The farmer's season of labor is still near its high peak, and there is much toil ahead of him before he can rest up. Threshing is getting under way, and there are late grains and roots to demand attention, with plowing silo filling and other tasks that mark off the gradual release of the farmer from his strenuous industry.

Between times, as the hazy days of autumn invite his relaxation, there will be visits to the agricultural exhibitions, beginning no doubt with Toronto's big fair, and other diversions that become all the more enjoyable with the music of groaning barns and words found on that new page of the bank book.

The louder the barns groan the louder may the farmers sing, although they are not given to roundelays under the expansive effect of big crops. The wiser and more experienced ones have learned the value of silence and a certain wariness against the wiles of smooth gentlemen, who offer for sale the Toronto's new Union Station or some other clever lure for the farmer's harvest money.

So if the farmers won't sing with the exhilaration of plenteous crops, let the barns groan. Swelling barns, all blown out and prosperous looking, are evidence of a fertile land. They maketh the heart glad, the public's heart not alone the farmer's.

MOTHERS OF AIRMEN.

Mrs. Evangeline Lindbergh seems to have set an example in behaviour for the mothers of airmen under the stress of their sons' hazardous flights.

At least we are to assume that these women experience the natural feelings of mothers when their sons are exposed to the dangers of long trans-oceanic flights.

Either that or they are so sublimely confident of their sons' abilities to come through safely that a sense of fear does not assail their faith and composure.

While her son was breaking a new trail across the Atlantic, Mrs. Lindbergh went about her duties as school teacher apparently as serene and unworried as if he were on board a ship. Thus the Spartan mother!

And a week ago Mrs. Emma Goebel at Los Angeles went on with her canning of preserves as methodically as if it were any other day when peaches were ripe and her son not racing through the air to Honolulu for the $25,000 prize which he won.

Lindbergh and Goebel are both veterans of aviation with thousands of hours in the air to their credit. Probably their mothers became accustomed long ago to their sons' risks and actually accept their flights as part of their work. Hence their confidence and their freedom from the anxiety one would ordinarily expect of mothers.

Such calm may be simply a spirit of resignation to whatever end fate decides, but it does seem extraordinarily unemotional, almost glacial. One might fancy that popular excitement, the stakes of fame and money, and the menace of the wide seas would disturb the routine and poise of even Spartan mothers.

PSYCHIATRY FOR CRIMINALS.

The Chicago police have adopted what they might call a new "racket" in their hostilities against the gunmen. They are enlisting the aid of psychiatry to determine the mentality of criminals, believing that underworld characters can hardly be normal.

The new psychological tests that are employed today in guaging a subject's mental age and mental efficiency would probably reveal in many law-abiding citizens a level much below the standard. The astounding results of the examination of the men called up in the draft for the United States army are not yet forgotten. An almost incredible number of men were found to have the mentality of mere children. Their minds had ceased to grow.

Psychopathic examination would have an effect of bewildering gangsters who, hoever familiar they might be with police third degree methods, would be at a loss to fathom the psychiatrist's purposes in his strange questions and problems. It might be interesting, too, to know the mental levels registered by the police themselves if they were put under the microscope of an experienced psychologist.

There is something almost comic in the idea of Chicago police rounding up criminals for appearance before psychiatrists, especially when so many of them have been able, by the help of political influence, to squirm through the police net that landed them from time to time in the criminal courts.

The first two men examined a few days ago were pronounced victims of dementia praecox. One of them, a beer runner, said: "I wouldn't go through that again for a million grand. If a guy wasn't as nutty as a fruitcake when they picked him up he would be when they finished with him. Why, they made me draw pictures. I may not be so good at that, but does that prove I can't draw conclusions as good as anybody?"

There are admittedly millions of morons in the United States. That is one reason why the moving picture programs are what they are, instead of realizing the hopes of educationists and the dreams of dramatists through the possibilities of the new art of the films.

The layman is inclined to wonder where the experts draw the psychopathic line between low mentalities that are harmless and those that are harmful to society.

LEARNING AND LIFE.

The criticism by a financial paper of Mr. MacKenzie King that the Premier has a weakness for Oxford men as his personal secretarial assistants rather than practical business men illustrates the belief of centuries that between the scholar and literary man and the hard-headed man of affairs is fixed a deep, almost impassable, gulf.

History abounds with instances which go to prove the unreasonableness of this belief. Sophocles was a Greek commander as well as a dramatic poet, Seneca was a statesman as well as a philosopher, Sir Phillip Sidney was a soldier and diplomat as well as a writer, and Raleigh's incursions into poetry and pose did not detract from his qualities as an admiral; yet the belief remains.

On the other hand, in no very remote times, we have had innumerable examples of college-trained men, fitted solely for the study, called upon to guide the ship of state in times that demanded coolness and decision rather than ability to read Homer in the original. The old-time university with its curriculum based on the lines of ancient culture often produced men who united a vast knowledge of literature with a consummate ignorance of men.

In the modern university, keeping abreast of the march of science, the atmosphere of the world of affairs is not so rigidly excluded. The ideal institute of learning is that much seeks to preserve the heritage of the ages of antiquity, while remaining ever on the alert to profit by the progress of modern days.

Such an institution was portrayed by Woodrow Wilson, himself a great classical scholar, and yet a master of men in the world of practicable ideals, in the eloquent peroration of his address at the Sesqui-Centennial celebration of his Alma Mater in October 21, 1896:

"I have had sight of the perfect place of learning in my thought: a free place and a various, where no man could be and not know with how great a destiny knowledge had come into the world—itself a little world; but not perplexed, living with a singleness of aim not known without; the home of sagacious men, hard-headed and with a will to know, debaters of the world's questions every day and used to the rough ways of democracy; and yet a place removed—calm Science seated there, recluse, ascetic, like a nun; not knowing that the world passes, not caring if the truth but come in answer to her prayer; and Literature, walking within her open doors, in quiet chambers, with men of olden time, storied walls about her, and calm voices infinitely sweet; here 'magic casements, opening on the foam of perilous seas in fairy lands forlorn,' to which you may withdraw and use your youth for pleasure; there windows open straight upon the street, where many stand and talk, intent upon the world of men and business. A place where ideals are kept in heart in an air they can breathe; but no fool's paradise. A place where to hear the truth about the past and hold debate about the affairs of the present, with knowledge and without passion; like the world in having all men's life at heart, a place for men and all that concerns them; but unlike the world in its self-possession, its thorough way of talk; its care to know more than the moment brings to light; slow to take excitement, its air pure and wholesome with a breath of faith; every eye within it bright in the clear day and quick to look toward heaven for the confirmation of its hope. Who shall show us the way to this place?"

THE CHANGED POST OFFICE.

It has remained for a little publication labelled "Postal Information, 1927," to bring home to us a full realization of the place which the post office now occupies in national life and of the valuable and varied services which it renders to the people of the Dominion, all of them at an outlay which is extremely moderate and reasonable. In days gone by, the province of the post office was simply to forward letters, newspapers, periodicals and other matter at rates which would prove staggering to users of the postal service today. Then came the inauguration of registration and the opening of the Post Office Savings Bank, followed by the adoption of regulations governing the issue of money orders and postal notes. And since then the usefulness of the post office as an essential national institution has been multiplied many times. The special delivery system, the parcel post, the insuring of letters and packages and the C.O.D. provisions are all comparatively recent developments which have increased the utility of the post office a hundred fold, and such is the efficiency with which it is directed that the dissatisfied user of its facilities is today a rarity. There are few national undertakings in Canada today which are administered with the same care or consideration for the public and few which render a greater service to the people of the Dominion.—The Brockville Recorder and Times.

RUSSIAN THREAT ON INDIA.

For the past ten weeks, since May 27, Russia has been an outcast in international circles, having been treated in a manner well merited by the treacherous conduct of her official representatives in the British Empire. Apart from the meager news of the mild discipline shown to Trotsky and Zinoviev, the world has heard ittle ofi Russia, hoping all the time the Government was preparing to seek reconciliation and plan a wiser policy.

That does not receive support in the reports which tell of Russian troops being mobilized in Turkestan with a view of striking at India. Whom the gods would destroy they first make mad, is an old proverb not lacking in proof of wisdom.

That the British War Office is not indifferent to the danger is proved by the extent of the plans to increase the defensive power of the army in India by adding to the strength of the forces. It is gratifying to know that the British army is well equipped with the most modern and powerful munitions and should be able to more than defend the Indian Empire on land and in the air.

Wholly defeated in the very troublesome plans for a "world revolution," Russian leaders are sorely troubled to find an explanation of their failures at home and abroad. The economic shortage and contrast in general conditions with those of the Czar's regime are sure to be disturbing to minds distressed by daily needs, and which naturally turn back to the "good old times."

It is all right to claim Russia could not finance a big foreign war which would involve purchase of costly munitions and high transportation charges. But a campaign undertaken against India would be planned to require no outlay beyond what would be available by requisition on the populace. That the campaign could not last long is certain, but that it could have no disturbing effect outside Russia is not so certain. In the event of war Poland and Rumania would be strategical areas from which attacks could be made which would threaten the existence of the Russian state.—Hamilton Spectator.

CHICAGO GRAIN

CHICAGO, Aug. 23 (Canadian Press).—Wheat encountered realizing sales in the late trading on the Board of Trade and much of the early gain was lost. Initial firmness was due to higher Liverpool quotations and unfavorable weather advices from the northwest. At the finish wheat showed a net gain of ½ to ¾ cents; corn advanced 1 to 1⅝ cent; oats were ⅛ to ⅜c off, and provisions unchanged to 15c up.

Corn was firmer on continued cool weather and official and private reports showing slow progress toward maturity. South Dakota's weekly report indicated 60 per cent of the crop needed six weeks to mature, while a private crop expert, after a trip over fifteen Illinois counties, estimated 56 per cent would mature in 50 to 60 days, and the outcome of the balance was in doubt. There was a good class of buying on all setbacks.

Oats were unsettled, with the market running into selling orders on all upturns.

Provisions were firmer with hogs.

MONTREAL GRAIN AND PRODUCE

MONTREAL, Aug. 23 (Canadian Press).—The foreign demand for American hard wheat continued good on the Montreal grain market yesterday, and a moderate amount of business was worked.

The domestic demand for oats and corn was fair and values were steady, a fair trade was done in all lines of millfeed and the undertone was firm. The trade in standard grades of rolled oats was inactive but steady.

The flour market was without any new feature to note, prices for Spring and Winter wheat grades being well maintained under a quiet demand.

The undertone to the butter market was firmer and prices were advanced a fraction. The trade was fair. The receipts were 1,567 packages.

The cheese trade was extremely dull and prices were about steady. The receipts were 4,812 boxes.

The egg market was quiet and prices were irregular. Fresh extras were quoted at 45 cents per dozen. The receipts were 1,106 cases.

VOICE OF PEOPLE

Letters to be printed in the Voice of the People column must be received at The Examiner office on the day before it is desired to have them published.

MAKING HIGHWAYS SAFE.

To the Editor of The Examiner:

The letter of Sir Thomas White and others on the subject of safety on the highways indicate a worthy and widespread inteerst. Some of the writers have commented on the lack of definite suggestion for the abatement of highway accidents other than suggestion of a lower speed limit. This lack is not surprising to those who have given study to the subject. Experience shows that no laws or set of rules alone will make highways safe. The elements of safety come under at least four heads:

The condition of the road, both as to traffic and surface.

The condition of the machine.

The ability to drive and the common sense of drivers.

The common sense of pedestrians.

Speed is only a relative matter. Safe speeds vary with the different conditions under the four heads above. The maximum speed law of Ontario does not permit 35 miles an hour on highways under certain conditions. It is specific in its limitation to such speed as may be safe at points where danger may arise.

The control of traffic on the highways is a new phase of law and order. Our laws and regulations have been revised constantly to take care of new conditions as they arise, and there has been a fearless and consitent administration of them. In a physical way right angles of roads have been rounded, curves have been banked, and wire netting or cables take the place of the dangerous wooden rail on embankments. Traffic experts from other Provinces and countries think we have the best system of traffic caution signs to be found anywhere.

Realizing that the safety of the highways is largely in the hands of the drivers themselves, the department has published millions of advertisements giving information and advice on the subject and soliciting the co-operation of those who use the roads.

The record of highway accidents in Ontario does not reveal any carnival of killing, as some writers would have us believe. The methods of the Highways Department, with the increased "traffic consciousness" which has been developed among drivers, has kept the record on a descending rather than an ascending scale. I regret that figures are complete only to the end of 1926. Possibly a development of highways administration should be the establishment of a record of accidents, as in some adjacent States.

The report for 1926 of the Ontario Safety League shows the fatalities per thousand of automobile vehicles to have been as follows: 1913, 6.0; 1923, 0.9; 1926, 0.5. In 1913 it was twelve times as high as last year. As a matter of fact, a student of such statistics tells me that Ontario has the lowest frequency of automotive accidents of any Province or State on the continent.

Every one regrets that accidents, fatal and otherwise, continue on the highways, but the record in Ontario does not seem to warrant an outcry against the new speed limit or drastic change in the administration of the law. Much would be accomplished by publicity constantly given by those in a position to do so of the necessity for watchfulness on the part of drivers and avoidance of carelessness of all forms at all times.

A Thought For To-day

Each day we are weaving threads in the tapestry of life and how beautiful is the pattern when we use little unmentioned deeds of kindness and little acts of self-denial in a service for our friends.

Occasionally we pick up a wrong thread and weave it in, and how this thread stands out to mar the wonderful work we have already done!

Indifferent to Verdict

CHARLESTOWN STATE PRISON, BOSTON, Mass., Aug 23 (Canadian Press).—Warden Henry notified Sacco, Vanzetti and Madeiros that it was his "painful duty" to inform them that they must die last night.

Vanzetti was the only one of the three to make any response.

"We must bow to the inevitable," he said, as he paced up and down his cell.

Madeiros was asleep, and when the warden awakened him, he appeared indifferent to the notification.

Sacco was writing a letter to his father in Italy. He begged the warden to mail it for him, and Hendry promised that he would.

The warden was accompanied by Chaplain Murphy, who again offered the prisoners the consolation of the church. Again they refused.

Warden and chaplain returned to the warden's office as the nine o'clock "lights out" bell was sounded.

Trip Through Sewer Fails To Harm Boy

NEW YORK, Aug. 23.—(Canadian Press).—Swept more than a half mile by the swirling underground waters of New York's sewers and finally washed into the East River, seven-year-old Anthony Agostino yesterday was little worse for his experience. He fell into a sewer manhole while playing with companions. Police raised manhole covers along the route of sewer, but Tony had just passed in each case. Finally he arrived at the East River, where a reception committee of police had been waiting for him. He was hauled into a boat.

"It was terribly cold in there," he said as he was being rushed to a hospital.

Mine Trade Slackens; Dome's Rise Is Feature

TORONTO, Aug. 23 (Canadian Press).—With the late leaders receding somewhat, trading slackened off from yesterday's record volume, although this morning's trade was well over the million shares on the Standard Mining Exchange. A sharp climb by Dome Mines of $1.60 at 8.75 featured the whole session. McDougall, the unlisted leader, climbed 6½ at 67½, and Central Manitoba firmed two at 2.00. Laval Quebec, still the most active stock on the board, lost two at 47. Amulet also eased two at 498 and Area softened six at 73. Nipissing eased seven at 560.

Wheat Firm At Start But Recedes During Day

CHICAGO, Aug. 23 (Canadian Press).—Wet weather and light frost at several points in Canada gave wheat a firm undertone at the start today. Weakness at Winnipeg, however, was quickly reflected in the market here and values declined gradually. Opening ¼ cent to ⅜ cent higher, wheat lated receded to below yesterday's finish. Commission houses bought September and December corn at the start on unfavorable weather, the market opening ⅛ to ⅜c up and subsequently suffering a slight set-back. Oats sympathized with wheat and corn. Provisions were easy.

Mixed Price Movement In New York Market

NEW YORK, Aug. 23 (Canadian Press). — Mixed price movements came into the stock market for a while today following the early resumption of the upward trend, in which about thirty stocks, including some of the dividend paying railroads, reached their best prices of the year. For a time various stocks in different groups advanced and declined simultaneously until the weight of heavy offerings in the oil section ultimately bore down on the balance of the last. The selling of oils was attributed to fear that the 10 per cent. in Pennsylvania would spread to other fields and to liquidation of Pan-American on misgiving over the retention of the current six per cent. dividend rate. Pan American "B" went down 4⅝ points and losses of 2 to 2½ were sustained by Houston Oil, Atlantic Refining, and General Asphalt.

Higher Class Stocks Make Good Gains

TORONTO, Ont., August 23 (Canadian Press). — The continued quest for investment issues resulted in further gains by the better class stocks on the Toronto Stock Exchange today. The unlisted oil and liquor leaders, however, all lost slightly. Smelters advanced two points at 236 and Pacific Grain a point at 25¼. Brazilian gained a point and three-eighths at 175¼. British-American Oil, the active leader of the whole session, finished a quarter lower at 26¾, and Imperial down a half at 49¼. Carlings was the weakest of the liquor stocks, losing 1¼ at 38½. Walker's eased a quarter at 49¾ and Gooderham & Worts a half at 50. Dome Mines jumped sharply to 8.75, while Commerce, the bank leader, gained 1½at 275.

VISITOR CROSSED BRIDGE TOO FAST

Pays Fine For Exceeding 10-Mile Limit on Floating Bridge.

For exceeding the speed limit of 10 miles per hour in crossing Chemong Lake over the floating bridge between Smith and Ennismore townships, on Thursday, August 18th, a visitor from Detroit paid a fine of $5 and costs in the police court this morning, Magistrate O. A. Langley occupying the bench.

Accused pleading guilty, stated that he saw the notice at the entrance to the bridge, but did not realize that he was travelling at an excessive speed. In answer to a question from His Worship, County Constable Samuel Pearson estimated the rate at about 20 miles an hour. The car was of light construction.

To-day's case was the second in which a prosecution followed failure to obey the speed limit fixed by the notices on both ends of the Chemong bridge Yesterday a fine was imposed on an Ennismore man for a similar offence.

BODIES TO BE TAKEN ON TOUR

"sheer provocation" in view of the Sacco-Vanzetti case.

"Walker," the paper says, "represents the murderous American Bourgeoisie, no matter whether he belongs or does not belong directly to the clique who butchered Sacco and Vanzetti.

"Berlin workers will greet Walker as they greet all members of the ruling classes of America: 'To the devil with you'."

A veritable cloudburst of epithets addressed to the United States generally and to Governor Fuller and Judge Thayer personally, to-day broke in a section of the Liberal and Radical Berlin newspapers over the executions.

"The civilized veener has been stripped from the State of Massachusetts" and "Inhuman American capitalism ruthlessly violates elementary justice," are sentences taken at random from Vorwaerts.

DISTRUSTED BANKS, FAMILY IS ROBBED

Nebraska People Lose From Fifteen To Thirty Thousand Dollars.

HUMBOLDT, Neb., Aug. 23. — Because her husband asked her on his deathbed 20 years ago to promise him she would keep her money hidden about the house and not store it in banks, Mrs. Frank Kunhart, 85-year-old grandmother, and her family here, are minus somewhere between $15,000 and $30,000 to-day.

The grandmothers' son, Joseph, nearly 50, with his family, live with the elderly woman. Late on Saturday night two masked robbers held up the family and ransacked the house and outbuildings, escaping with five tin boxes which contained currency, Liberty bonds, deeds to their present farm and various other valuable papers.

The cache amounted to almost the life savings of the entire Kunhart household, which they have been saving for over 30 years.

Out of the savings of two generations, which a week ago would have come close to $50,000, less than half of it now remains. Joseph said that luckily he had a deposit in the bank of a little over $10,000; the deed of his 160 acre farm, which is clear and one of the best in Nebraska, and a note for $3000, which is due soon.

This he said, was all that is left of his own savings and that of the estate of his father.

REV. T. J. CROWLEY'S JUBILEE IN ORDERS BEING CELEBRATED

Former Peterborough Boy Is Now Pastor of Church at Sault.

HAS HAD MANY CHARGES.

Went To Sault in 1920 From Sudbury—Popular With All Classes.

Rev. T. J. Crowley, pastor of the Sacred Heart Church, this city, for the past seven years, who on September 13 and 14 will celebrate the silver jubilee of his ordination to the Catholic priesthood, paid his first visit to the Sault in 1900, when, as a seminary student, he accompanied Bishop R. A. O'Connor, of Peterboro, on a confirmation tour, visiting at the Sault and Michipicoten. Two years later, on December 21, 1902, Bishop O'Connor ordained the young student and he was sent to North Bay, which was then in the Peterboro diocese.

It was while Father Crowley was there, that the diocese of Sault Ste. Marie was formed, with North Bay as the home of the Bishop. The first Bishop of the new diocese was consecrated in February, 1905, in the person of Rt. Rev. D. J. Scollard, the present head of this diocese. Father Crowley was in North Bay for Bishop Scollard's consecration and later in the year was sent by him to the mission fields of Sturgeon Falls and Cache Bay. He built the church at Cache Bay, and both missions are now flourishing parishes.

The year 1906 was a most eventful one for the young priest, as it was during this year he was sent to his first parish, which was at Warren. He had charge of Markstay Mission as well. He remained at Warren for six years, and in 1912 was transferred to Copper Cliff Mission and Creighton Mine. The present Creighton Mine Church was built during Father Crowley's pastorate. In 1917 he was moved from Copper Cliff to Sudbury, where he organized and started the first English-speaking parish.

An active member of the Knights of Columbus, Father Crowley was chosen Grand Knight of the Sudbury Council in 1916 and held that office for two years. This was not the first office he had held in the Knights as he was appointed State Chaplain in 1904. In 1920 Father Crowley came to the Sault to take charge of the Sacred Heart Parish. As in all the other parishes in which he discharged his priestly duties, Father Crowley has made many firm friends in the Sault, not only among his own people, but also among those outside his parish. Like the Good Shepherd, in whose footsteps he is trying to follow, he lives for his flock —their interests are his interests, and he has their welfare at heart, first, last and always.

He takes an active part in the work of the community and is keenly interested in all sports. An enthusiastic angler, he is president of the Fish and Game Association, and he has already proven that he is a wizard with the besom and stane, having carried off several curling club trophies and last year capturing the O'Brien Cup. He is chaplain of the curling club and also of the Knights of Columbus. Along with his other duties, Father Crowley takes an active part in the work of the Humane Society, of which society he is vice-president. He is also a member of the lawn bowling club.

During his charge here, Father Crowley has had the interior of the church remodelled and re-decorated, doing the designing himself. A marble altar has been erected and was consecrated on February 7 by Bishop D. J. Scollard. The church now ranks high with some of the most beautiful ones on the continent and the parish has had several requests from outside sources for the designs of the new interior.

The handsome statue on the church grounds, a fitting memorial to the heroic missionaries who first visited the Sault about 1641, was erected there largely through the instrumentality of Father Crowley, assisted by Father Monaghan, formerly pastor of the Blessed Sacrament Church, this city, now of Fort William.

The statue was unveiled on August 5, 1923, during Discovery Week, and a great number of citizens were present at the ceremony, as well as several prominent clergy, among whom were Rt. Rev. Bishop M. J. O'Brien of Peterborough, Bishop D. J. Scollard of North Bay, and Rev. Fathers Bornival, S.J., of St. Boniface, Man., and F. Nickolas Roche of Toronto.

Father Crowley has been responsible, in a large measure, for several other improvements, beneficial to the parish. He is dearly beloved by every member of his congregation, and it is the earnest and sincere wish of all that not only will he celebrate his silver jubilee in Sault Ste. Marie, but his golden jubilee and many others.

While Father Crowley was ordained in December, his friends felt that the weather would be more favorable in September, and, as they want to make this occasion one long to be remembered, wish to hold it under the most auspicious circumstances. Preparations for the celebration are going on apace, and the energetic committee, under the capable leadership of Rev. Father Weaver, are sparing no efforts to make it one grand success.

Among the guests will be several prominent clergy and laymen from this and neighboring dioceses.

WEDDING BELLS.

BOUNDY—WILLIAMS.

HAVELOCK, August 23. — At St. John's Anglican church the marriage took place on Wednesday afternoon of Beatrice Jennette Williams eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Williams, to Mr. John Elbert Sifton Boundy, of Toronto, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. John Boundy of Port Hope.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. M. G. B. Williams of Horning's Mills, brother of the bride, assisted by Rev. Dr. Cotton of St. Aiden's church, Toronto.

The church was beautifully decorated, the chancel being banked with cosmos, marigolds, gladioli and ferns. While Miss Jean Anderson, the organist, played the wedding march, the bride entered the church on the arm of her father, who gave her in marriage.

The service was choral, and included "The Voice that Breathed Oer Eden," by the congregation.

A lovely gown of white georgette over white silk crepe de chine, trimmed with brilliants and crystals, was worn by the bride. The folds of the long gracefully arranged veil were arranged on the head in cap style, with orange blossoms. She carried a shower bouquet of ophelia roses, gypsophila and lily of the valley.

The bridesmaid, Miss Lenna Barlow of Toronto, cousin of the bride, wore an orchid georgette gown trimmed with lace, and picture hat to match. Her bouquet was sunset roses and gypsophila.

Mrs. W. M. Wilkie of Guelph, sister of the bride, was the matron of honor, and was attired in old rose, and salmon georgette, with French embroidery, and picture hat to match. She carried sweeheart roses and gypophalia.

Miss Marjorie Barlow of Trenton, cousin of the bride, daintily attired in peach georgette, and Master Jack Bush, were charming little flower attendants, carrying basket of flowers.

Mr. Howard Walker of Toronto, was best man.

The ushers were Mr. William Wilkie of Guelph, and Mr. H. Buck of town.

Following the ceremony a reception was held in the Armstrong House, where the wedding luncheon was served. Mrs. Williams, mother of the bride, received in a gown of cinnamon satin faced crepe trimmed with sand and hat to match, and Isabella fur, and wore a corsage bouquet of sunset roses.

Mrs. W. Williamson of Calgary, sister of the groom, wore poudre blue embroidered georgette costume with hat to match, and ermine neckpiece.

The bride and groom left by motor for a honeymoon trip to Port Carling, the bride travelling in a rust georgette dress and rust gaberdine coat, with hat to match. She wore the gift of the groom a brown fox fur. On their return they will reside in Toronto

Mr. and Mrs. Boundy were the recipients of many beautiful and costly gifts as well as several substantial cheques sums of money and bonds. They also received several telegrams of congratulations from friends.

It was very much regretted that the groom's mother was unable to attend on account of illness.

The out of town guests included:—Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Wilkie of Guelph; Rev and Mrs. M. G. B Williams, of Horning's Mills; Mr and Mrs. W. Williamson of Calgary, Alta.; Mr. and Mrs. H. Boundy, and Mr. J. Boundy of Port Hope; Mr. and Mrs. H. Glover, Mr. and Mrs. S. Cross, of Toronto; Mrs. Gordon Ames of Harrowsmith; Mrs. G. Barlow and daughter, Marjorie and Miss Marjorie Crowe of Trenton.

GIVE UP HOPE FOR AVIATORS

Week Has Elapsed Since Planes Took Off From Oakland.

NO TRACE FOUND.

HONOLULU, August 23 (United Press). — Hope of the eventual finding of Miss Mildred Doran and the six other missing aviators who were forced down on their Mainland to Honolulu Dole race was virtually abandoned to-day.

It was just one week ago to-day that the pretty 22-year-old Michigan school teacher took off from Oakland airport.

Since then one of the most thorough searches in the history of the Navy has failed to reveal even the slightest indication of the whereabouts of the lost planes. Not even a splotch of oil on the waters of the Pacific, indicating where they might possibly have gone down, has been found.

EXPERTS PLAN TO REGULATE LONG FLIGHTS

Navy Airman Who Inspected Planes Favors Full-Load Tests.

NO LAND PLANES.

U. S. Official Is Opposed in Principle To Races Over Oceans.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 23 (Canadian Press).—While the search for the lost fliers in the Dole race from Golden Gate to Honolulu continued with unflagging zeal, though dying hope, efforts to derive profits from the flight's lessons were underway today, just one week after the start of the 2,400 mile marathon.

As forty naval vessels and a fleet of observation planes fruitlessly searched the greedy Pacific's waves for the six men and a girl who made up the crews of the Golden Eagle, the Miss Doran, and the Dallas Spirit, Lieut. B. Wyatt, of the Navy Air Corps, who inspected the planes and compasses for the flight committee, declared that two indisputable lessons had been learned from the flight's disasters.

First: All planes to undertake extended over-water flights, should have a thoroughly adequate test under full load.

Second: Land planes should be prohibited from making extended over-water flights.

Would Regulate Flights

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 23, (United Press).—Assistant Secretary of Commerce William P. McCracken, Junior, the Government's Supervisor over commercial aviation, personally opposes, in general principle, prize flights across the ocean, he told the United Press today.

But if another flight to Hawaii, similar to the Dole "Derby" were organized tomorrow, he would not try to stop it. He would merely regulate it.

LAUGHS AT LAW.

Leon Daudet, French royalist leader, is still enjoying the liberty he regained when he got out of jail through a telephone hoax that set all Paris laughing. It is likely that he will continue to defy the French police and government as long as he desires to remain an exile.

32-Pound Trout From Lake Ontario

PORT CREDIT, Ont., August 23. — Claimed to be the largest fish ever caught in Lake Ontario by the Port Credit fishermen, a lake trout, weighing 32 pounds, was brought in yesterday morning by Fisherman Orley Joyce. The trout was caught out in the lake five miles from shore, and was brought in with a catch totalling 700 pounds.

The length of this monster trout is 48 inches, with girth 26 inches, and it is thought its age is 25 years. The price of trout, which is in the neighbourhood of 22 cents a pound, will net the fisherman $7.00 for the lone fish.

After being examined by the group of biologists who are carrying on experiment work at Port Credit this summer, the fish will be shipped to Toronto.

OLD COUNTRY TRAINS WOMEN

Sees Danger of Encouraging Emigration of Men Only.

NEW SCHEMES

LONDON, Aug. 23 (Canadian Press). —With so many schemes for settlement of boys and young men in the dominions; now about women settlers? There is obvious danger in a lopsided development of migration, and, now that schemes for settling boys in their teens on the land have come to take rank as the most promising of all, that danger is more real than ever.

The leading organization in training for overseas life, and one which is doing invaluable work in this regard, is the Society for Overseas Settlement of British Women. But an encouraging feature is the establishment by the Lancashire county council of a scheme for training girls as settlers. This is an experiment marked by thoroughness and consequent expense, providing for a year's training for each girl. It is being urged that less financially-strong organizations might provide two or three months' training.

The obvious difficulty in migration of women as against male settlers, is that the inducements for women are less than those extended to their brothers. At present the Dominions declare they need "household workers," and the prospect of going half across the world to wield a scrubbing brush is not so entrancing.

It is the aim now to train English girls not for domestic life in the dominions but for country life, as the wives of farmers. Town girls cannot easily learn the things that separate the country household from the town one, and where the woman has been given no chance to acquaint herself with conditions on training farms, she will gravitate naturally to the overseas town.

Concerning the strict qualifications requested by Dominion officials in connection with women migrants, the Times says: "We can understand what seems at times the over-exacting attitude of Dominion officials when we remember that they are taking to their country the future mothers of their people. The S.O.S.B.W. has for many years now worked to correct wrong impressions, whether over-sanguine or over-pessimistic. Its primary preoccupation is with those who need assistance to settle; but women who can pay their way are not less in need of accurate information and friendly services."

To-day, when the overwhelming majority of schemes financed under the Empire Settlement Act have no place for the married man, the Society is chiefly concerned with women going out on their own account. Much of its work is exceedingly unspectacular. It is as important to prevent unsuitable women from going as it is to make it easy for suitable ones to go. A number of practises are in existence to-day to test this suitability. Girls can be examined free in the different sorts of work which will be expected of them. A beginning has been made—by the Australian Government at Market Harborough, as well as by the Lancashire County Council on their own initiative—in providing training of the right kind. Such training aims at laying the foundations at least of competence in the wide range of activities that marks the happy wife of the farmer.

FIVE DROWNED ON VACATIONS

Two Lose Lives at Bancroft, Two at Lansdowne, and One at Hamilton.

ONE BODY NOT FOUND.

BELLEVILLE, Ont., Aug. 23. — Margaret Siddon, aged 17, and Allan Neal, aged 20, both of Wood Post Office, were on Sunday afternoon drowned in Paudash Lake, near Bancroft village in the northern part of Hastings county. The young couple were in a motor boat and were but a short distance from Johnson's Island when the boat took fire.

On the outbreak of the fire they called frantically for help and Mrs. Johnson on the island heard their call and got out a motor boat to go to their assistance. Before she could get out to them they had jumped into the water and had gone down.

Miss Siddon's body was recovered within ten minutes and artificial methods of respiration were practiced without avail. Dr. Alexander who was called, pronounced death as due to drowning. No inquest will be held. The young man's body was found about an hour later.

Fatality near Lansdowne.

KINGSTON, Ont., Aug. 23. — A double drowning occurred at Ivy Lea near Lansdowne, yesterday morning, when Miss Marian Bauman and John Burns, both of a party from Rochester, N.Y., which arrived on Sunday, to spend a holiday lost their lives in the treacherous waters at Swift Water Point.

Miss Marian Bauman, with her sister, Miss Edna Bauman, went for a swim. They entered the stream at Swift Water Point and soon became frightened at the force of the water. The young women screamed for help and John Burns and another young man in the party went to the rescue.

One young man succeeded in getting Miss Edna Bauman to safety but John Burns and Miss Marian Bauman were carried under by the swift current despite the frantic efforts of their campanions. John Burns' body was found but life was extinct. Miss Bauman's body, near the shore, was recovered without difficulty.

HAMILTON, Ont., August 23. — Seized with cramps while swimming off Winona Beach yesterday afternoon, Charles Smith, aged 22, of 85 Kensington Avenue North, Hamilton, was drowned, while a companion made fruitless efforts to save him. The body has not been recovered.

Smith was camping on the shore of the lake with Alfred Nelson, 140 Sanford Avenue North, Hamilton, and Gordon Bell, who lives at the Smith home. While Smith swam this afternoon, Nelson rowed a boat near by. Suddenly the latter heard his friend cry for help and sink beneath the surface. He threw an inflated inner tube to the drowning man, but apparently Smith did not have the strength to grasp it. Smith rose to the surface twice gain, and then, despite Nelson's efforts, sank for the last time.

Vain attempts toward recovery of the body were made yesterday, and were resumed to-day.

ACHES FROM HIGH NOTE.

LONDON, Aug. 20.—A woman violinist here suffers a severe toothache whenever she plays certain high notes. Dentists have found the tooth to be perfectly sound and it never gives the woman any trouble except when she plays her violin.

Demand for Renzyme Steadily Increases

Users of this new stomach treatment enthusiastically recommend it to others.

Even though Renzyme is a drugless product and entirely different to the usual medicines found in a drug store, druggists are very enthusiastic in regard to it.

They recognise in it a natural treatment which cannot fail to afford relief and have found that their customers do not use it long before becoming absolutely convinced of its merits.

Mr. E. M. Crosthwaite, Druggist, St. Mary's, Ont., writes: "The sale of Renzyme has been remarkable and no stomach medicine has been put across the counter with so little argument. Our experience has been once a customer tries it he will accept nothing else, as it seems to do the work.

"One of the most favourable points in selling it is the idea of no drugs which the public seems to take to. Our sales are gradually increasing and it has been gratifying to see it go across with so very little effort."

You can obtain Renzyme from your druggist at $1.50 a bottle or it will be sent to you, postpaid, on receipt of price, if you mention this paper. The Renzyme Laboratories, Toronto, 2, Canada.

The Stars Incline, but do not Compel.

(Copyright, 1927, McClure Syndicate)
WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 24, 1927

Friendly stars guide until late today, according to astrology, which finds most of the aspects strongly benefic.

Under this planetary government it is wise to make all possible preparations for liivng quarters for the autumn.

There is an especially promising sign for those who would sell old houses and buy new ones.

This is read as an auspicious day for removals and for changes of any sort.

It is a fairly lucky day for seeking employment or for obtaining recognition for faithful service.

Promoters should make the most of opportunities while this configuration prevails; international enterprises subject to the best influences.

All the stars appear to favor inventions, especially those affecting aerial achievements affect commerce.

Much intellectual activity is indicated under this rule and educators should benefit greatly.

It was foretold that many teachers of the occult would come to the United States and again the seers prophesy new religious movements.

Occultism is under a planetary influence that seems to presage amazing experiments and surprising results most favorable for astrologers.

High winds will begin early in the autumn and many hurricanes may be expected, according to the seers.

Persons whose birthdate it is have the augury of unusual success in the coming year.

Children born on this day probably will be fortunate all through life. Many born under this sign attain high government positions.

FASHION NOTES.

By HEDDA HOYT

(United Press Fashion Editor)

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—(United Press).—Horizontal stripes in sweaters and blouses are being replaced by vertical stripes of broken geometrical patterns. Horizontal stripes were found to accentuate the breadth of the body, thus the vogue for the vertical lines.

Velveteen coats have played a prominent part in the fashionable sports world this season. Blues, reds, violets, yellows and tans have until now been deemed the smartest velveteen coat shades for wear over summer sports drsses. Arrivals from Paris this week are introducing coats of taupe gray velveteen in which they say are the latest thing in Paris. Some of these models are trimmed with collars of taupe gray fox which adds to their attractiveness.

While the fox furpiece is the summer favorite with the cloth or silk costume, feather boas are chosen where the gown is of lace or is lace-trimmed. The boa matches exactly the color of the gown in most instances. Many smart chiffon evening capes are harmonizing boas. One especially attractive double cape has a layer of grayish green chiffon and the accompanying feather boa is two-toned, green and gray.

One of the most interesting two-tone dinner gowns presented on Fifth Avenue is a deep pink chiffon trimmed with a pleated flounce of dark brownlace. Several gowns using the pink and brown combinations are shown, each of which are most attractive.

Satins and transparent velvets give promise of being the favored dress materials for fall. Crushed velvet processed so as not to be damaged by pressing or steaming, is expected to be important for both gowns and millinery. Transparent silk velts will be more promising, however, than printed or crushed effects.

Bows, either of the dress fabric or of velvet, continue to be the leading trimming items of the summer. Not only is the bow worn on the shoulder, but upon the hip, at the rear neckline or three bows may be worn

SAINT and SINNER

By ANNE AUSTIN

Cherry was on her knees instantly, her arms flung about Faith's waist, her frightened little face raised pleadingly. "Don't, Faith, darling! Don't be so frightened! I haven't done any wrong. I swear I haven't! If Chris was really spying on me, he saw nothing that could be used in court against me. I swear it, Faith! Glenn kissed me—yes, but they can't say I'm not a fit mother for my baby just because I let a man kiss me. Don't cry so, Faith, dearest!" she begged, tears streaming down her own cheeks.

"He'll lie, Faith answered dully. "He'll swear he saw more than—just a kiss. Oh, Cherry, Cherry! Why couldn't you be careful?

"I suppose," Cherry confessed humbly, her defiance conquered for once, "that it's because I'm me, Faith. I can't be good and discreet, like you. And, oh, Faith, these last terrible, long months have been dreadful for me. You haven't realized, snug in Bob's love as you are"—

"Maybe I've realized more than you knew I did," Faith answered tremulously, her love for her sister rushing up in a hot flood. "Poor darling! If you've once known love, it's terribly hard to do without. I know that—now. But what's to be done, honey? What are your plans?"

Cherry sank back on her heels, her hands falling listlessly to her sides. "The divorce trial is set for next week," she admitted. "Churchill told me today. My case will be heard before Chris, thank God. If I win—and I will win, Faith! I've got to!—Chris' suit will be thrown out of court, I suppose. Churchill has a lot of evidence against Chris. You remember Lola Gonzales? Chris has been keeping her in a little flat over on West Tenth. He stays there with her about half the time. And Churchill is prepared to use that evidence if we fail to win on the grounds of mental cruelty."

"Mental cruelty?" Faith asked wonderingly. "Mental cruelty—when you lived with Chris only one night?"

Cherry's small face hardened. "When I tell the judge what Chris said and did that night, I'll get my divorce on mental cruelty all right, if the judge has an atom of manhood in him."

A knock on the door interrupted them. Faith rose from the bed, and called out with forced cheerfulness: "Just a minute, dear. There's some ginger ale in the ice box and a plate of sandwiches. You'd better eat something before you go to bed."

"Grand idea!" Bob sang out blithely, and the two girls listened as his steps turned toward the kitchen.

"Don't tell Bob—about Glenn and me," Cherry begged in a whisper, her hands fluttering to Faith's shoulders.

"Are you going to marry Glenn Andrews if you get your divorce?" Faith asked abruptly.

Cherry averted her face, but Faith could see a flush spreading from her neck to her cheeks. "I—don't know, Faith. I don't know whether I want to or not, and besides—he hasn't asked me."

"But he's told you that he loves you?" Faith asked.

The bright head went suddenly to Faith's shoulder. "He says he's mad about me—but he hasn't said anything about—marriage," Cherry confessed in a muffled voice. "I don't know whether he's just waiting until I'm free, or whether he thinks—what I've been through—makes marriage unnecessary. Oh, Faith, so many men have asked me to marry them! I never dreamed that some day I'd agonize over just one man's failure to say the words! I've sunk pretty low, haven't I?" she sobbed.

Faith's arms strained her sister to her breast. "And yet you don't love him, honey," she tried to put a word of comfort into her voice. "Isn't it that you just want to prove your power? Would staying single a while be so terrible, darling?"

"It would be for me—under the circumstances," Cherry replied cryptically.

WEINER ROAST ON LAKE SHORE

Young People of Gilmour Memorial Church Have Good Time.

BAD COLLISION.

At an eminently suitable spot on Chemong shore, near the boathouse of E. G. Hiland, the Young People's Society of Gilmour Memorial Church held its annual weiner roast last night in splendid weather.

The time-honored and exceedingly essential rite of kindling the fire was delayed for some time through the lack of an axe to chop the plentiful supply of wood brought by members of the party, but the handicap was overcome by a combination of strength and skill on the part of Gordon McGregor, who proved himself an adept at splitting wood with no other aid than that of a tiny penknife.

The weiners were fried and disposed of around a cheery fire. While the elder and wiser members of the party sat in quiet conversation, the younger and more boisterous element indulged in a series of lively games.

The only casualty of the evening was a minor one; the two heaviest male members of the group colliding violently in a furious gallop round the ring in the "Flying Dutchman." Both victims, it is believed, saw more stars than were ever created in the universe.

With the fires dying down the party broke up after eleven o'clock, concluding a very successful gathering.

DRESS

By MARY MARSHALL

Long-sleeved bathing costume, buttoned in the back, as worn by Mrs. Markoe Robertson, the former Cordelia Biddle. The dress is of printed silk with jade green pipings and the cap of green silk. The large sport ring with jade green stone set in gold is part of the bathing ensemble.

There are cross-currents at work in the fashion of women's bathing costumes, and two distinct types of bathing suits to be found on the shore at fashionable resorts this summer.

On the one hand there are the bathers who wear as little as possible—usually with a fine unconcern which goes to show that modesty in dress is very much a matter of usage and custom. On the other hand, there are the bathers who breast the breakers in suits that are long sleeved and high necked.

Don't imagine that these new, more adequate bathing costumes represent any sort of protest against the immodesty of extremely brief surf costumes. If there is any protest at all about it, it is a protest against the discomfort of sunburn on arms and back and shoulders exposed to the glare of sunshine on the sea.

And of course there is something undeniably smart about the high-necked, long-sleeved bathing costume. You may have noticed yourself that this summer it is the woman with one of these new very "modest" bathing suits who attracts attention.

Have you seen the new heeled bathing and beach shoes? Quite early in the season I was told that there were to be such things, but I couldn't quite picture them. Heels seemed so out of place along the surf. But here they are worn at many of the smart lakeside and seashore resorts. They have heels of solid rubber and are liked by the woman who doesn't like the feel of flat shoes. They are made—some of them—with cut-out straps, so that they are low over the instep. Others are high over the instep like rubbers, to hold them on.

If you want to transform a pair of white kid or canvas shoes just decorate them with a floral design. You can easily paint it on yourself with the help of the pattern that I will be glad to send you, in return for a stamped, self-addressed envelope. From the pattern which is actual size you can cut out a stencil, and with this you can trace the outline of the design on your shoes. After that just fill in with appropriate colors.

C.P.R. IN DEAL FOR MARCONI

Those in Touch With Negotiations Say Sale Will Be Made Shortly.

CANADIAN CONTROL.

LONDON, August 23 (United Press). — The probability of the Canadian Pacific Railway participating in the Canadian Marconi deal, is said to be much greater than heretofore, and those in close touch with the situation confidentially expect the present negotiations for the sale of Canadian Marconi will shortly be brought to a successful conclusion.

It is asserted that the participation of the Canadian Pacific will help remove the suspicion that the Radio Corporation of America would dominate the new company. Furthermore, it is argued that the Radio Corporation is anxious to develop the Canadian Marconi, particularly regarding the service to Australia and the Far East, and that the fullest co-operation will exist between the two companies.

East Peterborough League Winners in Action Tomorrow Night.

Campbellford versus Crescents is the bill offered baseball patrons at Exhibition Park tomorrow evening. These team, champions of the Northumberland and East Peterborough League, will meet in a first-round O.B.A. Intermediate game. The game is called for five o'clock sharp and should be well worth seeing. The worth of the Crescents is well known, while Campbellford won its league after a hard fight against strong opposition.

The return game will be played in Campbellford on Friday.

JOLLY JINGLES By Graham Hunter

JUNGLE SAFER THAN HIGHWAY

Naturalist, Back From Six Months in Africa, Killed at Crossing.

WIFE INJURED.

ITHACA, N.Y., Aug. 23.—Only a few months after his return home from a six months' trip into the heart of Abyssinia with the Field Museum expedition of Chicago, Louis Agassiz Fuertes, foremost American painter of bird life and a famous naturalist, was killed yesterday in a grade crossing accident near Unadilla, N.Y.

He died within thirty minutes after an automobile in which he and his wife were driving on a brief vacation trip into the Catskills was struck by a fast westbound Delaware and Hudson train shortly before noon. Mrs. Fuertes was thrown clear of the car and, though suffering from burns and other injuries is expected to recover, according to reports from the Oneonta Hospital, where she was taken.

Mr. Fuertes was pinned under the car and when the gasoline tank exploded he suffered burns and other injuries from which he died soon after being extricated.

The Throne Room in Holyrood Palace, where King George and Queen Mary are to hold a drawing-room on the occasion of their State visit to the city of Edinburgh this summer, has recently been restored to represen as nearly as possible the same appearance as it did in the days when the ill-fated Mary, Queen of Scots, held her court at Holyrood.

WILL 15 FINISH LONG SWIM? KEATING FINDS WATER COLD

Winner of Lake George Marathon Says It Will Freeze Many Out.

WIND AFFECTS WATER.

TORONTO, Aug. 23 (Canadian Press).—When the $50,000 swimming marathon, scheduled for August 31, was first proposed, it was estimated that accommodations for at least 100 natators would have to be found locally. A later estimate of 200 was regarded as a flight of fancy, since the Catalina swim in January brought out what was, up to that time, the greatest collection of stars that had ever competed—and total starters in that event were 103. However, when entries closed for the local marathon on August 15, 371 swimmers had signified their intention of competing, while many more have probably mailed their entries in time to have them accepted.

The Toronto marathon will certainly establish many records. Never in the history of long distance swimming have there been so many entries; so many "stars"; so many "dark horses," champions and near-champions. And certainly there has never before been offered such cash prices. The winner of the swim, if masculine, will collect $30,000, while if a woman should do the unexpected and defeat all swimmers of both sexes, she will have $35,000 to spend on "pin money."

Many of the swimmers are training around Toronto, George Young, whose great achievement in the Catalina Channel swim, when he finished alone of 103 swimmers, has made him internationally famous, had been training near Picton, Ont Recently, however, he moved his training quarters to Oakville, where, it is said, the water is colder. He is favored to win the marathon, but a glance at the entry list shows that all will not be easy for the local lad. His chances are more than 300 to one, but these odds will without doubt decrease as the race progresses and the mediocre swimmers drop out.

That many will drop out is a foregone conclusion. Lake Ontario at no time is very warm, and even now the water is getting cold. Many of the better-known swimmers freely predict that at the end of the first seven miles of the 21-mile course the field will be narrowed down considerably, while not more than fifteen will finish.

Edward Keating, winner of the Lake George Marathon, on his arrival here from New York, immediately went into the water. "That's colder than Lake George," he said, as he came out with his teeth chattering. Harry Erickson, who stayed in the water of that lake for more than 24 hours, and who is training with Keating, laughed as he too emerged from Lake Ontario's chilly water. "Oh Boy! that's cold stuff! You can tell the world for me that there'll be no fifteen finish in this swim, even if there are 300 to start. It will freeze them out if it is as cold as this."

However, the direction of the wind usually has considerable bearing on the temperature of the water around Toronto. An on-shore win from the south, blowing the warm water in, will make it comfortable; an off-shore wind from the north will make it very cold.

The arrangements made by various swimmers, trainers and managers have aroused considerable interest. In several cases, the more temperamental "fish" will have orchestras accompany them, while some will rely on the much-abused ukelele to wile away the hours. Every swimmer will be accompanied by a boat containing his handlers and an official.

The race will start at nine o'clock in the morning, but the finish will be problematical. It may be over at nine on the same night; it may be considerably later before the first swimmer completes the course. Everything hinges on the weather. Should the natators have to buck heads to winds on one "leg" of the course, as it seems almost certain they will, the time will be lowered considerably. It seems too good to good to expect absolutely calm waters and clear skies.

The original starting points was inside the breakwater which runs along Toronto's waterfront. The breakwater was only 300 feet from the shoreline, and a string of barges were to be used from which to start the swimmers. However, since the distance to the concrete wall is so short the entries so many, officials of the event have decided to start the "flying fish" from ouside the breakwall. Rules will be laid down governing fouling and other contingencies, and these are at present under consideration.

No doubt there will be much jockeying for various positions in the race, and to get away from this the positions will be drawn for by the authorities. Those drawing a position on the outside will have a decided early advantage in the race if they can get to the first turn ahead of the others, and it is anticipated that there will be a decided spurt at the start. The spurt will not last long, however, since the distnce of 21 miles will require a slow, steady stroke. The fact that the course is laid out, and that there is no tide will probably lead to speed records. The English Channel, Catalina and even the Lake George Marathons, have not been laid out in regular course, and it is a decided innovation in long distance swimming. It will also lead to the inevitable individual brushes between swimmers who have the perfectly natural human trait or dislike of being passed by others.

As to "feature entries" in addition now to George Coombs, of Sudbury, Ont., who is legless;. Michael Hambourg, Toronto, who is blind, and Arthur Compton, of California, 14 years old, are the entries of Bert Rovere of Los Angeles, a former grand opera singer, who even now entertains visitors to his training camp, and William Cornwell, Toronto street car conductor, who has fourteen children, is six feet tall and weighs 245 pounds. At present William is the "largest" entrant in the swim.

BOY IS DROWNED SAVING CHILDREN

Overcome in Efforts To Keep Boat From Being Upset.

WALLACEBURG, Ont., Aug.23.—No inquest will be held into the death of Walter Burrows, 13 year old local boy, drowned in the Sydenham River Sunday afternoon. This announcement was issued after a police investigation into the tragedy, which brought to light the true circumstances surrounding the accident.

The boy was playing a short distance from a wharf when swells from a passing motor boat threatened to capsize a rowboat in which two smaller children were sitting. In his attempts to prevent the boat from upsetting and to rescue the two tots, the boy, although able to swim to some extent, was overcome.

Big British Engine For Railway Exhibit

BALTIMORE, August 23. — The 135-ton locomotive, "King George V," the most powerful engine ever built for an English railway, arrived here yesterday on the steamship Chicago City. The monster is in four parts. The engineer and fireman who have run this powerful engine on the Great Western Railway have arrived, together with several mechanical engineers of the British railway, to assemble and operate the locomotive. The masses of steel, brass, and copper will be unloaded at once at Locust Point, the B. & O.'s terminals at Tidewater, and moved on flat cars to Mount Clare shops, where the assembling will be made by Great Western and B. and O. mechanics.

The great British iron horse will then be driven by its own engineer and fireman to Hale Thorpe, a few miles from Baltimore on the Baltimore and Ohio's main line, where other historic locomotives are figuring in the earliest and latest eras of transportation by steam power will participate in the pageant of railroad progress at the Baltimore & Ohio's centenary exposition.

Sir Felix J. C. Pole, general manager of the Great Western, who is much interested in the coming celebration, will inspect his company's big exhibit as soon as the parts are assembled.

WORLD-KNOWN RADICALS DIE

Another demonstration potential with violence was scheduled for to-day. Americans were the quarry sought by the rioters.

Many Demonstrations

NEW YORK, Aug. 23 (Canadian Press).—Demonstrations in behalf of Sacco and Vanzetti were staged before and after their execution in various European and South American cities. At one place, Geneva, they took serious turn. The manifestants, after marching on the United States Consulate and being beaten off by the police, broke the windows of the great hall of the library of the League of Nations Palace. They later marched on two theatres and during the uproar an onlooker was killed when a rioter fired a shot. Twenty-five persons were injured.

United States commercial houses in Buenos Aires were stoned. Today, in London, a procession marched into the Mall to the strains of the "Red Flag." It was dispersed by the police near Buckingham Palace, and many of the rioters were arrested.

Paris had several demonstrations, but nothing serious happened.

Communists in Berlin and other German cities attempted to stage manifestations, but they were suppressed by police.

Some disturbances took place at Stockholm and Gothenburg, Sweden. There was a fairly complete stoppage of work in Argentina as a mark of sympathy.

At Montevideo, Uruguay, and Asuncion, Paraguay, laborers stopped work.

Sacco-Vanzetti sympathizers in Mexico City held a parade followed by an orderly demonstration.

Execution Stops Fight.

BOSTON, Aug. 23. — (Canadian Press.)—Up to the hour set for the execution and even later the seven years legal struggle to save the lives of Sacco and Vanzetti had continued. When every court and legal recourse had been exhausted the defense attorneys still strove to find a new means of gaining a respite for the condemned men. Four attorneys hastening by automobile to Williamstown to lay an appeal for a stay before a justice of the United States Superior Court turned back only when they heard by telephone that Madeleros and Sacco already had been executed and that the fate of Vanzetti was a matter of minutes. Then, at long last, the defense counsel finally admitted defeat.

Protest in Sydney.

SYDNEY, N.S.W., Aug. 23.—(United Press.)—Sacco and Vanzetti demonstrators, totalling more than 10,000, marched through the city's streets to-day under the supervision of Sydney's foremost communists, singing red songs and carrying banners with inscriptions protesting against the execution.

MAN INJURED ON HONEYMOON

Probably Fatally Hurt When Plane Crashes at Niagara Falls.

PILOT HURT, TOO.

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., Aug. 23.—When a passenger plane crashed above Chippawa yesterday evening two men were hurt, one probably fatally.

Stanley Brzusztrewic of Philadelphia was pinned under the plane and received terrible injuries, and has only the slightest chance of recovery. Fred Hartwick, Hamilton, pilot of the ill-fated plane, although badly injured, one leg broken, has a good chance to recover, doctors said last night.

A sad feature of the case is the fact that the Philadelphia man is here on his wedding trip, and took his first aeroplane ride as something to make that trip still more memorable. His wife is broken-hearted.

RUSSAU OUT ON BAIL UNTIL PEACE SESSION

Several Witnesses Heard in Police Court at Norwood.

FOR RECKLESS DRIVING.

Case Arises Out Of Accident Near Norwood Some Weeks Ago.

Bail of a thousand dollars for appearance for trial at the General Sessions of the Peace, was the decision of Magistrate O. A. Langley at the hearing of a charge of reckless driving, laid against Walter Russaw at Police Court at Norwood yesterday.

Murney Sampson, the first witness called, and also the informant, when questioned by the Crown Attorney, G. W. Hatton, K.C., stated that two weeks ago he had been driving home from Peterborough with a girl friend and his brother and sister, after a visit to a sick sister in one of the Peterborough hospitals. Going home about eleven o'clock, Sampson declared that when about four miles from Norwood, he discovered a car coming directly up the same side of the road upon which he was travelling. This resulted in a head-on collision, smashing his radiator, axle, fenders, and windshield.

Janet Scott, his companion, received various cuts on the head and knee and he himself had his nose hurt. At that time Harold Grey and Murray Hartley of Peterborough were motoring to Trent River and they took the injured to Norwood, accompanied by Russaw.

Witness stated that on arrival at Norwood, Russaw had asked him not to be too hard on him, due to the fact that he was a poor lad, but that he would pay all expenses and meet him at a certain garage in Norwood at 6.30 p.m. the following Tuesday night. On Monday night he saw Russaw, but on Tuesday he failed to make an appearance.

In cross-examination Mr. Gordon asked the witness how many times that he and Janet Scott had gone out together previous to the accident, but witness could not say.

Mr. Gordon: "Did any of your party have any liquor that night?"

Witness: "No."

Mr. Gordon: "Were your brother and sister in the back seat sleeping?"

Witness: "They were before the accident."

Janet Scott

Janet Scott was the next witness called. Miss Scott entered the box with a bandage tied round her forehead. She stated that her home was in Campbellford, and on the night of the accident she had accompanied Murney Sampson and his brother and sister to Peterborough to see their sister in the hospital.

Mr. Hatton: "Does your head ever trouble you now?"

Witness: "I have never had a decent night's sleep since."

In cross-examination, Mr. Gordon inquired if the lights were in good condition, to which the girl answered in the affirmative.

Dr. Sutton

Dr. N. F. Sutton, physician of Norwood and former attendant of the injured persons, the next witness, stated that on the night of the accident, about twelve o'clock, Sampson, Calvin Lee, and Miss Scott had come into the house requiring medical aid.

Allan Sampson

Allan Sampson, brother of the informant, stated that he could not give much evidence, although he claimed that he was not asleep at the time of the impact.

Mr. Gordon: "Did you have any liquor that night of the ride?"

Witness: "No, not any liquor."

Mr. Gordon: "Did you have anything to drink in Peterborough?"

Witness: "A glass of water in the cafe."

Harold Grey

Harold Grey, driver of the car that took the injured to Norwood, did not know the points of the compass in relation to this particular spot on the road, nor did he know in what position the cars lay after the accident.

Mr. Gordon: "Let me ask the witness a few questions?"

Mr. Hatton: "May you have good luck."

In cross-examination, Grey told that the cars were both almost in the centre of the road.

Murray Hartley

Murray Hartley, also of Peterborough, and Grey's companion, told that the cars were some distance apart when they came on the scene about ten minutes after the accident, but that he had remembered no drinking.

Sampson claimed that Russaw told him on that night that he had taken a drink, but that he was not drunk.

This concluded the case till the General Session of the Peace.

BOY IS KILLED; FATHER SOUGHT

St. Thomas Man Away From Home at Time of Accident.

ENJOYING HOLIDAY.

ST. THOMAS, Aug. 23.—With his 12-year-old son lying dead at his home, the victim of an unusual accident while at play Sunday afternoon, a district-wide search was instituted yesterday for Stephen Gofenka, a Rumanian tobacco worker, in Yarmouth Township. Gofenka left home Saturday afternoon to visit friends in the Port Burwell district and was not located until last night. He was unaware of his son's death until he arrived home.

The boy, George Gofenka, was riding down a little hill in the orchard near the Gofenka home on an old democrat, Sunday afternoon, when it crashed into an apple tree. The boy was rushed into the city where a doctor dressed his injuries, which appeared to be entirely external.

The boy had been back in his home only a few minutes when he suffered a relapse and died before the doctor could reach his side again. His death is believed to have been caused by internal injuries.

Crescents Win East Peterborough League Honors

SCORE WINNING TALLY IN 7TH TO DEFEAT COGNAWAGAS 2-1

Jack Billingsley Bats in Jones for Deciding Count.

CLEAN-CUT VICTORY

Win Right to Meet Winners of Northumberland Loop.

Entering the game in the sixth inning after Delahaye had doubled off Mein, Jack Billingsley disposed of the Cogs, and in the seventh batted in Freddy Jones with the run that carried Crescents to the East Peterborough League championship, at the Exhibition Park last evening. The score was 2 to 1. The attendance was approximately 1,700.

Crescents meet Campbellford, winners of the Northumberland loop, at Exhibition Park to-morrow evening at five o'clock, in the first game of the O.A.B.A. semi-finals. The second game is at Campbellford on Friday afternoon.

Last evening's contest was a great finish to a successful season. Better baseball is seldom seen, but best of all, the victory was clean-cut. And the clubs have to thank the fans for the very fine collection of $105.56.

Crescents Score First.

Crescents scored first, in the opening frame . LeBarr fanned. Joe Jones got a hit through short, when Wilson slipped as he went after the drive. Jones stole second, and with Ranger up, pulled a throw from Delahaye. Wilson took the throw and sent the ball over Weese's head, allowing Jones to make the bag and go on in.

Cogs tied it up in the fourth. Weese walked and stole. Crary singled between Corbett and Ranger, and Cripps placed a short fly back of second to score Weese . It was a nice piece of hitting by Cripps. Cripps went down to second as Rooke batted, the latter rolling to Mein, who retired Crary at the plate. That left two on and a good chance to score again. But Wilson's short fly to Joe Jones held Cripps at third and Delahaye's fly was taken up by Mein.

The Championship Tally.

The winning run in the seventh was scored after Scully had been retired by a fine catch by Bill Prest in deep left and Corbett had succumbed on a fly to Mackness. Freddy Jones dropped a short tap down third and beat it out. He stole second and was well down to third, when Billingsley hit a short fly to right, Jones going in for the championship run.

Mein and Vannest, who bore the brunt of the battle on the firing line, treated the fans to a rare exhibition of mound work, working carefully on the batters and fielding in clever style. Scully's catch of Crary's sizzling drive in the sixth, Prest's catch of Scully's hard fly in the seventh, and the outstanding work of First Baseman Rooke, were bright spots in a game that will go down in baseball history as one of the best-played contests of any championship series .

While a small section of rabid fandom worked themselves into a state of fierce enthusiasm, the best of feeling prevailed among the players of the two teams. The victorious players accepted their second championship with a proper demonstration after the game, and the vanquished took their defeat like the good sportsmen they have shown themselves to be in all the games throughout a long and trying season.

MISS HELEN WILLS WINS FIRST ROUND

Starts Battle to Regain United States Women's Tennis Championship.

FOREST HILLS, N. Y., August 23.—Canadian Press. — Flashing the brilliant brand of tennis that has carried her along in an unbroken stretch of victory so far this season, Miss Helen Wills started impressively yesterday her battle to regain the United States' women's tennis championship.

Making her first apeparanec in the national tournament since she ended her three year reign in 1925, Miss Wills overwhelmed Miss Josephine Crookshank, California junior, 6-0, 6-1, in the first round.

Except for the unexpected withdrawal of Mrs. Kitty McKane Godfree, the captain of the invading British team, because of illness, the first round of the 40th national championship, developed no upsets and few thrills. The other six British contenders advanced without difficulty, as did Miss Kee Bouman, the hard-driving young Dutch champion, and such "seeded" United tates stars as Mrs. Mallory, the present champion; Miss Helen Jacobs, Miss Eleanor Goss, Miss Penelope Anderson, and Mrs. Charlotte Hosmer Chapin.

Threat of appendicitis on top of continued ill-health forced Mrs. Godfree to default her scheduled first round match with Mrs. Arthur M. Duncan of Bronxville, N. Y. The former Wimbledon champion, who was runner up to Miss Wills in the 1925 United States tournament, had not been in good health for some time, recovering slowly from an operation for the removal of her tonsils. Her play in the Wightman cup matches here recently was disappointing, where she lost in straight sets to Miss Wills and Mrs. Mallory. She retired from the singles yesterday on the advice of her physician, but will play in the doubles starting to-day with Miss E. H. Harvey as her partner.

Of the other invading stars, Miss Joan Fry, Miss Eileen Bennett, and Miss Bouman gave the best exhibition. Miss Fry had entirely too much speed for the eNw York veteran, Mrs. Bernard F. Stena, and won at 6-1, 6-2.

YANKS LOSE FULL SERIES

Indians Take Fourth Straight From New York 9 to 4.

HOMER FOR RUTH

NEW YORK, Aug. 23.—(Canadian Press).—The Indians ran New York's losing streak to four games yesterday by defeating the Yankees, 9 to 4, at Cleveland for a clean sweep of the series.

Babe Ruth hit his fortieth home run of the season with none on in the sixth inning, taking the lead of one over Lou Gehrig in the race for distance clouting honors. Urban Shocker, right hander, who relieved Wilcey Moore on the Yankee mound in the seventh inning, suffered a broken finger when J. Sewell's fourth hit of the game carombed off his left hand.

Joe Shaute, Cleveland southpaw held the Yanks to eight scattered blows and easily snuffed out a ninth innning rally that netted two runs. The Indians smashed Moore hard and kept up the bombardment against Shocker and Herb Pennock for a total of 19 hits.

Tigers Win 4-2.

Detroit's winning streak grew to 13 games as the Tigers defeated Washington at Detroit in both sections of a double header, 4 to 2, and 7 to 3. Sam Gibson held the Senators to five hits in the opening half and deserved a shutout.

Home runs by Heimann and McManus off Walter Johnson in the fourth inning of the second game put the Tigers ahead after Washington had taken a two run lead.

At Chicago Ted Lyons registered his 19th victory of the season yesterday when the White Sox hammered the offerings of Jack Quinn, Philadelphia to take the final game of the series, 6 to 3. Lyons pitched a steady game, the Athletics being able to bunch their hits in only two innings. Cobb led the attack for the Athletics with two doubles, a single and a walk in four times up.

Metzler's diving one-hand catch of Bishop's fly in the ninth inning broke up a Philadelphia rally.

There were no other games scheduled.

BRAVES CUT LEAGUE LEAD

Win Third Straight Victory Over Cubs at Boston 5 to 3.

MISPLAYS COSTLY

NEW YORK, Aug. 23.—(Cnadian Press).—By winning their third straight victory over the league-leading Chicago club yesterday at Boston, 5 to 3, the Braves cut down the margin of the Cubs over the second place Pittsburgh club to two and a half games. Two unearned runs in the eighth settled the issue for the Braves. Beck, English and Webb made misplays and Farrell, Clark and Robertson followed with base hits. Ed Brown of Boston set a new National league record when he played in his 534th consecutive game. The previous record of 533 games was held by Fred Luderus of Philadelphia.

At Philadelphia Chick Hafey's home run into the bleachers gave Jess Haines the best of a hurling duel with Frank Ulrich, the St. Louis Cardinals defeating the Phillies by a score of 1 to 0. Ulrich gave up only four hits and Hafey was the only Cardinal to pass second base. The victory was Haines twentieth of the season.

No other games were scheduled.

WINNIPEG. GIRL ATHLETES

Two premier Winnipeg, Man., girl athletes made a new name for themselves at the Canadian Women's Athletic Federation meet in Toronto, Ont. Miss Olive Cook, right, broad jump champion of Manitoba, was third in this event, and Miss Elsie Gauer, field event champion of the same province, chucked the soft ball farther than any one else in the event and finished second in the javelin.

MILLBROOK WINS EXHIBITION GAME

Peterborough Bantam Team Badly Beaten at Fair Grounds.

MILLBROOK, Aug. 23.—The Peterborough Bantams were defeated in the game of hard ball with the Millbrook Juniors played at the Agricultural Park on Thursday evening, the visiting team scoring only two runs in the five innings.

The Bantams went first to bat, changing their pitcher after the second innings, when Wood replaced Brown, and making their only showing in the third and fourth when McCullough and Sprout scored one run each.

Ingram pitched for Millbrook throughout and the local team scored three runs in the first innings, one in the second, and six in the third. The teams lined up:

Bantams—Brown, p; Watley, c; McCullough, 1b; Sproat, 2b; Jones, 3b; Robertson, ss; Dallin, rf; Johnston, lf; Foley, cf; Wood, p.

Umpires—E. C. Richards at the plate, Ross Edmunds on bases.

Score: 10-2 in favor of Millbrook.

By innings the score was:

Peterborough	0 0 1 1 0—2
Millbrook	3 1 0 0 6—10

This was the first game of hard ball the local boys have played this season, softball having replaced it in the public favor.

A return game with the Bantams is being arranged for a later date.

Fifty years ago the National League circuit comprised only six cities—Boston and Hartford in the east, and Cincinnati, St. Louis, Chicago and Louisville in the west.

OLD "BIG FOUR" TO COMPOSE TEAM

Will Defend International Cup in Polo Series Against British.

NEW YORK, August 23. — Canadian Press. — The old "Big Four" of American polo, composed of J. Watson Webb, Tom Hitchcock, Malcolm Stevenson and Devereux Milbourn, will ride out against the British in defence of the International cup in the series starting at Meadow brook on September 5th.

This was announced officially yesterday by the United States Polo Association's defense committee less than 24 hours after Webb and Stevenson had been returned to the line-up in place of Winston Guest and J. Cheever Cowdin, the original selections, midway in a practice match at Port Washington, Long Island.

The immediate return to top form of the big four with Webb and Stevenson back at their old posts, satisfied the United States officials that this combination, the one that successfully defended the cup in 1924, was the more reliable. To those who watched the rather shaky play of the regulars at first with Guest and Cowdin in the line up, then the sweeping victory of the old "Big Four" in the last half of the practice match, no room for doubt remained as to which was the better team.

That the defence committee feels the same way was indicated Monday by its flat announcment that its latest decision is final, obviating the possibility of any further changes in the two weeks remaining before the first cup match.

Guest, the 21 year old Yale player, whose star is temporarily dimmed after a sensational rise, is officially named as a substitute, along with Cowdin, Captain C. A. Wilkinson, the army star, and Robert E. Strawbridge, Jr.,. This quartette composed the "junior variety" that fell before the onslaught of the "big four" in the final half of Sunday's trial match.

LEAFS DEFEAT TAIL-ENDERS

Alexander Hits Twice for Circuit as Canucks Smother Keystones.

SCORE OF 15 TO 2

TORONTO, Aug. 23.—The Leafs had no trouble showing up the tail-end Keys of Reading in the first game of the home stand, walloping two pitchers, Harrison and Fallen, for 18 hits, while they scored 15 runs in, 11 in the first two frames. Alexander featured with a pair of mammoth homers, both off Fallen, while Jacobson, with two doubles and as many singles, had a perfect average. Faulkner would not have been scored upon but for a brace of errors and a couple of scratch hits. It was his 19th win of the season.

Two games will be played Wednesday.

The Buffalo Bisons opened their long home stay by registering their fifth straight victory with the Baltimore Orioles as their victims, by a score of 9 to 5. Baltimore shattered Buffalo's record of holding the opposition scoreless for 32 innings and tallying four straight shutout victories, when they manufactured a run in the first inning.

At Rochester the Colts defeated the Newark Bears, 7 to 3. Rube Farnham, Newark hurler, started strong but was pounded hard in the late innings. It was "Mogridge Day" at baseball park, and the Tribe manager started in the box himself, retiring in the fifth inning for a pinch hitter. Mills finished the game and got credit for the victory.

Syracuse and Jersey City were not scheduled.

EUGENE V. HOMANS TAKES EARLY LEAD

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Aug. 23.—(Canadian Press). — Eugene V. Homans, of New York, led the field of 164 in the national amateur golf championship at Minikahda yesterday with a 71, the only under-par score of the day. He went out in two above par, but came home in the second 34 of, the day, three below par, to snatch the lead from Phillips Finlay of New York, another 19-year-old youth, who had a par 73. Don Carrick of Toronto, Canadian champion, was third with a 73.

Jimmy Johnston of Minneapolis; George Rotan of Houston; D. Clarke Corkran, Art Sweet of Chicago, and Max Marston of Philadelphia were tied with 74. Bobby Jones tied with several others at 75, while the defending champion, George Von Elm, took a bad 79.

Seagram Stable Wins Lord Shaughnessy Cup

MONTREAL, Que., Aug. 23.—(Canadian Press.)—Edisto, star of the Seagram stable, of Waterloo, Ont., showed he had recovered from his recent illness when he took the measure of six other horses in the Lord Shaughnessy Cup, feature event of yesterday's programme of the Dorval Jockey Club.

The Seagram horse took the lead at the start and forced a fast pace all the way. Edisto disposed of Tattling at the seven furlong mark, and won with something in reserve. The latter stopped to a walk in the stretch and finished out of the money. Donetta, owned by G. J. Day, finished fast on the outside, but was unable to menace the winner. Endor was third.

The feature of the afternoon was the riding of Ovila Bourassa, who brought home four winners and a third. He finished in front with McIntosh, Davenport, Edisto, and Jeb.

Of the seven events, four were won by favorites, and the balances by second choices.

BALLOON ALIGHTS IN DETROIT STREET

Pilot Picks Wide, Little Travelled Thoroughfare For Drop.

DETROIT, Aug. 23.—A balloon owned by the Detroit Flying Club, piloted by Charles D. Williams, Jr., president of the club, landed in Garland Avenue, between Canfield and Mack Avenues, on Sunday afternoon. According to Williams, he took off at 3 a.m. from a flying field in Wyandotte with Dr. George M. Legallee as aid. In the balloon were three passengers.

The flight was to be across Detroit, but light and unfavorable winds so delayed its progress that at nearly noon the big bag was drifting slowly across the city toward Lake St. Clair.

Unwilling to risk the crossing of the lake, Williams began the descent, steering as nearly as possible for the widest street in sight, which was Garland Avenue. He and the passengers landed safely in the middle of the street, coming down so slowly that the few pedestrians and automobile drivers were able to stop at a safe distance.

The police aided in getting the bag out of the street, where it was blocking traffic.

"THE HEART OF SALOME."

Anyone who looks at the advance matter of "The Heart of Salome" and expect too get a thrill out of sitting through the screening of the picture will be sadly disappointed. Whether the censor's shears have been busy or whether the scenarist got tired when half way through and allowed the tale to fizzle out to a flat finale, is problematical. At any rate, "The Heart of Salome," from the point of view of the admirer of pornorgraphic pictures, is distinctly disappointing. It might have been a stunning affair, carried out to a different ending, but it just isn't.

Alma Rubens is the heroine, a beautiful creature, but sadly addicted to posing. She is Helene "La Belle Helene" of Paris, who acts as the paid spy of a very clever blackmailer, Count Boris Zanko (Holmes Herbert) and goes to Brittany for a rest, to her country home. She meets there a travelling American, Monte Carroll (Walter Pidgeon) who becomes infatuated with her, in her role of an innocent maiden. Later receiving a message from Count Boris, she goes back to Paris and vamps a youthful artist who is concealing for his friend a very valuable package of papers. Boris desires possession of these, but later, Helene discovers that they belong to Monte Carroll, when he comes in person, fortfied by a six shooter, to demand them from the thieves. Then he spurns the girl he has loved and sullen brooding over his conduct brings her to the decision that she will emulate the action of the noteworthy Salome of ancient history, who demanded the head of the man who had repulsed her. Going to Boris, Helen promises to marry him if he will compass the death of Monte Carroll.

With these promising elements on hand, the picture switches to a mediavel atmosphere, when Boris takes the girl to a moated castle in a deserted district of France, and there fights with his prisoner, Monte until the latter finally emerges victorious from the fist conflict that follows a duel with swords. Monte and Helen appear finally at the door of the old building, about to embrace happily, while the unfortunate Boris, entombed in stone fastnesses within, beats vainly against a locked door.

The Pathe News reels which form the opening of the programme include some interesting episodes from the recent Stillman-Wilson wedding ceremony and the Sportlight which follows shows some famous stars in action, among them Babe Ruth, Walter Johnson, Ty Cobb, John J. McGraw and Miller Huggins. "Let George Do It" is a comedy from one of the McManus cartoons.

STICK TO A REGULAR DIET

Oftentimes, it seems that the best patients are those who do not have homes, and who eat their meals by themselves in restaurants. These people seem to be better able to stay on the diet prescribed than those who live at home and eat with other members of the family. The patients hardest to do anything with are those who go out to parties a great deal, and who are constantly tempted by the sight of appetizing dishes, the use of which will upset a carefully planned diet which has been prepared for them.

Those who are trying to live on diets, such as I recommend in this column, should have no difficulty in selecting a meal of good combinations from any meal which is served to them at their friends' houses. The good foods are usually there, but in addition to the three or four good articles which are necessary, the average table contains as many as ten or fifteen more unnecessary dishes which are prepared apparently with one sole object in view, namely, to tempt the appetite of the diner so he will over-eat. When friends are invited to your house, you invariably try to fix up a number of dishes which are more queer than those served you by these same friends. Thus, one housewife contests with the other to see if she cannot prepare a larger and tastier meal.

A business man who is successful in following certain definite rules about buying and selling has, perhaps, achieved his success because of adhering to certain strict business principles. The same man who would not change his business methods which have proven successful will sit down to a friend's table and throw over all dietetic rules, tating foods which he knows will be harmful to him as has been proven in times past.

A chemist, who knows that there are rules of food shemistry as well as those of inorganic chemistry, needs only a little urging by some friend to put into his stomach an inharmonious conglomeration of soup, meat, bread, pie and coffee, which he knows to be a bad mixture from a chemical standpoint.

Few people have the will-power to saya on a regular diet, when their appetites are tempted by foolish friends who wish to "treat" them to some favorite food or drink. It takes a good deal of "un-common" sense for one to have the courage of his convictions enough to be able to eat with his friends and still stick to a stric diet, and not be harmed by bad dishes with which he is tempted. One who can remain on a strict regime, however, will be well repaid by the admiration of his friends, and better still, by his own estimate of himself.

QUESTION AND ANSWERS

Answer—The sardines in oil are the best for you to use, and if your digestive power is good you can use these sardines as the protein part of a meal, using whatever non-starchy vegetables you desire. Tomatoes seem to combine very well with sardines.

Question—Miss M. P. writes: "Please tell me whether I should see a doctor if I suffer from palpitation of the heart. Sometimes I have a feeling in every part o my body as though things were crawling inside of me."

Answer—You doubtless have some kind of functional heart trouble caused by excessive intestinal gas. The movement of the gas is probably what you feel which gives you the sensation of something crawling inside of you. Your doctor can tell you whether or not you have any other trouble, and you should go to him for a diagnosis.

Question—Mrs. E. A. C. writes: "Neither my husband nor myself ever miss reading your invaluable articles in the paper, but I have not seen an article about the tiny thread worms which bother my children so much."

Answer—Thread worms can always be removed by a course of enemas. Give your children two enemas each day for about a week. If you will thereafter keep them on the rirht diet there will be no leturn of the Worm M

Lyrics Of Life

(By Douglas Malloch.)

WHEN SCOTTY RAN AWAY.

Once foolish Scotty ran away.
And what a fearful world he found!
The children didn't want to play.
Wives didn't want a dog around.
And even men were mean to him,
For one man chased him with a broom,
And Scotty's sky grew darkly dim,
And all the world was full of gloom.

Then someone found him, brought him home,
And now he sleeps beside the fire;
No longer Scotty cares to roam,
For home is now his one desire.

Poor, foolish Scotty, folks would say,
To leave the folks who hold him dear;
Yet other Scotties run away,
And people seldom call them queer.

The world's a rather rough, old place,
And, if you have a home to love,
Some friend who wears a smiling face,
A floor beneath, a roof above,
However loudly sin may call,
Whatever word the tempters say,
Don't leave it all, and lose it all,
Like foolish dogs that run away.

Uncle Wiggily

By Howard R. Garis

To-day's Bedtime Story

UNCLE WIGGILY'S RUBBER BOOTS

"Well, my dear," said Uncle Wiggily to his wife one morning, "whenever the peach shortcake is ready for me, I am ready for the peach shortcake."

"I am afraid I shall have to disappoint you," spoke Mrs. Longears. "There will be no peach shortcake today."

"Oh, don't say that!" cried the rabbit gentleman. "I am so fond of it. What is the matter?"

"Wuff!" howled the Bob Cat.

"I forgot to get the peaches," answered Mrs. Longears, "and it is raining so hard that I don't like to send any of the children or Nurse Jane to the store."

"Ha! If that is the only trouble! chuckled the bunny uncle, "it is easily gotten over. I will put on my rubber boots and hop to the store for the peaches."

"Then everything will be all right," decided the rabbit lady, and a little later Mr. Longears was splashing through the rain in his new rubber boots. And if he waded through every puddle he saw who will blame him? Not I and I think you will not: for don't you do the same when you have on new rubber boots? Of course you do!

"I guess it is too wet for me to have an adventure today," said Uncle Wiggily as he hopped home with the peaches, shaking the drops of water off his pink, twinkling nose. "No adventure for me today!" But, if you please, just wait and see what happens.

Hopping into his hollow stump bungalow, Uncle Wiggily took off his rubber boots, left them in the hall and carried the peaches to the kitchen where his wife and Nurse Jane were getting ready to bake the cake.

"While I am waiting," said Uncle Wiggily, hungrily sniffing the spicy smells around the gas stove, "I shall take a little nap in the parlor."

So the bunny went to sleep to dream that he was having a ride on top of a big peach shortcake pulled by a little rabbit girl. He dreamed that he fell off and the little rabbit girl started to lift him up by his ears when, all of a sudden, the rabbit gentleman really did awaken in the easy chair where he had fallen asleep, to find Baby Bunty, the little orphan rabbit, actually pulling one ear.

"Unkie Wig! Unkie Wig! Wake up!" Bunty was calling.

"Eh? What's this? What's the matter? Where is the shortcake?" asked Mr. Longears.

He saw his wife standing there, looking worried, and she said:

"I'm afraid, my dear, after all, there will be no shortcake. I forgot that I had no eggs until I had everything else all ready. I'm so sorry. But if you could do with a carrot pie—"

"No, I want peach shortcake!" exclaimed Mr. Longears. "I will put on my rubber boots again and get some eggs. Was that why you pulled my ear, Bunty, to awaken me to tell about the eggs?" he asked the little orphan rabbit.

"Oh, no," she answered. "I want you to help find my blocks. Jingle and Jangle had my nice wooden building blocks to play with but they lost them somewhere around the bungalow and I can't find them."

"I'll help you look for them when I come back from getting the eggs," promised Uncle Wiggily. "I must put on my rubber boots now, and hop out in the rain once more to get eggs for the peach shortcake."

When the rabbit gentleman hopped into the front hall to get his rubber boots, the door suddenly opened. Mr. Longears thought it was Jingle and Jangle coming back from having been out to see if the rain had stopped. He was just going to ask them what they had done with Bunty's blocks, when, all of a sudden, instead of the two little rabbit girls coming in, it was the Bob Cat! Think of that!

"Wuff!" howled the Bob Cat. "Now I have you!" He made a grab for Uncle Wiggily, but the bunny gentleman suddenly jumped into his rubber boots, intending to run away from the bad chap.

But no sooner had Uncle Wiggily put his paws into his rubber boots than he gave such loud howls—"Snoo! Boo! Kerchoo! Wah! Zoopie!"— that he sounded like a wild Indian, and this so frightened the Bob Cat that he tucked his silly little tail between his legs, as best he could, and ran away. Uncle Wiggily's howls made the Bob Cat think the bunny was going to bite him, I guess.

"Oh, Unkie Wig! What made you yell so?" asked Bunty, leaping into the hall.

"I yelled because I found your lost blocks," answered Mr. Longears.

"Where?" asked Bunty.

"In my rubber boots!" chuckled Uncle Wiggily taking his paws out to rub his sore, bruised toes. Then he took out the blocks, got the eggs and when the peach shortcake was made he gave Bunty a slice.

Irish Hearts

By MOLLIE MALONE

"IRISH HEARTS," with May McAvoy, is a Warner Bros. picturization of this novel.

SYNOPSIS

Sheila Kildare and her father emigrate to America to follow Emmett Murtough, to whom she is betrothed. Neither Kildare nor Murtough hold steady jobs and Sheila works as a waitress. Her only friends are the family of Rory O'Shea, a professional boxer, whose kindness interests her. Murtough joins a band of bootleggers and, influenced by a cabaret girl, reveals a plan to move $150,000 worth of contraband. He enlists with the rivals to betray the hiding place.

"Listen. I understand, from what we have learned about you, that you and this little girl are good friends—in fact, you'd both like to get married and get a good start in a business worth while. Well, here's your chance. Do this one job and you've got the money to marry and to settle down in a legitimate business. It's a chance not many fellows get in this game," he added. "How about it?"

"And if you don't want to play that way, we'll turn you up to Clocker within an hour." Murtough did not realize that if they did, it would tip off their own plans. He sat dumbly for several minutes, then threw out his hands and said:

"All right. You win and I'll play square with you; but it's the first crooked deal I ever put over."

They decided that Murtough had better sleep in the apartment there until time to get up and drive to the Long Island rendezvous. Another inner bedroom conected with that occupied by Schermer, and Murtough was assigned to that. There was no door leading to the hall and the window was seven stories above the street. Murtough sat himself down to reflections on the gift of eternal silence.

"You and Emmett Murtough engaged?"

CHAPTER XI

Planning the "Double-Cross"

Sheila had not seen Rory O'Shea since his victory over Campeau at the Garden. She had avoided Mrs. O'Shea, too, because she felt that she might be embarrassed if she visited Rory's mother, and he were to be home when she called. She felt instinctively that Rory admired her even though she had not heard from him directly during his stay at the training camp. Memory of the long automobile ride brought back many pleasant recollections of this becoming young man, but now that she had given her word definitely to Emmett Murtough she felt she must put such thoughts from her.

Rory had called at the Kildare apartment one night but Sheila was not at home and Old Tom did not encourage him to stay until she returned from her work at the restaurant. Rory had settled his affairs with Jack Reagan and had in his wallet a check for $1,750 more than he had expected. It was eight o'clock and he decided to have supper at Nick's. He selected a table, which he thought would be served by Sheila, so that he might chat with her. He lingered over his meal in order to get a word with her now and then, and when Sheila brought her own supper he beckoned to her to lay it at his table.

"I've missed you, Miss Kildare, these two months," he said.

"Ah, ye' had no time to think of me, what with all the training ye had to do," she replied with a smile.

"It was thinking of you that helped me to get into shape to win. I thought a lot about you while I was away. I didn't know you had gone to work and that Old Tom had quit Tim. I'm sorry for that."

"The work didn't suit my father," she said in defense of him.

"Work of any kind that is honest ought not to hurt anybody," retorted Rory.

"I didn't say it hurt him."

"Well, it ought to suit him then." Truth to tell, Rory had seen through Old Tom and his mighty pretensions. "It's a shame you have to be doing this."

"Any kind of work that's honest ought to suit anybody," she replied, paraphrasing his own words.

"But not for a girl like you."

"Oh, it's been all right. Nick's not so bad to work for, after ye know yer job."

"I just settled for the fight and it's a right good nest egg I've got left, more than I expected out of it. Reagan is a fair manager all right."

"And will ye be keeping up yer fighting? Yer mother says she'd like to have you quit."

"Oh, mother's been saying that all these years, but she wants me to do what is best. I don't know yet," he went on seriously, "I stood up well in the fight with Campeau, but these young fellows have got something that I lost when I was a kid at the game. I've about come to the conclusion that I'm through."

"An' ye'll not fight any more? Oh, that would be grand!"

"Would you care, Sheila?"

"Of course, I'd care. Why, I think it would be wonderful if you could get into business yerself or with yer brother, Tim, just like ye talked that day."

"You remember then our ride? I wondered if you did. I was very happy that day."

"It was beautiful, the sunset an' all," mused Sheila.

"I'd like to take you again, some time. And, how about the West End Club's big shindig, the dance, I mean. Will you go with me?" he asked, his eyes bright with anticipation. "We'll have a great time."

"I'm sorry but I've already promised Emmett."

"Oh," and the lilt in Rory's voice failed.

"You see, he asked me some time ago."

"But I couldn't. I was away."

"An' I told him yes. Will you be coming?"

"Oh, I always take Mother and Dad. They know all the old timers, the real old timers, you know, and it gives them a chance to meet them again. They wouldn't miss it for anything."

"Then I'll see you."

"And will you dance with me?"

"Of course, I will."

After Sheila had finished they walked slowly homeward and went down as far as the new steamship docks, where they could see the lights on an ocean going vessel that was moored there waiting to sail on the next day. The New Jersey shore was alive with the glimmering lights of automobiles and trolley cars.

"There's some mighty nice flats a bit farther north there," remarked Rory. "I know some friends who live over there. Once I wanted the folks to move over there, but they like the neighborhood they've been living in. The rents are nearly as cheap as here and the streets are clean and there are trees and grass on the lawns in front of the smaller houses. It's nice for young couples just starting out."

"It would be nice for Emmett an' me then, wouldn't it? Emmett's so changed now an' he says he has a fine chance."

"You and Emmett Murtough engaged?"

"Well, we had planned it a long, long time ago, and when he changed fer the better I agreed."

Rory said no more on the way home and his silence embarrassed Sheila into silence, also. At the door where they parted Rory said:

"Well, I'll see you at the dance."

"Oh, of course. Give my love to yer mother."

Sheila turned up the stairs, but it seemed to Rory, who listened to her footfalls, that her feet must have turned to lead.

At the West End Club there was much talk and planning of the coming dance. All the active workers of the district had been enlisted to do their share to make it a huge success. Clocker took advantage of the fact that most of his men were there to call them into meeting, and he told them of his plans to transport the entire shipload of contraband on the following Sunday night. Enough trucks would be furnished to do the job, and he appointed Dixon in charge and Devlin first lieutenant in the enterprise. It was their business to learn how many vehicles would be required, to obtain the services of drivers and guards and to schedule the routes over which each truck should speed to New York.

"I'll take Murtough with me if it's all right," said Devlin. "He appears to be a pretty handy fellow."

"He stood up all right in that trouble we had with Stevens," commented Dixon. "I think he's a good man."

"I'll speak to him then; he ought to be in later."

Murtough did not come in. At that very hour he was crouching in the underbrush outside of Clocker's storage house on Long Island with Schermer and his two companions.

MINE EXPERT

Moving to Ottawa.

MONTREAL, Aug. 23. — Canadian Press. — To-day the Empire Mining and Metallurgical Congress entered the second and last day of its Montreal meeting. Following to-day's functions, which include technical addresses, a luncheon and a dinner, the congress will change its venue to Ottawa.

Action was taken at yesterday's session leading to the institution of a review of the mineral resources and industries of the British empire. It was regarded as a move of vast and far reaching possibilities commencing as it was an effort, which if eventually prosecuted, will achieve a comprehensive tabulation of the Empire's mineral and industrial resources that will aid in the formulation of economic policies in the Empire.

Sir Thomas Holland, past president of the British Institution of Mining and Metallurgy, London, brought forward the proposal in a paper entitled "Proposed Review of the Mineral Resources of the Empire."

Following the presentation of the paper by Sir Thomas Holland, R. E. Palmer, O.B.E., president of the British Institution of Mining and Metallurgy, London, presented a resolution advocating the institution of the review. The resolution was unanimously carried.

The congress was declared open by Sir Robert Horne, honorary president and former Chancellor of the Exchequer. He opened his address with an eloquent testimony of loyalty of the Congress to the Empire.

"Coal offers the means by which Great Britain can achieve a prosperity that will unshackle it from draining war legacies and enable it to shake off continuing post-war depressions" said Sir Robert. "Coal is a problem the solution of which is of importance to the whole empire, but of vital importance to the Mother Country." Sir Robert deplored the fact that only one-fifth of the coal used in Great Britain was employed in a fashion which gave the added benefit of such important by-products as tar, benzol and ammonia. The remainder was consumed in a raw condition with a deplorable waste of valuable material—as much as three million tons of the potential fuel escaping into the atmosphere in the form of soot. The attempt to solve this vital problem on practical and commercial lines had, he said, been engaging the attention of some of the best brains of the mining world for several years.

Sir Robert stressed the growing independence of the Empire in regard to raw material production. In only two important products, copper and petroleum, was the Empire deficient. The opening of new sources of copper in South Africa and experiments and research in the extraction of fuel oils from coal, would he thought in the near future greatly improve matters.

Canada's Mineral Production

Turning to Canada's minerals, Sir Robert pointed out that although the Canadian population represented only one-half of one per cent. of the population of the world, Canada was now in the third place amongst the countries of the world in the production of gold, and she was likely soon to be in the second. Ninety per cent. of the world's nickel comes from Canada, and eighty per cent. of the asbestos. Canada was on the threshold of her mineral discoveries, he said, with such a vast area unprospected.

Hon. Charles Stewart, P.C., M.P., Minister of Mines, and Chairman of the Congress, extended Canada's welcome to the delegates. He regretted he could not accompany the members in their tours of the Dominion and proceeded to outline a few of the important points in Canada's mineral activities. Production statistics showed this country produced annually more than 40 different primary metals and minerals, and of these Canada stood first in world production of asbestos, nickel and cobalt, third in gold and silver, and fifth in lead and zinc and sixth in copper. The mineral production last year in this country had amounted to $240,000,000 as compared with about five millions in the year of Confederation. In that year the per capita production had been about $1.50, whereas last year it amounted to $26.50.

"The gross value of manufactured products of mineral origin is several times as great as the value of our primary mineral production," he said, pointing out that one-fourth of the Dominion's total capital investment in manufacturing was in the mineral-manufacturing industries.

"I do not think anyone here will question the desirability of increasing the proportion of British investment in Canadian mines, and I know that certain powerful groups in the Old Country are interesting themselves in this situation. I have no doubt that this congress will exert a powerful influence in exciting interest in Great Britain in Canadian mineral resources," concluded Mr. Stewart.

NO EVIDENCE THAT GAME WAS THROWN

NEW YORK, August 23 (Canadian Press). — Baseball Commissioner Landis to-da ydeclared "there was not the remotest evidence or indication that Captain Johnny Conlan, of the Newark Bears, was guilty of throwing a ball game," after investigating the reports concerning an eleven-inning game between Rochester and Newark last June.

FALL GRAIN CUT IN EAST EMILY

Many Farmers Have Wheat in Barns—Alsike Yield Low.

PRICE OF EGGS UP.

EAST EMILY, Aug. 23. — The fine weather which has prevailed over this district during the past week has allowed the farmers to get most of the fall grain cut, and a good part of it in the barn.

The threshing machine has also been very busy throughout the neighborhood threshing alsike. The yield of alsike reported so far is not very large.

Another week will see the majority of the fields bare in this locality.

The price of eggs in this district has advanced to 32c.

POLICE FLY TO MURDER SCENE

Forestry Patrol Plane Used in Search For Clues in North Country.

MANY DAYS SAVED.

PORT ARTHUS, Ont. Aug. 23. — Airplanes of the Ontario Forestry Patrol Service, were turned over to the assistance of the Provincial police last week-end to carry the messengers of justice into the hinterland of Ontario in search of details of a murder and possible arrest, making a trip that would have been a fifteen day job at least under former conditions, in a little less than two hours. Yesterday the airplane assigned to the carrying of the police and coroner was back from its trip of more than a hundred miles north of Sioux Lookout with further details of the crime that apparently was committed about three weeks ago, and for which an Indian named Cook is being sought, the victim being a trapper known as Shorty Austin.

Rumours of a murder came in by the overland route to Sioux Lookout some two weeks ago. Friday last, Captain Roy Maxwell of the Ontario Air Force, was instructed from Toronto to despatch a plane to Blackstone Lake, one hundred miles north of Sioux Lookout, carrying Constable Finlayson and Coroner Dr. Harry Mitchell of Sioux Lookout. Capt. Ted Cooper was given the assignment and with the officers took off from Sioux Lookout making the trip in an hour and forty five minutes.

Investigation revealed the body of Austin, rolled in blankets, badly decomposed, apparently dead from a blow on the head with an axe, his gun and other articles missing and other evidences of a crime by an intruder at his shack. The officers heard two stories: One that Austin had stolen the sister of an Indian named Cook, afterwards abandoning her; and another that he had been 'poaching' on Indians' forbidden territory in his trapping, and that he had been warned of death, but had ignored the warning.

The search for Cook took the officers 45 miles farther on to Osneburg House where Constable Finlayson, who has special qualifications for working among the Indians, was left by the plane, which after a stop at Orient en route, returned to Port Arthur this afternoon.

WAR MEMORIAL AT ALDERVILLE

Service Held On Sunday When First Sod Was Turned.

ON INDIAN RESERVE.

TRENT RIVER, August 23. — The first sod of the foundation for the Indian memorial was turned on Sunday, August 21. A service was held, and the Kiltie band of Cobourg was in attendance.

Work will proceed at once for the erection of the memorial, which will be built at the junction of the five roads at Alderville. The memorial was designed by A. H. McKeel and Son, Campbellford, who will be in charge of the work. The memorial will be a cluster of columns, which when finished, will be 45 feet high.

The Cobourg Granite and Marble Works have completed the tablet with 33 names, which is a fine piece of work. All the letters are raised with polished fronts. This work has been accepted by Mr. McKeel and Son, who give the Cobourg Granite and Marble Works much credit for their work. The date for the unveiling will be Sunday, September 25th.

OBITUARY.

DAVID McCOY.

MARMORA, Aug. 23.—Following months of suffering, David McCoy passed away at his home in Marmora Village on Saturday evening at the age of 72. Previous to taking up residence in the village about three years ago, deceased had farmed practically all his life in Marmora Township, having moved there from Belleville at the age of sixteen with his parents, the late Henry and Rebecca McCoy. He leaves a widow and seven children to mourn his loss. His children are David of Marmora Township, Marshall of Marmora Village, Gilbert and Clarence at home, Mrs. James Clark of Queensboro, and Misses Ethel and Minnie at home. One son, Roy, predeceased him twelve years ago. He is also survived by one sister, Mrs. Robert Bell, of Plunkett, Sask. Deceased belonged to the Anglican Church and in politics was a staunch Conservative.

The funeral took place on Monday afternoon, the service being taken at St. Paul's Church by the rector, Rev. A. B. Caldwell, interment being in Marmora Cemetery. Beautiful floral emblems from members of the family and other relatives were an evidence of the esteem in which he was held.

WILLIAM LEESON.

The funeral of the late William Leeson, son of Mr. and Mrs. John F. Leeson, Douro, who was drowned last Thursday, when a derrick fell into the river at Gary, Indiana, will take place from the family residence, on Wednesday, August 24th, at 2 p.m., and proceed to the Little Lake cemetery with Rev. J. W. Gordon officiating.

MRS. JOHN CLANCY.

The death occurred at 1.15 this morning of an old and respected resident of the city, Ellen Sullivan, wife of John Clancy, who passed away at her home at 281 Rubidge Street, after an illness extending over the past year.

The late Mrs. Clancy was born in Rochester, N.Y., on April 12th, 1853, and came to this city with her parents, the late Mr. and Mrs. John Sullivan, over seventy years ago. For over half a century she lived on Hunter Street, at what was known as the Peterborough House. For the past twenty years she and her family have resided at 281 Rubidge Street. She was a devout member of the congregation of St. Peter's Cathedral, and had a host of friends in the city, her sterling qualities as a Christian wife and mother making her an outstanding figure among the older women of the city.

Besides her sorrowing husband, there are left to mourn her loss four sons, Leo of Detroit, Michigan, Hector of this city, Clare of Toronto, and Father Raymond Clancy of Austin, Texas. A daughter, Vivian, pre-deceased her eighteen years ago, and a son and daughter died in their infancy. Two sisters, Mrs. Margaret McFadden of this city and Mrs. Mary Schenck of Seattle, Washington, also survive her.

The funeral will take place on Thursday morning at nine o'clock, when Solemn High Mass will be offered at St. Peter's Cathedral, thence to St. Peter's Cemetery for interment.

Newfoundland, the oldest of the British colonies, was originally bought for fifty dollars.

CAPITAL CITY SPECULATES ON TORIES' CHOICE

With Premier Ferguson Out, Contest Now Becomes Free-For-All.

YOUNGER ASPIRANTS.

Favorites Are Temporary Leader, Mr. Guthrie, Bennett and Drayton.

OTTAWA, August 23. — The definite announcement by Premier Ferguson that he will not be a candidate for the leadership of the Conservative party, amplified by the further statement that he will not be persuaded to change his mind, stimulates interest in the Winnipeg gathering next October. While all along there has been opposition in certain circles to Mr. Ferguson, the consensus of opinion had been that if he would accept it, the leadership would be his. The views entertained to that effect promised to interfere with the attendance as many would not travel so far to a convention if in advance its choice were more or less certain.

With Mr. Ferguson definitely out of the race—in fact, he never entered it—the effect is to make it somewhat of a free-for-all with no particular candidate in the conspicuous forefront, and the field pretty well bunched.

Bennett a Possibility.

Hon R. B. Bennett was supporting Mr. Ferguson, and expressing the view that, if he would accept—and there has always been doubt of that — he would get it by acclamation. Now, there is every reason to believe that Mr. Bennett himself will go after it strongly. He is very able; is a native of the Maritimes, represents the West, and has large interests in the east, especially Quebec. He has the equipment of experience and it is regarded as axiomatic that whoever is chosen, should not be a tyro in parliament.

Guthrie or Drayton.

While undoubtedly, the Ontario favorite was Mr. Ferguson, Conservatives of this province will incline to one of their own and two are to the front—Mr. Guthrie and Sir Henry Drayton. No doubt the temporary leader will be perfectly willing to stay, and his chances may improve with Mr. Ferguson's withdrawal.

Sir Henry Drayton is quiescent. He is not seeking the position, but probably he would not refuse it, and as already indicated many Ontario delegates will be strong for him.

Magrath and Cahan.

C. A. Magrath's name has been put forward and he has many qualifications, but it is extremely doubtful if he would enter any contest, and he is regarded as a possibility only if a dark horse should be selected.

For C. H. Cahan of Montreal, the Quebec support promises to be formidable. He is working hard, and while he is still a most virile figure, his age operates in some quarters against him. From the coast province Hon. H. H. Stevens will enlist considerable favor in any convention because he is a very hard and vigorous fighter.

Younger Aspirants.

There is no foretelling what a convention, made up of the laity of the party from all over, will do. For example, it is conceivable that the decision may be to go outside the Federal House, and select some young man Thus, J. T. Haig, M.L.A., of Winnipeg, imposes no objection to his name being mentioned, and quite a formidable body look with favor on Hon. G. S. Harrington of the Nova Scotia government, and others again upon Mr. McPherson, member for Regina in the Provincial House.

As usual many favorite sons will be nominated for the purpose of enabling them to voice their views and then announce their retirement. All sorts of conditions may develp between now and October and lead to the choice of someone else but so far as Conservative gossip here is any criterion the three most prominently in the foreground at present seem to be Mr Bennett, Mr. Guthrie and Sir Henry Drayton.

85 PER CENT. PASS AT CAMPBELLFORD

High School Makes Splendid Mark in Upper School Examinations.

In the Upper School results, published on page two of this issue, Campbellford High School maintained its usual high standard, 85 per cent. of the pupils being successful. In the Middle School examinations the percentage was 88. This is well over the average for the province, and shows careful work by the teachers, who also are able to arouse unusual interest among the scholars.

Dixie Stomp, Charleston's Newest Rival, Bids For Approval of Dancing Masters

NEW YORK, Aug. 24. — The Dancing Masters of America thronged the floor of the Grand Ballroom of the Waldorf yesterday and twirled gravely through the simple movements of old-fashioned one-steps and waltz rhythms. Boys of the Penrod Schofield generation, had they been concealed in the wings, might have recognized in the "one-two-three' chant of the master of ceremonies, the bugbear of their dancing school days.

Meanwhile Thomas Sheehy of Chicago, who was master of ceremonies on Sunday, the opening day of this year's convention of 150 dancing masters from all over the country, was thinking of the forthcoming exhibition of the Dixie Stomp dance, vigorous but graceful, that is being groomed to replace the Charleston and the Black Bottom. He, with Miss Bobby Tremaine, its other deviser, will demonstrate the intricacies of the Dixie Stomp before the convention closes on August 27.

Healthy persons, he said, like quick movement. The one-step type of dance, with its unadorned movements and quick tempo, would seem to fit itself into the people's desires.

The Charleston, termed of "doubtful origin" and called a "naughty child," is still going strong, it was explained, and has been sanctioned by masters for ballroom dancing. But not so the Black Bottom. "Any one who attempts a Black Bottom on the ballroom now is just gently edged off the floor by the other dancers," said Mr. Bott. He asserted that the brief period of grace accorded the Black Bottom in more questionable places had about run its course.

BAD WEATHER COMBINED TO DELAY FLIGHTS

No Trans-Atlantic Hop-Off Likely Until Week End.

FOUR PLANES.

The Weather Bureau Predicts Storms Between Coast and Mid-Ocean.

CURTISS FIELD, N.Y., Aug. 24 — (Canadian Press).—Fog, rain and wind from here to mid-ocean combined to make any trans-Atlantic hop-off until the week end extremely unlikely.

Four planes which hope before another month has passed to have traversed the air lane to Europe were kept in their hangars during the day.

Only one of the four is ready for the ocean hop, the monoplane Old Glory, but there seemed little likelihood that it would get away either today or the next day.

The other three are Rene Fonck's Ville De Paris, now being assembled; Edward F. Schlee's Pride of Detroit, scheduled to leave tomorrow for Harbor Grace, thence to fly to London on a race against time around the world, and the Canadian-owned Sir John Carling, here for instrument adjustments before attempting a flight from London, Ont., to London, England.

The weather bureau predicted fog, rain and winds of gale forces between here and mid-ocean for today and said that on Thursday this area would be under the influence of the tropical hurricane that was developing yesterday off the Georgian coast.

PLANE KILLS THREE.

LONDON, August 24. — United Press. — An Exchange Telegraph Despatch said three persons were killed and several injured when a military airplane made a forced landing near the village of Zilina, Czecho-Slavakia.

Broken Gas Gauge Necessitates Delay

SOUTHAMPTON, Aug. 28.—(Canadian Press).—A broken gasoline gauge, discovered at the last moment late yesterday, necessitated postponement of the hop-off of Captain Frank T. Courtney, British aviator who plans to fly to the United States by way of the Azores.

Captain Courtney and his two companions in the projected flight had donned their flying suits and the plane had been filled with gasoline when the broken gauge was discovered.

It is probable that the flight will have to be put off until Wednesday.

GREAT TENOR TO SING HERE

Edward Johnson, Successor to Caruso, Secured by Kiwanis Club.

FAME IS WORLD-WIDE

Edward, Johnson, Canadian successor to the great Caruso, has been secured by Kiwanis Club for a concert in Peterborough in September. This assures the music lovers of the city that the best of this season's programmes will be the first.

Still flushed with international honors and with the laurel wreaths of a world-triumph yet green on his brow, this son of Ontario is unspoiled. He has come home to devote this season out of the heighth of his successes to the people of his home province.

Many have heard Johnson through his radio concerts; some have travelled to Toronto to join in the gratified throngs at his Massey Hall appearances; but to all will come as an outstanding pleasure this visit to Peterborough. Those who do not know Edward Johnson surely have heard John McCormack—and McCormack himself an eminent tenor, says of Johnson: "He is the world's best." That tribute from the generous Irishman should be sufficient to pack the Grand Opera House with people eager to hear the still youthful Canadian upon whose shoulders has fallen the mantle of the Caruso whose name is still mentioned with awe.

PICK TOMATOES WHILE YET GREEN

Those to be Shipped Should Not Be Let Ripen Fully.

Great care should be taken in picking, handling and packing tomatoes, so as to ensure clean, sound, firm pink-mature fruit in the long distance pack. When the tomatoes are to be marketed locally they may be left on the vine until well matured, but for long distance shipment they should be packed before a high colour is attained because the tomato when ripe is very tender and easily crushed and bruised. Besides, according to a Dominion Department of Agriculture bulletin on Tomato Diseases, the too mature fruit readily falls a prey to fungi and bacteria, particularly if the car, during transit has a still, warm, humid atmosphere. On the other hand pink-matured fruit is not so tender and does not readily become infected, consequently arriving as its destination in good condition.

LAWYERS HEAR FINE ADDRESS BY PRESIDENT

Sir James Aikins Presides at Opening of Canadian Bar Association.

DUTIES OF PROFESSION.

Many Things Included in Upholding the Honor of the Bar.

TORONTO, Aug. 24 (CP) — The presidential address of Sir James Aikins, of Winnipeg, was the feature of this morning's session at the opening of the Canadian Bar Association's annual meeting. Distinguished guests from Great Britain and the United States were present, in company with jurists and lawyers from all parts of the Dominion.

The legal profession as a body ought to know itself and be conscious of its influence and strength of its capacity for public service, said Sir James Aikins in his address.

"Perhaps the most important branch or department of government nowadays is that of justice and its administration," Sir James said. "These are at their best only when their officers, the judges and lawyers, are of the most worthy and competent type.

"It has been pointed out to me, and I think correctly, that in my official addresses to you I have emphasized the duties of the lawyer rather than his rights; that they are correlated; that he knows his duty but that also he should be one of those who 'know their rights; and, knowing, dare maintain'."

The Honor of the Bar.

The honor of the bar, he continued, consisted not only in the application of fine ethics and ideals in the lawyers' daily work, but concerned itself with a multitude of other things of material importance to the profession. The honor was upheld, among other ways, by keeping the profession, whether on the bench, at the bar or in the office, at as high a standard as ever it attained. "a learned profession," clean and free from obnoxious members; by useful service not only in professional work but in leadership as citizens; by vigilantly and courageously resisting intrusions upon its functions and proper sphere of activities, by insisting upon protection of the law branch by the legislative and executive departments of government against such intrusions and against persons not qualified for legal work in all sections of the justice branch; and by requiring reasonable recompense for service rendered by judges and lawyers and included in that for the time, effort and capital spent in acquiring the expert and practical knowledge essential for the right practice and work of the profession and for the safety of the people.

It had been urged by such members, Sir James declared, that young men who are not dependable, whose habits are not good, whose bent will be to use the profession as a gainful occupation or for relatively sordid purposes, should not be approved as students of law or articled clerks. One should not begin study of law until correct habits of thinking, of industry and morals were fairly fixed in him. If applicants to study were not likely to prove qualified for the profession or to be honor to it, they should be checked at the beginning or as soon as inaptitude or unsuitability became manifest.

This had been suggested: a careful and real enquiry by official bodies through a person or committee, into the character of the proposing student; when once admitted to study closer contact between students and their principals or older lawyers; where it does not exist now a system of service under articles without which the student could not get the grounding or practical knowledge essential.

"Teaching and lectures in a law school or college established or approved by the provincial official law bodies are and should be supplemental to practical knowledge obtained through office work or court example," Sir James went on. "After call or admission to practice there should be vigilant insistence upon professional conduct and a disciplining of those who fail to observe it.

"Undoubtedly there should be greater social intercourse among lawyers, young and old, and law students through local clubs and voluntary societies which may well be encouraged by this association.

Legislatures Not Expert.

"Legislatures are the only power which can change established laws and bring them into closer step with modern social needs. They lack continuity, their membership is not as permanent as that of courts or organized law bodies. As few of them know fundamental law, their work in changing it is hazardous, not to themselves but to the people. They are not experts in it, but only amateurs, and their acts, too often crude and inartistic, run the

Hop-Off Postponed Until Thursday

PEWSEY, Eng., August 24.—(Canadian Press).—Captain Leslie Hamilton, who early in the day announced his readiness to start on his flight today from the Upavon Aerdrome for Ottawa, changed his mind tonight. He did not go to Uplaven, which is not far from here, but spent the night at Bristol, and the hop-off has been postponed until Thursday morning.

MANY TRAINING EARLY IN DAY FOR LONG SWIM

Lake Dotted With Contestants For Marathon Every Morning.

EVENT WEEK OFF.

Cable Being Made To Mark Off Course—Many Newspapermen Coming.

TORONTO, Aug. 24 (Canadian Press).—The eyes of the world will be on Toronto one week from today. Just one week and if all goes well a solitary swimmer will emerge from the chilly waters of Lake Ontario to be crowned the king of all long distance swimmers, with a prize of $30,000 in his or her grasp.

That Toronto's first venture in promoting long distance swimming events will be successful is a foregone conclusion. At the present time 423 swimmers have signified their intention of participating in the 31-mile marathon and more than two hundred newspapermen from all parts of Canada and the United States, have applied for reservations on the press boat. Airplanes have been chartered to rush motion pictures of the "Big Splash" to many points on the Continent; telegraph wires are being installed to carry their stories of prowess to the newspaper offices; boats of all description are on hand to follow the swimmers, and everything is all ready.

According to officials of the Canadian National Exhibition, sponsors of the swim, no serious opposition has developed against the proposal to lay floating cable supported by buoys on the lake to keep the course of the swim clear next Wednesday. The cable is now being made, but no work can begin on the laying of it before daylight on August 31—the day of the race.

A trip along the waterfront by a Canadian Press staff correspondent early this morning revealed that many of the swimmers are doing their training in the very early hours of the morning. The lake was dotted by boats, each one following their "hope" in the "Big Splash." The temperature of the water today was 61, not too cold but not too warm, either. The air was very cold, almost frosty, and as the swimmers emerged from the lake they shivered in the dawn breeze. Every one of them, however, was confident that he would win the event.

PHOTOS PASS THREE TESTS

To Decide Whether They Will Be Hung in Exhibit and Granted Further Honors.

FROM ROY STUDIO.

A display of three portrait photographs in the show window of the F. L. Roy Studio has been attracting a great deal of favorable comment. These were the only three entries made by Mr. Roy in the showing of pictures at the 46th annual convention of the International Photographers' Association of America, held in New York City on July 25th to 28th. As the rules are exceedingly rigid covering entries in the exhibition held annually in connection with this convention; it reflects great honor on the work of the Roy Studio that all entries were accepted. All prints submitted are passed first by a jury, to decide whether they will be hung. Then a second jury passes on them for a special display and a third honor is the highest mark of appreciation, when selections are made for a travelling loan exhibit assembled from the best photographs submitted from America.

All three of Mr. Roy's entries were accepted by the first and second juries, and placed in the special display class, while the third entry, a portrait study of Mr. Roy's boy, John Robert ("Sunny") taken at the age of three years and six months, was selected for the final and highest honor, the travelling loan exhibit. The other photographs are those of Miss Mathilde Masson, of this city, and of the five months' old granddaughter of Dr. and Mrs. M. A. Morrison, Nancy Joan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George M. Sterrett (Ethel Morrison) of Chatham, Ontario.

The three large photographs are done in "engraving black," a warm black tint, and are executed on thin paper with a parchment finish. They are at present on display in the Hunter Street show window of the Roy Studio.

IT'S STILL LAW.

BOSTON, Aug. 24.—No garment shall be made or sold with short sleeves. That was a law passed regarding women's dress in 1622 and still on the statute books. Legislators of that era added that no woman could wear a short-sleeved gown without proper covering of the arms.

Births Again Decline In England and Wales; Rate For 1926 Approaches 1918 Low Record

London, August 24 (Associated Press). — The spectre of "race suicide" has crept across the English Channel to haunt British social statisticians. The English and Welsh birth-rate for 1926 again has shown a decline, following the descending curve which has obtained since 1920, according to figures published by the Registrar-General. The rate for the calendar year was 17.8 per 100,000 of the population.

Against this the official report shows the death-rate of infants less than a year old was the lowest on record. Scotland experienced a higher birth-rate as well as a higher infant death-rate than England and Wales

The 1926 birth-rate tied that of 1917 and was barely higher than the 1918 rate of 17.7, the lowest on record for England and Wales. In France, where the low birth-rate for years has represented what is regarded as a grave national problem, the proportion for 1926 was 18.8 for each 100,000.

Cancer, heart disease, and tuberculosis of the respiratory system led the list as causes of death in England and Wales.

Women, the Registrar-General's report indicates, were far more agile in dodging motor vehicles and in avoiding fatal accidents generally than were men. Also, the number of women who committed suicide was less than half the number of men who met death by their own hands. The suicide figures were: Males, 3,093; females, 1,350. Accidental deaths: Males, 9,531; females, 4,274.

Coast Hurricane Delays Ocean Hop

COLOGNE, Germany, Aug. 24. —(Canadian Press)—A hurricane reported off the American east coast yesterday again compelled Lieutenant Otto Koennecke to postpone his hopoff on his trans-Atlantic flight. Koennecke has requested the Washington weather bureau to keep him advised on Eastern Atlantic conditions.

STORE CLOSED TO AMERICANS

Geneva Sympathizers of Sacco and Vanzetti Take Drastic Action.

RIOTING IN PARIS.

GENEVA, Aug. 24 (Canadian Press).—Police charges and streams of water were required to force back crowds of demonstrators who gathered to shout imprecations against the United States last night because of the execution of Sacco and Vanzetti.

One motion picture theatre bore an illuminated sign last night, "Closed because of mourning." A big store raised a sign reading, "As protest against American injustice, no American purchaser will be served here."

Heavy Damage in Paris

PARIS, Aug. 24 (Canadian Press). —Paris is taking stock today of the damage wrought by infuriated Radicals in an orgy of destruction last night after they were baffled in attempts to stage demonstrations against the execution of Sacco and Vanzetti on the great boulevards and around the United States Embassy.

It is estimated that before the disturbances were brought to an end by a heavy storm soon after midnight, thousands of dollars worth of property was wrecked. Ten policemen were badly hurt by knife thrusts and fifty others received slight injuries. How many manifestants were injured is not known, but the number is believed to be considerable.

American Flag Burned.

JOHANNESBURG South Africa, August 24. United Press. — To the tense strains of the Internationale, the Communists burned an American flag on the steps of the city hall as a protest against the execution of Sacco-Vanzetti.

Will Continue Fight Keep Open Gateways

HALIFAX, N.S., Aug. 24 (Canadian Press). — The Maritime Freight Rates Committee will continue their fight to keep open the gateways at Saint John, N.B., and St. Rosalie, Que., for the interchange of traffic between the different railway systems at those points. A decision to this effect was reached at a meeting of the committee held in the Board of Trade Rooms here yesterday afternoon. The Saint John Board of Trade was represented by A. P. Patterson, J. D. McKenna and F. McL. Solanders.

BALDWIN'S TRIP HAS INCREASED HOME PRESTIGE

Premier's Supporters Pleased at Results of Visit to Canada.

PRAISED BY OPPONENTS.

Lifted Him From Realm of Politics Into Empire Statesmanship.

LONDON, Aug. 24.—(United Press.) —Tory headquarters are rejoicing at Premier Baldwin's success in Canada and are convinced that his prestige in Britain has risen, because his Canadian tour is unanimously praised by the Liberal and Conservative newspapers which are habitually critical of him and his policy.

The Prime Minister's supporters feel that the trip came at the most appropriate time, as it served to keep his name in the limelight during the dead political season and lifted him out of the political fray, where personalities abound, into that realm of Empire statesmanship where Baldwin's real ability had every opportunity of revealing itself.

Tory headquarters are also pleased at the Imperial significance of the trip, believing that Baldwin has now established the rule that British Premiers should visit the Dominions to bind further the ties of Empire.

Premier Reaches France.

CHERBOURG, France, Aug. 24. — (Canadian Press Cable, via Reuter's). — Premier Stanley Baldwin, Mrs. Baldwin and party arrived to-day from their visit to Canada. On the return voyage Mr. and Mrs. Baldwin kept to their cabins a good deal of the time. Premier Baldwin, in talking to newspapermen here, dwelt on the strong impression of Canadian loyalty which he had received during the tour of the Dominion's provinces.

JAPAN PLANS NON-STOP HOP TO THE STATES

Whole Year Believed Needed To Build Plane and Prepare.

BEHIND IN AVIATION.

Record For Continuous Flying Is Only Eleven Hours.

TOKIO, Aug. 24. — The latest American successes in non-stop trans-Pacific flights have stimulated Japanese interest in aviation and efforts are being made to launch tangible preparations for a Japanese attempt next year. It is considered that the chances of such a flight taking place or of Japanese airmen or machines being ready for it within twelve months are small.

The decisive facts are that Japan possesses no airplane capable of making the journey and has no pilot, civil, military or naval, with the necessary skill and technical ability. A foreign plane might be bought, but public opinion realizes that half the honor would be lost by such a proceeding.

The status of aviation in Japan is correctly reflected by the fact that Japan's record for continuous flying is only eleven hours, while two hours is the record for night flying.

The best Japanese achievement hitherto, and the only one of international note, is the 1925 flight to London via Siberia made by two civilian fliers. The flight was promoted by the newspaper Asahi and proved a most economical method of obtaining publicity. Czarist drill grounds furnished landing places all across Siberia and only one landing place, in the Urals had to be specially prepared.

The Asahi still leads in aerial enterprise by maintaining twelve planes for service between its Osaka and Tokio offices. Apart from that, civil aviation scarcely exists in Japan.

Military Progress Carefully Guarded

An air service between Tokio and Karuizawa, a Summer mountain resort, was started a few days ago but so far the only passengers carried have been a quantity of fresh fish and one Japanese reporter. Naval and military aviation is efficient on a modest scale, but that information is carefully guarded.

Whatever the reason may be, the Japanese people appear to be behind the rest of the world in interest in aviation. Spurts of temporary enthusiasm appear from time to time, but invariably in response to stimulus from abroad.

Art Smith, a young American flier, in 1916 gave such a brilliant display of stunt flying that the public was aroused, but interest speedily died down. In 1919 a French mission came out to instruct the Japanese Army and in 1921 a British mission performed the same service for the navy.

Recently Commander Nobile brought a new dirigible here for the Japanese Government.

All these events aroused momentary enthusiasm and Colonel Lindbergh's flight stirred the public deeply. Young patriots wrote letters signed with their blood drawn from cut fingers demanding that a trans-Pacific flight be made for the honor of Japan, but this enthusiasm faded as quickly as it arose.

Lay Plans for Flight

The latest movement is sponsored by the Imperial Aviation Society and is serious in its intention. A committee comprising representatives of the Foreign, Navy and War offices, aviation schools, the Meterological Observatory of the Imperial University, the principal newspapers and airplane makers is to be nominated by Baron Sakatani, President of the Imperial Aviation Society, to make preparations. These will begin with raising funds and ultimately designs for Japanese-built machines will be submitted. Ten Japanese airmen who have flown more than 1,000 hours are available when the time comes to choose a pilot.

Lately several leading business men have taken an interest in a project to float an imperial aerial transport company to promote commercial flying, but its plans are still incomplete.

Among the reasons advanced to explain Japan's backwardness are: First, that Japanese airmen have plenty of courage but lack the initiative and that enthusiasm for the art of flying which characterizes Lindbergh, Chamberlin and Erwin.

Secondly, the Japanese are "unmechanical" and lack "engine sense." For example, they often fail to notice when their motor starts missing.

Thirdly, official regulations hamper practice, for the air above Japan is said to be unusually tricky, thin and full of holes of variable quality.

Those facts reveal how much remains to be done before a Japanese airman can wing his way to Seattle.

The favorite cat of Susuhunan of Surakarta, a wealthy Javanese prince, died recently and was accorded a costly funeral with 24 pallbearers.

She is being held pending the outcome of an investigation with regard to her husband's cheque passing activities.

ACCIDENTAL DEATH VERDICT OF JURY

Inquest Into Death of Quebec Youth Who Was Kicked By Horse.

SHERBROOKE, Que., Aug. 24. —(Canadian Press).—A verdict of accidental death was returned by the coroner's jury at an inquest into the death of Albert Buteau, 9-year-old son of Mr. Octave Buteau, of Lake Megantic, who was instantly killed on Saturday afternoon last when he was kicked in the head by a horse.

The youngster was visiting his uncle, M. Bernard, a farmer of the Eleventh Range. While riding one of the horses he met some friends, who frightened the animal to such an extent that it became unmanageable and the Buteau boy was thrown off. His foot became caught in the harness, and while hanging head downward the young lad was struck by one of the horse's hoofs, causing instant death.

The boy's friends were given a severe talking to by the coroner.

LABORITES DASH REPUBLICANS' HOPE

Will Not Back De Valera For Presidency For Free State.

LONDON, August 24.—Eamon De Valera's hopes of becoming President of the Free State executive council have been dashed by the announcement of Tom Johnson, parliamentary leader of the Irish Labor party, that the Laborites would not use their vote to put him in power.

Some assert that President Cosgrave might put De Valera in just to force the situation, but this is not taken seriously because of the financial harm Ireland would suffer.

Meanwhile, all Ireland is awaiting the result of the two by-elections and speculating when the general election will come, even if Cosgrave wins the seats.

He has been mentally examined since his last arrest.

FIRST MINISTER GIVES ADDRESS

Rev. Hugh Brown Preaches in Knox Church Havelock.

ORDAINED THERE.

HAVELOCK, Aug. 24.—The congregation of Knox Presbyterian Church had the pleasure of having Rev. Hugh Brown, of Toronto, the first minister of the church, conduct the evening service on Sunday. Mr. Brown was ordained in Knox Church nearly forty years ago, and there are still quite a number in the congregation who were associated with him in the work in the early days.

Mr. Brown expressed pleasure in being able to again occupy the pulpit of his first charge. He said: "From the day I left Havelock I have never forgotten the Havelock congregation, and I remember as yesterday the day I knelt before this pulpit and took the vows of ordination. It was to me the most solemn hour of my life, and the solemnity has never left me."

He recalled that when he was ordained that the late Rev. Mr. Carmichael, of Norwood, was moderator and had charge of the service, and that the Rev. Mr. McWilliams, of St. Andrew's Church, Peterborough, preached the sermon.

Mr. Brown chose for his text John 17, verse 17, "Sanctify them through Thy truth: Thy word is truth."

"My text tonight," he said, "is the prayer that I offer to God on behalf of this congregation. This prayer is the most important in all the word of God. Search from Genesis to Revelation and you will not find any prayer of so much importance as this because Jesus is the suppliant, and it was the night He suffered so much in the garden.

"At this extremely solemn moment Jesus is not thinking of Himself, although He knew of the terrible death He was soon to face. He is thinking of the disciples, knowing that they were weak in the flesh."

In the previous chapters, the speaker said that Jesus had counselled the disciples to remain steadfast in the truth, and He also looks into the future and arranges His discourse so that it is just as much adapted to the people of today as it was then.

Mr. Brown divided the text into two parts, namely, sanctification and the means of it. "Sanctification," he continued, "means consecrated or set apart unto God. Sanctification is not a thing that is stationary. It begins at conversion and goes on through life until death when it is perfected, and the means of sanctification is God's word. To make men holy is to teach them God's word, showing them what they are by nature and what they can be by being consecrated to God's service. Jesus does not pray on behalf of His disciples only, but on behalf of all who put their trust in Him.

"If the word of God is to be the means of sanctification," the speaker continued, "we must apply it. We must read that we may learn. It is not to be read as we read other books, chapter after chapter, book after book, and then put it on a shelf, never looking at it again. But if only a clause is read, each day, earnestly and prayerfully, seeking the guidance of the Holy Spirit, it will become the means of sanctification."

In closing Mr. Brown said: "My earnest prayer is that as the days go by you will take the word of God as a lamp unto your path, and that God will take that truth of His and make it the means of your sanctification. If we never meet again on this earth may we who have been made white in the blood of the lamb meet where parting is no more."

WINNIPEG WHEAT.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 24 (Canadian Press).—Despite reports of frost in Manitoba and two points in Saskatchewan, the price of wheat broke 1⅛ to 1½ cents on the Winnipeg Grain Exchange yesterday. October delivery was in the weakest position.

Bear traders were undaunted by the unfavorable weather map in the Canadian West, and continued to press the sale of wheat. One large Canadian firm was credited with heavy unloading, while locals were selling freely. Buying support developed from houses with seaboard connections, but these purchases were not sufficient to take the slack out of the market.

Oats and flax slumped in sympathy with wheat, but barley and rye met with strong demand to score fractional gains.

WARSAW LADIES RE-ORGANIZE AID

Presbyterian Society is Headed by Mrs. Munro for Next Year.

WARSAW, Aug. 24.—The Presbyterian Ladies' Aid reorganized on Wednesday afternoon. The officers are: President, Mrs. Munro; vice-president, Mrs. Thomas Crowe; secretary, Miss Gwendolyn McQualg; Treasurer, Miss Helen Douglas and Misses Mary Rose and Hazel Russel; Flower Committee. The ladies decided that they would dispense with lunches. The next meeting will be held at Mrs. John Tucker's home, and will be a quilting.

The Sunday evening service in the United Church was conducted by four Salvation Army officers. The church was full of interested people. The regular choir was in attendance and there were two instrumentalists and a soloist who sang well. The music delighted the audience, and the congregational singing was splendid. The officer in charge read the 51st Psalm and gave a very inspiring address which was understood by all.

MANY THRESHING FOR BARN ROOM

WARSAW, Aug. 24.—The threshing mills are busy and quite a bit of work is being done outside, as there are quite heavy crops. Others are threshing half a day for room.

Friday's and Sunday's rains were local showers, though some of these showers were downpours, and but a short distance away there was no rain.

The grass on shallow land was quite dry before the rains. Still there is abundance of good pasture.

The catches for next year's meadows are good.

SHE IS IN THE BIG WATER MARATHON

Here is probably the most diminutive of the 400 entries for the C.N.E. $50,000 swim in Lake Ontario, August 31. She is Mary Agnes Carr of Syracuse, N.Y. Mary is a pretty little blonde, 19 years old, five feet tall and weights only 112 pounds. She says she has often swum in water 50 degrees in temperature and doesn't think Lake Ontario will bother her. She has covered 12 miles in Owasco Lake in 7½ hours. She entered the Lake George swim, and swam 13¼ miles in the Central Adirondacks lakes in 8 hours and 10 minutes.

BRITISH URGE WITHDRAWALS OF SOLDIERS

Say Allies Promised To Free Two More German Zones.

FRENCH DISAGREE.

Won't Bring Troops Out of the Rhine Territory Without Guarantees.

LONDON, August 24. United Press. —The conflict of opinion between Great Britain and France over the question of reduction in the occupation troops stationed in the Rhineland, although "smoke screened" by the government, is nevertheless admitted to be acute.

The British are frankly asking whether Locarno has any meaning, and whether France intends to honor the promises made to Germany.

In this connection it is asserted here that a promise was made to Germany in November, 1925, that the troops in two more zones would be reduced following the evacuation of the Cologne zone.

The French, however, maintain, that there was no promise, and they therefore refuse to reduce the number of their troops without further guarantees.

TEXTILE INDUSTRY HAS GREAT ASSETS

Has More Than Seven Million Pounds Invested in Australia.

It is safe to assert that well over half a million pounds sterling has been invested since that time in the same class of assets in the same industry. These figures refer only to the fixed assets belonging to those mills or companies which have been incorporated. No account has been taken of the many small concerns engaged in the manufacture of hosiery and other small goods, and owned and operated by individuals. Of these there are many, and their fixed assets have been valued by those interested at £1,000,000 sterling.

The values of the same assets held by allied textile industries, such as dyers, bleachers, wool scourers, etc., are omitted from this consideration. This is the case also in the instances of the manufacturers of garments from textile fabrics, although they fairly may be classed as part of the great textile industry.

The total quoted is made up as follows:

Woollen and tweed mills—
Land and buildings.....	£1,659,446
Plant and machinery....	£3,247,602
Hosiery and knitting mills—
Land and buildings.....	£1,071,792
Plant and machinery.....	£1,042,372
Cotton mills—
Land and buildings.....	£ 171,826
Plant and machinery.....	£ 223,557
	£7,416,296

The yearly outturn from these establishments—still omitting the smaller concerns referred to above — is shown by the Government Statist as £10,872,060. This is equivalent to, roughly, £1 13s 4d per unit—man, woman, and child—of our most lately calculated population.

Consider with this the facts that our imports of textiles for the eleven months of 1926-1927 ended May were valued for customs and statistical purposes at £39,739,657, and the possibilities of expansion in the Australian textile industry is immediately apparent. Making no provision for the great increase in our population—which is patent and likely to improve rather than cease—and making liberal allowance for continuance of the importation of goods which cannot be produced here, we can claim, without being charged as romancing or exaggerating, that the present values of fixed assets are sure to be increased in the near future by 200 per cent. Here is promise of trade for makers of textile machinery.

We must not lose sight of the valuable work done by pioneers and earlier manufacturers, who had to combat ignorance and governmental apathy. To them be all praise and honour. They had to contend with the disbelief which consumers held of the capacity of Australians to make satisfactory fabrics. This disbelief, unfortunately, is not yet entirely eradicated. It dies hard, but it is dying surely.

To-day, thanks to the protection afforded by the tariff, the industry is growing apace. Manufacturers are progressive in the conduct of their business, and are not tardy in setting aside old methods and machinery and replacing them with the best of the latest.

In this, as in most other of the activities of this young nation, its progress is at the flood. Those who breast its tide now will find themselves, in accordance with the promise of the old quotation, led on to fortune.—The Textile Journal of Australia.

HURONIC ASHORE.

Northern Navigation Boat On Mud Bank Near Sarnia.

SARNIA, Ont., August 24. Canadian Press. — The Steamer Huronic, of the Northern Navigation Company, ran ashore on a mud bank in Mud Lake yesterday according to advices received here. The vessel was still in the mud to-day despite efforts of tugs to release her.

The Huronic has a hundred passengers aboard but they are not held to be in any danger.

It is understood the ship drifted on the bank while the crew was at lifeboat drill.

Kirkland Lake Stocks Have All Gone Up

(Special from The Financial Post Mining Syndicate.)

This weekly article is not designed to give market tips, but its very nature makes it a guide for investors. This is but a prelude to recounting the fact that on several occasions in this dispatch, the possibilities of the leading Kirkland Lake stocks have been stressed. Many observers have been contending that they were too high. Our studied opinion was that they would go higher. Since the first rather extensive article was written on Kirkland Lake on May 16, the market history of the three leaders can be summarized as follows:

Stock.	Level May 16.		Present Level
Lake Shore	20.40 to 20.50		22.25 to 22.50
Teck Hughes	7.90	8.05	9.25 9.30
West Hargreaves	6.10	6.15	6.40 6.45
Kirkland Gold	1.42	1.46	1.95 2.00

These stocks have not as yet discounted all the good news that is coming from them. It is true that the yield from the first three, which are on a dividend basis, is negligible. That is the case with most of the leading mining stocks of Northern Ontario, and will continue to be so until the possibilities of the industry become more apparent and one can sit down with pencil and paper, as is about the case on the Rand in South Africa, and figure out just the possibilities of a property in the way of profits and return of capital. Lake Shore directors are meeting, and some interesting information will likely come out soon. The company will likely announce that the mill is to be increased to either 1,500 or 2,000 tons daily. Figuring on the low estimate for 300 days yearly and on a basis of $9 per ton profit which is an estimate that the mine can easily maintain, this would work out to around 9 per cent on the present market valuation of the shares. Meanwhile Teck Hughes is tuning up the second half of the first unit of its high grade mill. This will give 300 tons production of high grade besides the production of the old mill and already work is going ahead on another 300 ton unit. It is not quite as easy to figure the possible production of this mine, but the ore on the new 19th level is equal in grade to that on the higher levels and is 100 feet wide. This will give the mine four new levels, 16, 17, 18 and 19, on which lateral work will be immediately launched.

The new move in Wright Hargreaves is due to the fact that the mill has been stepped up to 600 tons daily and will be increased further. Meanwhile the new hoist has arrived and the company will now be in a position to free the mine of some of its ore and push ahead development. Only recently Wright Hargreaves picked up the extension of the Lake Shore vein and is now persuing its development, with high grade ore showing in it as far as it has been opened on the 1,500-foot level.

There are reports of better things for Tough Oakes, as it is understood that London interests have advanced enough money to carry out the development program proposed by Manager Alan Stuart.

The Hollinger situation is puzzling many. This leader broke down this week to $16.50 or over $6 below the recent high level. A reassuring statement was made by President N. A. Timmins, but it told nothing and was not such a statement as the situation that had developed warranted. However, pressure is being brought to get the facts for the shareholders. Some rumors would leave the impression that the mine is not what many believe. Our information on this score is that the mine is looking well, and that the break in the shares, has seemingly been engineered as a market play. The secrecy which has surrounded developments has made this possible.

Generally trading in the market shares is close to the peak of a full market. Trading is well distributed, with the Quebec shares still in the ascendency. Towagamac is shaping up exceptionally well as is also Abana. Abana is cutting ore on the 300-foot level and it looks like a winner. Amulet is at the stage now when it is a question of how big a mine it will be. Diamond drilling has indicated ore seams of great length. Area is not as yet working to pick up the extensions and moves in the market are the result of manipulation to try and take advantage of the good Amulet news.

Firm Undertone To-day In Spite Of Oil Weakness

NEW YORK, Aug. 24 (Canadian Press).—The stock market displayed a firm undertone today in the face of unfavorable trade news and renewed weakness of the oil shares. Pools succeeded in lifting about a score of specialties to new high prices, but hesitancy developed in United States Steel Common, General Motors, and some of the other recent leaders. Trading was moderately heavy in volume although little public interest was apparent at the leading commission houses.

The weekly steel trade reviews report little change in production and demand, with prices holding fairly steady. United States Steel Common ran into considerable profit taking around 140, but offerings generally were well absorbed. Bethlehem, which is expected to resume dividends within the next few months, attained another new high record.

Establishment of a new high record by Baldwin was accompanied by unconfirmed reports that Arthur E. Cutten of Chicago and two representatives of the Fisher Brothers of Detroit would be elected to the board of directors at tomorrow's meeting. In the motor group, Packard and Nash were lifted to new tops on what appeared to be pool buying.

Better Weather Causes Wheat Prices To Ease Off

CHICAGO, Aug. 24 (Canadian Press).—Better weather conditions in Canada and an easier tone at Winnipeg were reflected in the wheat market here today during early dealings. Support was only fair and the market eased off after the opening. Starting unchanged to ⅛c down, wheat later declined a little more. Corn was slightly easier at the start on the failure of predicted frost to materialize. Opening unchanged to ⅛c down, corn subsequently suffered a further drop. Oats showed independent strength and provisions were firm.

Opening prices were: Wheat, September 1.40⅝, December 1.44½. Corn, September 1.12¼, December 1.16⅜. Oats, September 46⅞, December 50⅝.

Laval Quebec Loses Part Of Recent Gains

TORONTO, Aug. 24 (Canadian Press)—Laval Quebec lost some of its recent gains when in heavy trading on the Standard Mining Exchange this morning, it sold down more than five points at 40. Other stocks tended to lower levels in trading that, while much quieter than yesterday, was still almost double the average volume. Dome Mines eased forty points at 8.35 and Hollinger 25 at 17.50. Area eased two at 74, but Amulet firmed five at 495. Central Manitoba joined in the general easy movement with an eleven point loss at 191. Noranda was a firm feature with a 15-point advance at 24.25.

Former Quiet Stocks Take Lead At Toronto

TORONTO, Aug. 24 (Canadian Press).—Substantial gains were recorded by hitherto quiet features of the Toronto Stock Exchange list in heavy trading today, but the active leaders in the oils and liquor stocks ended easier. Alberta Pacific Grain in heavy dealings climbed more than three points at 28½, and City Dairy advanced 4½ points at 150. Smelters went up more than four at 240, and Loblaw was three higher at 61. British American Oil, after an active morning, lost a quarter at 26¾, while Nickel touched 69⅝ and then sold down to 68, unchanged. Imperial Oil at 49¼ was easier. Carling and McColl were steady, while Walkers firmed ⅜ at 49½.

Lady Loses Part of Strip Ticket; Has to Pay Part of Fare Twice

Not without a moral is the experience of a young lady, a native of Peterborough, travelling to her native city from New York. Trusting entirely to the vigilance and accuracy of the trainmen of the railways of two countries, she paid little attention to their actions as they detached various portions of the long ticket roll which she presented on demand. On boarding the train at Toronto, she was disagreeably surprised to find that by mistake the portions of her ticket entitling her to travel from the Queen City to Peterborough had been taken by one of the officials. The result was that she had to pay a second fare from Toronto, in addition to having a great deal of worry. A refund was granted to her on application to the head office, but the moral is obvious: See that the trainman takes only that which he is entitled to take.

An English Style Semi-Bungalow

(By Arthur E. Cubbidge, Architect.)

The last few years have witnessed great advancements in many spheres, but few are of more importance to the average man than the development of true comfort, beauty, and efficiency, in the home.

Ownership of a little house such as that here illustrated is the goal toward which thousands of people now aspire. They wish nothing more pretentious; realizing that efficiency and comfortable coziness are apt to suffer, while the type of simple beauty exemplified by this little bungalow is practically impossible to attain in larger houses.

Although an exceptionally small floor area is occupied by the hall it is skillfully arranged to form the pivotal centre of this highly efficient plan.

Notice how conveniently the tiled bathroom may be reached from each bedroom, the ease of communication between the kitchen and the stairs or front door, and we have but started to realize the advantage which this plant affords.

Throughout the house the floors are of oak or maple, but the treatment of the walls and ceilings has been left to the owner's taste and discretion.

On the attic floor are two good sized bedrooms and a linen closet, while provision is also made for a future additional bathroom. This whole floor, of course, could be finished as finances permitted should such a procedure appear desirable.

The construction is sound and enduring, and comprises concrete foundations; white stucco walls, and red slate shingle roof. These last two materials contrast yet harmonize in a very attractive manner.

This house was actually built on a 60-foot lot, but with its overall width of 38 ft. 6 ins. it is obvious that 50 ft. would be ample.

With hot water heating this home cost approximately $4,800, exclusive of lot.

Readers desiring further information regarding the plans and specifications of this house should communicate with the architects direct. Address Mr. Arthur E. Cubbidge, 406 Boyd Bldg., Winnipeg, Manitoba.

PLAYING FROM MEMORY

Has Become Fashion at Concerts Since Mendelssohn's Time.

Not long ago an eminent pianist surprised an audience by carrying on to the platform and placing before him on the piano a copy of a new work which he was to play. Public and critics both made their remarks about it, some thinking it was a sign of weakness, others commending it as a wise precaution. Yet less than a hundred years ago it was exactly the other way about. To-day the longest and most difficult concertos are played, by famous artistes and by beginners alike, entirely from memory, in our grandparents' time, the shortest pieces were scarcely played without the copy.

Mendelssohn was one of the first to adopt the new method, and comments were made as to his cleverness and his foolishness, and on the part of some of his critics as to his conceit, in playing works such as his own Songs Without Words and Schubert's Impromptus without the copy. To-day there are even a number of conductors who conduct long concerts and operas entirely from memory.

Schiller expected to make the trip in six hours.

THURSDAY LAST DAY OF SEARCH

Hope For Safety of Seven Aviators is Fast Disappearing.

MISSING A WEEK.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 24 (Canadian Press)—A woman and four men—seven days lost at sea—two more days of search.

Hope for the missing Dole race fliers, Miss Mildred Doran, John "Auggy" Pedlar, Lieut. V. R. Knoppe, Jack Frost, and Gordon Scott, who left Oakland airport for Hawaii a week ago today, glimmered wanly on the seventh day of silence.

Chances were as faint for the recovery of Capt. William Erwin and A. H. Eichwaldt, who flew out of the airport on Friday in search of their missing companions and were believed to have crashed into the sea after sending out a frantic SOS on their radio.

In the face of a discouraging report from forty-two submarines, destroyers, airplane carriers, and their searching eyes, ever flashing a colorless, laconic "Nil, Nil, Nil" periodically by radio, came word that fifteen additional destroyers and one light cruiser had been ordered to join the search with the idea of scrutinizing the uncovered sea area before the falling of the "zero hour" tomorrow, when the search will be abandoned by the navy.

LAWYERS HEAR

gauntlet of interpretation and construction by courts and lawyers before they are put right, usually at the expense of some unfortunate litigant. Let it be clearly understood that I am not reflecting on ministers of justice, attorneys general or other lawyers in legislatures. These are giving excellent service, when as opportunity arises their qualities as professional men are invoked; but primarily they are politicians and at best can only give intermittent attention to constructive law enactments for legal order. Accordingly legislatures more than courts need the help of the profession, an experienced advising legal body.

"Notwithstanding that the professions as organized bodies have been willing to serve the people by inquiry and advice in the solution of problems on subjects with which they are conversant, public governments during the last half century ignored them for that work and seem to have had an obsession in creating and organizing commissions to enquire into all classes of ills, individual, social and political, local and national, and to suggest or provide remedies; commissions to supervise or operate public utilities; commissions on education, on health and hygiene; commissions about law and administration of the law, criminal and civil. When has any Canadian government asked the advice or assistance of the medical profession as a body in problems of hygiene; when the school teachers' societies or the association of university professors on matters of general education; when the governing bodies of the legal profession on subjects of legislation and law and its enforcement? And yet all of these organizations are sufficiently public-spirited to gladly and freely give their services for the benefit of the people.

Grave Danger.

"One of the gravest dangers in the exercise of legislative authority is from the carefully planned pressure upon well intentioned but uninformed and inexperienced representatives of the people by organized classes and groups of all kinds urging their own self-interests regardless of the rights of others or of what will be for the benefit of the public generally, actuated perhaps by the aphoric motive, "the devil take the hindermost." Unless vigilant the profession as well as the public may suffer by such pressure on all sides."

The Canadian profession, Sir James asserted, must act collectively. The association, containing 2400 members among the practising profession, among the judges 190, had the strength. As an organized group they were interested in the political government of the country but were not partisan, representing in membership different racial origins but in nationality only devoted Canadian.

A few facts in the profession's history, beginning with the 17th century were cited by the president to indicate the persistent struggle that had been made to establish the system of administering the law, and of doing its useful and expert work through the courts.—"a truly British system rooted a thousands years ago improved through the passing centuries.

"If the final decision on Canadian constitutional questions is to be by the supreme court of Canada, may we expect a result different from that which took place in the United States?" asked the speaker, "namely, the constant augmentation of power of the Dominion and a diminishing of that of the provinces, an encroachment on their rights?" The problem was one much talked of by the profession in all parts of Canada. It was intimately connected with another question: "Will it not be in the best interests of all to have constitutional interpretation made by an Empire Court which is not appointed or paid by or in the immediate environment of one of the parties interested?"

Sir James said the questions were brought up for the consideration of the delegates for concerted action if they thought proper. On these questions he was expressing no definite conclusions or ex cathedra opinions.

LINCOLN SAW HER WED.

ANDERSON, Ind., Aug. 24.—Sixty-five years ago a bewildered couple of elopers called at the White House to inquire where they could be married. President Lincoln, upon hearing of them, produced a minister and he and Mrs. Lincoln served as witnesses. The bride now is Mrs. Elizabeth Chandler, who told of the marriage on a recent anniversary.

SALMON RUN IS VERY SMALL

Fishing Along Pacific Coast May Be Closed During Fall.

TO PROTECT INDUSTRY.

VANCOUVER, B.C., August 24 (Canadian Press). — Gill net fishing for "pink" salmon in all British Columbia waters north of Howe Sound may be stopped by the Dominion authorities at the end of this week for a period of two weeks or more. The run of pinks, it is reported, has been so small this season that fears are expressed that the future of the industry is threatened.

ALASKA FINDS SHORTAGE.

JUNEAU, Alaska, August 24 (Canadian Press). — Henry O'Malley, Commissioner of the United States Bureau of Fisheries, announced yesterday he had recommended that the fall fishing for salmon between September 14 and October 14 be closed this year due to the small run of fish.

IN POLICE COURT.

Fines of $5.00 each were imposed on four local residents who pleaded guilty to driving cars after dark without lights or with less than two in front and one at the rear, as called for by the Highway Traffic Act.

Carl Harrison was fined $25.00 and costs for reckless driving, the charge arising out of a collision between his car and Ald. Walter Stocker's, at the corner of George and Townsend streets, on July 28th.

Evidence of the collision was given by W. J. Henry, Ross Dobbin and John Lawne.

The two latter stated they were riding on the running boards of Mr. Stocker's car when the accident happened. All three considered Mr. Harrison was travelling at an excessive speed. Mr. Henry declared that the impact turned up the footboard of Mr. Stocker's car, and prevented the opening of the door until Mr. Dobbin opened it from the outside. He did not know of anything that would obstruct Mr. Harrison's view of Mr. Stocker's car.

Chief Newhall called to the witness stand, stated that following the usual practice of the police in similar cases, he interviewed Mr. Harrison while Inspector Reid questioned Mr. Stocker.

Mr. Harrison, he said, was listed in the police book as a careless driver. Asked to explain, Chief Newhall said that a list was kept of motorists who were warned by the police for careless driving.

Pressed by Mr. McElderry the Chief replied that Mr. Stocker was not on the list. "Will he be on after this case?" "That depends on the Magistrate's finding."

Witness stated that the police would not have allowed any person to ride on the running board. Any man seen doing so would be taken off by the police.

As the chief stepped down from the witness stand His Worship humorously asked: "Now, that is over. Have you got my name on the list of careless drivers?" The Chief did not say that he had—neither did he say that he hadn't!

Carl Harrison, taking the stand on his own behalf, said that he was not driving at any more than 15 or 18 miles an hour. Had he been driving at an excessive speed, he declared, his heavy 7-passenger McLaughlin would have knocked the light Ford coupe of Mr. Stocker's into the creek at Townsend street.

Arnold Deyell, who was driving behind Harrison, said that his speed all the way down was from 15 to 18 miles an hour. He and Harrison both said that they saw Ald. Stocker's car come out apparently from behind another car.

V. J. McElderry, for the defence, submitted that Mr. Stocker had been negligent and that a dismissal would be in order.

Joseph Wearing, for the prosecution, pointed out that the law called for a speed not greater than ten miles an hour across such intersections.

Weather conditions are very bad here. M. Bokanowski will make the journey to Toronto by rail if he can not fly.

HASTINGS PLANS A RINK.

The proposal of Hastings citizens to build a rink for hockey and curling should not present any serious difficulty if it is undertaken with the determination shown by the people of Lakefield and Stirling.

In both these villages the rinks immediately became community centres during the long winter seasons and have abundantly realized the expectations of their promoters.

The cost of constructing the Stirling rink had been nearly paid off last winter in its second season, and thus becomes a financial as well as a social asset to the community. And this community is not only the residents of the village itself, but of the countryside for miles around.

The fathers of Hastings owe it to their children to provide an adequate, enclosed rink, and at the same time to include accommodation for their own curling club. George B. Stevenson is one of the Hastings men who have been actively interested in the discussion of this project. At Lakefield or Stirling he will find communities that will urge Hastings to fall in line with them.

THOUGHTS FROM ABROAD.

Apart entirely from the question as to the guilt or innocence of Sacco and Vanzetti, the repercussions of the executions, felt in practically every white nation on the face of the globe, emphasize the increasing interrelation of the various peoples of the world.

Internationalism has become a real and vital force.

It is safe to say, that the Communists, for example, have more in common with extreme radicals in other countries than with the mass of their compatriots at home.

The same is true, no doubt in a much lesser degree, of numerous other groups with representatives in most countries. Tariff walls and national boundaries are impotent to prevent the flow of ideas and ideals from one country to another.

No nation lives unto itself. Never at any time in the world's history was this truth more clearly recognized.

That is why people everywhere look with anxiety on the total collapse of law and order in Russia. That also is the reason why upholders of social purity and the sanctity of marriage are uneasy at the rapid dissolution of the ordinary standards of morality that has been such a regrettable feature of life in influential sections south of the line during recent years.

POWER AT TRENTON.

The town of Trenton has acquired a nearby water power, according to a recent report, and will harness it for local use. If this is done, Trenton will be another municipality in this district possessing its own electric generating plant. Campbellford and Fenelon Falls develop their own power, and Hastings has a privately-owned power-house which the village has assisted.

Of interest to some Peterborough citizens may be the facts that Trenton believed it could find some profitable use for the water flowing past its door, that it was free to apply for the water right, and that its people were enterprising and energetic enough to undertake the responsibility.

In all the denunciation of the Hydro-Electric Commission's action last winter in increasing power rates throughout the Central Ontario system, none was more justifiable than Trenton's.

A large manufacturing industry had just completed the erection of a new factory, and had been attracted to Trenton by the supply and price of power. But the Hydro's peremptory notice of higher rates was said to have wiped out the power cost advantage.

Mayor W. A. Fraser is not the type of municipal administrator to doze on when the interests of his town are affected, to bow to the Hydro's demand without first looking around for some relief, some alternative.

If Trenton comes into possession of a power plant it will be largely due to the energy and initiative and the fighting spirit of a Mayor like W. A. Fraser, who refuses to be awestricken by the Hydro-Electric Commission.

A power plant near the mouth of the Trent would have the benefit of the Dominion Government's system of reservoirs, and also of any auxiliary resource the Hydro may eventually regulate on the Crowe River.

606 LIVES SNUFFED OUT.

If all the people in one of our neighboring villages, such as Omemee, Norwood, Hastings or Warkworth, were suddenly killed in a disaster that left none of the residents alive, the whole country would be inexpressibly shocked and stirred.

How many of us will be as deeply affected by the report of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics recording 606 deaths from automobile accidents in Canada in 1926.

Ontario with the largest population and the most automobiles, led the Provinces with 242 fatalities, Quebec was second with 183 and British Columbia third with 60.

In proportion to population, however, Ontario's fatalities are the second highest, British Columbia and Quebec being respectively first and third. The report states that the death rate from automobile accidents was 6.5 per 100,000 of population, while British Columbia's rate was 10.6, with Ontario 7.7 and Quebec 7.1.

These figures tend to substantiate the appeal which The Toronto Globe has urged upon the Ontario Government. It is true that, considering all the factors in this human sacrifice to the motor and its speed, Ontario is not accused of excessive neglect of the safety of its people. But our mortality rate can be reduced if the authorities are fully convinced that it should be reduced.

Official tolerance of speeding has gone far enough. Certainly there have been more frequent appearances of Provincial traffic officers in this district during the last three weeks, and if a few drastic penalties and restrictions are meted out there should be a decline in the number of smashes on the highways, and on city streets, too.

It is claimed that a new searchlight will pierce a dense fog twenty miles. It might be useful as an aid to clear thinking.—Florence Herald.

THE NATIONAL DEBT.

Hon. Hugh Guthrie, leader of the Conservative Opposition in the Federal Parliament, derides as "the purest kind of fiction" the Government statement that the national debt had been reduced by $52,000,000 in four months of the fiscal year. Mr. Guthrie was addressing the annual meeting of the Dufferin-Simcoe Liberal-Conservative Association at Shelburne.

On this same point, The Ottawa Journal a week ago observed that the Government's statement was technically true, but misleading. The Journal explained its criticism as follows:

"To the casual reader, it gives the impression that the debt is being decreased at the rate of $52,000,000 every four months. Unfortunately, this is not the fact. All that these figures mean is that a balance struck at the end of the first four months of the year show a $52,000,000 improvement. A balance struck six months hence, with a reckoning of things not considered in this four-month statement, will show something entirely different.

"An illustration of this is found in the figures for last year. At about this period last summer a statement was given out showing that in four months the debt had been reduced by $41,000,000. At that rate, Mr. Robb should have had a debt reduction of $120,000,000 for the year to present with his Budget. As a matter of fact, however, he didn't have a reduction of even $42,000,000. Twelve months did not make up as good a showing as four months.

"It will be the same, we fear, this year. Revenue is up—it will be the greatest in years—but we notice, also, that expenditure is up, too—which is always what happens. If Mr. Robb's colleagues and supporters would only let him economize, if they would put less pressure upon him for wharves, and breakwaters, and Post Offices, there would be some chance of his being able, this year, to further reduce the income tax and to altogether abolish nuisance taxes."

CAN THERE BE ANOTHER SCHUBERT?

Franz Schubert died Nov. 19, 1828. Next year the one-hundredth anniversary of his death will be commemorated. For this occasion prizes of $20,000 have been offered for the completion of his eighth symphony, of which he finished only two movements and left a piano sketch of part of the third.

This is asking for trouble and begging disappointment. As Sir George Grove wrote, "There never has been one like him, and there never will be another." The fragment of the third movement may aid some composer to finish it creditably; but what about the fourth? There the artist must rely on his own devices. It must be both Schubertian and original. But Schubert, while he stamped himself on almost everything he wrote, was as various as the sunset, which is never twice the same. The work which he left is no guide to what he intended. The competing composer is thus placed in a terrible dilemma—he must either write imitation Schubert, which is not what Schubert would have done, or he must bring his own genius up to Schubert's, which is all but impossible.

The courageous backers of the competition either are very foolish, or else they hope for a miracle. No music competition has yet brought forth a miracle, but people who can raise $20,000 are always full of faith. Most musicians, however, have enough reverence for Schubert to leave the Unfinished Symphony unfinished. It is great enough as it stands.—Detroit News.

A DISTINCTION WITHOUT DIFFERENCE.

A correspondent, who wants to know whether the head of a local government should be called a "premier" or a "prime minister," in asking for information affords an opportunity to correct a very current misapprehension that premier or prime minister, which means precisely the same thing, namely first, is an office by itself. A prime minister is unknown to the constitution, and has no more executive authority than any other member of the cabinet.

In the old days, before the present form of responsible government was developed, the man at the head of affairs was no more or less than the favorite of the sovereign for the time being. He might not and usually did not represent the will of the people. As responsibility gradually shifted from the crowned head to parliament the leader, and there always was and always will be a leader, became more and more the representative of the people expressed in and by parliament, until, if one may use the term, he has become a recognized institution.

The prime minister, or what really he should be called in terse Anglo-Saxon, "first" minister, is merely the mouthpiece of the government in conveying official information to the Crown, or the representative of the Crown in a Dominion or a province. As a matter of fact, the responsible head of any department has equal rights in that respect so far as the business of his department is concerned, but usage has determined that the leader of the government shall be the sole medium of communication to and from the Crown. As it has worked out in practice it is a very useful and highly convenient arrangement, another of those what might be called fictions or anomalies of our system of government hard to explain but fitting in like clockwork.

Another current misapprehension is that a provincial legislature is not a parliament, and for that reason we see constantly the letters "M.L.A." after a member's name, instead of "M.P.P." Either is correct. In all respects, a provincial government and a provincial parliament are complete replicas of a Dominion government and parliament, each sovereign within its own defined limitations. It is merely a question of status in respect of powers. One deals with local affairs, private rights and property, and the other with affairs in general, those affecting the whole of the country. Constitutionally, what applies to one applies equally to the other.—Ottawa Journal.

MONTREAL GRAIN AND PRODUCE

MONTREAL, Aug. 24 (Canadian Press).—The export trade in grain on the Montreal market was dull yesterday, only small quantities of American hard wheat being purchased by United Kingdom and Continent buyers.

In the domestic market a small amount of rye changed hands, and a little trade also took place in oats and barley.

Prices for all grades of Spring and Winter wheat flour were well maintained despite the quiet demand.

A moderate amount of business was worked in millfeed and prices were unchanged. The trade in standard grades of rolled oats was fair and firm.

The strength that has characterized the egg market of late was again a feature yesterday and values were marked up another two cents per dozen. This was attributed to the scarcity of fresh grades.

The receipts were 1,476 cases.

The undertone of the cheese market was again firm and prices scored a fractional advance. The receipts were 3,500 boxes.

The butter market was quiet and featureless. The receipts were 50 packages.

MONTREAL, Aug. 24 (Canadian Press). — Sterling exchange rates were quoted here yesterday as follows:

Demand $4.85⅝; cables $4.86⅛.

CHICAGO GRAIN

CHICAGO, Aug. 24 (Canadian Press). — Wheat developed considerable weakness yesterday despite early firmness due to recent frost and rust damage claims. More bearish estimates regarding the wheat production of the three Prairie Provinces was chiefly responsible for the downturn in values. At the finish wheat showed a net loss of ⅝ to ¾c; corn was ⅛ to ⅜c higher; Oats were ¼ to ⅝c up, and provisions varied from 5 cents to 15 cents decline.

Initial firmness in Chicago wheat was due to reports of frost in Southern Manitoba and on scattering buying. Winnipeg, however, failed to heed the frost reports and developed a weakness which was soon reflected on the market here.

Previous frost damage reports were minimized yesterday by a report from a leading crop expert travelling in the Canadian northwest. He said that the production in the three Prairie Provinces should make 410,000,000 bushels of wheat with two or three weeks of good weather.

CAMPBELLFORD NEWS.

CAMPBELLFORD, August 24. — Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Miller and family, of Toronto, were guests of Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Connor on Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Williams spent Sunday at Percy Boom.

Mr. Brock Grant is spending a few days in town. Mr. Grant was formerly on the staff of the Bank of Montreal here.

Dr. and Mrs. Joseph Irwin and little daughter motored from Toronto to spend the week-end with Dr. Irwin's parents in town. They also spent some time at their cottage at Bradley Bay.

Miss K. MacFadden, of Saginaw, Mich., Miss Leonard, Chicago, Ills., and party called on Mrs. Charles Black yesterday. They are on their return motor trip to the United States.

Mr. Austin Gurry and son motored from Detroit to spend the week-end with Mr. and Mrs. William Dunstan. Mr. Gurry is a brother of Mrs. Dunstan.

Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Wood motored to St. Catharines to visit their daughter.

Mr. Howard Adams, Norwood, is visiting Mr. John Adams.

Several members of the Millionaires' Club motored to Deer Lake, Highland Grove. They report an interesting week-end in the open spaces. Possibly they were consoling each other after losing the softball trophy in a hard struggle against the Clerks. Next week-end the Clerks intend to celebrate their late victory, which gives them the trophy for two consecutive seasons.

Mr. Frank Menzies caught a twenty-one pound lunge at Bradley Bay. The fish measured forty-eight inches from tip to tip. In landing the big fellow, Mr. Menzies had two fingers of his right hand severely bitten. Further evidence is unobtainable, as the fish has smce graced the frying-pan.

It is expected that work on the new culvert on the English Line, County Road No. 72, will be commenced immediately. On Thursday of last week a threshing machine owned by Mr. Melville Petherick, narrowly missed capsizing. It required several hours' strenuous labor to get the engine back on the road.

Rev. James Grier, of St. Andrew's Presbyterian church here, conducted the anniversary services held in the Brighton Presbyterian church. Mr. Grier occupied the pulpit at both morning and evening services. During the morning hour of worship, Mr. Grier noticed Rev. H. B. Cameron in the congregation and invited him to assist in the service.

Mr. W. J. Jones, B.A., student minister of Brighton Presbyterian church occupied the pulpit of the Presbyterian church here for both morning and evening services. Large congregations were well pleased with the messages from the Scriptures.

Mr. Harry Stevens of Rochester is visiting Mr. George Webber, Rear Street. Mr. Webber has just returned from Rochester.

Miss Long is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. John Adams.

Between twenty-five and thirty ladies from this town attended the bridge at Trent River, given in aid of the Star Fresh Air Fund.

CAMPBELLFORD TROOP

CAMPBELLFORD, Aug. 23.—The St. Andrew's Boy Scouts have returned from their camp at Birdsalls, Rice Lake. The camp was under the direct supervision of Scout Master Harold Dunk and Rev. James Grier. For the week in camp, the boys were divided into three patrols of three boys each, and in all matters the camp was conducted on strict Scout ethics. Each day one patrol assumed the numerous duties of the camp. There were also contests in Scoutcraft between the three patrols. The Fox Patrol—Donald Waters, patrol leader; Merwin Malcolm and Gordon McCulloch, were tied for first place with the Crowe Patrol of which Gordon Baron of Paris is leader, with Frank Rowe and Ross Kerr. The Cat Patrol was a good second, only one mark behind the other two. Donald Rutherford was leader of the Cats with Bruce Haig and Donald Hay. The boys returned to town very much dissatisfied that the camp did not continue indefinitely. This slight grievance was probably countered to a certain extent by the fact that no boy ever was known to leave the table without having more than satisfied that boyish hollow. The Rev. Mr. Grier acted as quartermaster, chaplin, and general overseer.

A Thought For To-day

YOUR OWN RESPONSIBILITY.

Flattery, when practiced by the designing, is dangerous; when attempted by the fool, it is annoying.

We should all know the difference between flattery and deserved approval, for the intimate knowledge we have of ourselves, our worthiness or unworthiness, makes it easy to determine the difference.

Whether you feed your vanity on the unwholesome and abundant food of flattery or nourish your aspirations with crumbs of approval is entirely up to you.

SCYTHE IS MEMORIAL.

WATERLOO, N. Y., Aug. 24. — Clarence L. Schaffer, owner of the famous Scythe Tree Farm, has decided to sell out and retire. The historic old place was named after a scythe that was hung in a sapling by James Wyman Johnson when he went to war in '61. He died in a war hospital and the tree gradually wrapped the tool that Wyman had left there as a memorial.

"His Love Lives On"

"He can't have left her much, you know, because he was only just getting nicely established"—said the friends of Frank's widow when he died, only 31 years of age.

But the family realized the true nobility of Frank's nature, when the solicitor announced that, just the year before, the young man had been foresighted enough to provide through insurance with The London Life, an income of $100 a month for his wife as long as she lives.

The cost, equal to $5.78 a week, was his sacrifice for the wife and children he loved.

The London Life agent has had experience in arranging such policies of protection and will be glad to advise. London Life rates mean lowest net cost.

EXPLOITS OF NEVILLE AMAZE SCOTLAND YARD

Plunged Into British Society, Soon Had Many Taking Advice on Investments.

FICTION SURPASSED.

Went Calling in Limousine, Paid Large Returns To Some Investors.

TORONTO, Aug. 24.—Following up their search for Mrs. Jean Neville in consequence of the mother abandoning her little boy at the Castle hotel, Windsor, the London papers relate the exploits of the husband during his stay in England.

The Daily Mail of August 12 says: Scotland Yard received a cablegram from Canada last night, following the publication of the circumstances of the abandonment of a baby in an hotel at Windsor, stating that the father, Herbert John Nelles Neville, a share pusher, has been traced.

The cablegram was received from Inspector Mitchell of the Toronto police.

So far, Scotland Yard has not sent a reply, but it is understood that Neville is not wanted on any charge in this country. His wife alone is wanted on a charge of abandoning her baby, the cost of which has been charged to the poor law authorities.

The cablegram does not state whether Mrs. Neville is with her husband.

Scotland Yard detectives investigated Neville's career in London and have compiled one of the most remarkable dossiers that has ever been written about any man at that office, where remarkable careers are recorded.

The Daily Mail is to-day able to give the full story of these remarkable exploits, carried on from imposing addresses in Mayfair and other parts of the West End, and made possible by an intimate association with society hostesses and prominent politicians, noted generals and admirals, as well as leading business men in London, Liverpool, Manchester and elsewhere.

Apart from the munificence he showered on his wife, he brought over from Canada his two young sisters, whom he sent to an exclusive girls' school, and his father and mother, whom he installed in a large country house on the banks of the Thames in Buckinghamshire.

For his own use he had in London a flat in South street, Park lane, W., and a suit of rooms at the Grosvenor Hotel, SW. He also used as a business address a house in Grosvenor place, S.W.

It was from his last address that he carried out his activities and there kept a young woman as a private secretary, a young man who acted as his confidential secretary, and several men as his representatives at salaries of £1,000 a year and upwards. All these men had held positions in the diplomatic or civil services, or had social connections which brought them into touch with people with money.

The story Neville told all these people was that he had been sent to this country by a leading financial concern to get influential people to take an interest in Canadian securities of all kinds. With convincing argument he told them that Canada was a country of opportunity and that money invested in the right way would bring far greater profits than would be possible in England.

He added that the firm he represented had as their principal a leading K.C. in Canada, and that they were the biggest private bankers in the United States and Canada.

To Start a Bank.

Having won the attention of his prospective dupes by his glowing accounts of financial affluence that awaited them, he said he intended to start a bank in this country to act as a sort of clearing house for the money he hoped to persuade people to invest. Before this could be done, however, he would have to establish a pool which would be subscribed by people interested in the investments.

By the beginning of this year he had met many people, all of whom he used to introduce him to others he was anxious to meet. He bought a Rolls-Royce limousine and was driven by a chauffeur to the houses of people to whom he was introduced. One or two people whom he persuaded to entrust him with money were given large sums which they were told represented the interest on investments Neville had made on their behalf. These people, who were well placed to introduce him to other influential people with money to invest, told all their friends of Neville's remarkable sagacity, and induced them to entrust him with money for investment.

Another bait which Neville held out to demonstrate his "wealth" was the gift to a school of a two-seater motor car as a prize for a competition.

When all these efforts did not bring in money fast enough he advertised for "ladies of rank and title moving in the highest social circles, to act as hostesses, for which they would receive high remuneration without loss of dignity."

Following this advertisement, parties at which Neville was present were held in Mayfair, and people he was anxious to meet were invited. In this way he met many titled men and women. At these parties he was almost invariably a social success, especially with the women, who seemed to be fascianted by his conversation, which ranged over a wide number of subjects, but usually included a glowing account of Canadian prospects.

How Neville's schemes were planned was described to a Daily Mail reporter by a young man who acted as Neville's confidential secretary during this period. He said:

150 Applied.

Towards the end of February I answered an advertisement for a young man to act as secretary. There were 150 applications for the post, but I was selected—as I learned afterwards—because of my family connections Neville told me of his plans and said that although I was to be his confidential secretary I was really to be his friend and introduce him to people who would be interested in the business.

He said that as a Canadian he would be rather strange in English society, and he wanted me to teach him the etiquette of an English gentleman. For this post he offered a salary of £500 a year and all living expenses, but intimated that it would be necessary for me to take a flat in Mayfair, where these people could be introduced.

I accepted this post on February 26 and met him that evening at his flat at South street, where he kept me talking about finance until 1 a.m. He was most fascinating and during the conversation told me that he had a great many enemies, as during his career he had broken a large Canadian company, a director of which had shot himself.

These unasked-for revelations about himself aroused my suspicions and I took up bankers references and found that they were by no means good. A cabled enquiry to Toronto brought the reply: "Avoid Neville all connections absolutely."

I got very doubtful but despite these warnings I was so fascinated by him I felt there must be some mistake. He met such well known people and quickly had such a wide circle of friends that I refused to believe my fears

After his advertisement for hostesses he advertised for "men of position," and engaged several at salaries of £1000 a year or more. There was never any office work done on his behalf apart from occasional letters to Canada. None of the men he engaged was ever paid, and in fact did no work. They were merely selected for their ability to bring introductions. Among the applicants was a Russian prince whom I was sent to interview at a west end hotel. I reported to Neville, but he was not engaged, as Neville said that he would cut no ice.

At last I became so suspicious that I informed Scotland Yard. Soon afterwarsd he disapepared and I did not receive a penny of my salary.

Was very Worried.

Mrs. H. B. Budd, wife of the manager of the Castle Hotel, Windsor, where Mrs. Neville left her baby, told a Daily Mail reporter last night that Mrs. Neville appeared worried all the time she was at the hotel, and the night before she left she cried bitterly. She appeared to feel the parting from her baby.

She told Mrs. Budd that her maiden name was Hislop and that her father was a fox breeder in America. She burned a great many letters and papers before she left Windsor. She would not have her photograph taken.

An ex-cabinet minister, who met Neville and whose name was used by the sharepusher to effect further introductions told a Daily Mail reporter yesterday that he was the most plausible man he had ever met. The ex-minister added:

Although he was very young, he seemed to have a remarkable knowledge of men and affairs and had business methods at his finger tips. It seemed very extraordinary that such a young man should be so clever and although I suspected him at once I was amused by him and rather enjoyed his antics.

He would talk in the most grandiloquent way about his experiences on the Canadian stock exchanges , and seemed to be familiar with the methods of "bulling' and "bearing" shares.

All this talk was just a preliminary as I soon discovered, to his real object. He said that he had picked up a million pounds on this and another on that adventure ,and then calmly invited me with apparent enthusiasm to put some money in certain shares which he declared would double in value. As I was rather keen to test my suspicions I told him to buy a hundred shares for me. He replied that with such an opportunity to make money I should speculate.

Six weeks later he told me that the shares had jumped 16 points and I suggested that the best thing to do was to sell. I added, with a chuckle, "You can sell them and send me the difference." I did not hear from Neville again.

Beautiful Home.

A despatch from Taplow, Bucks, in the Evening News of August 12 describes the beautiful country house there which was rented by Herbert John Neville. It reads:

"A broad avenue of chestnut trees leads to the front door, and rose gardens, tennis lawns and grassy walks comprise the extensive grounds.

There is a gardener's cottage, a hard tennis court and a large kitchen garden, where cherry trees are now loaded with fruit."

It was at this beautiful place, nestling in the country three miles from the station, that Neville entertained people whom he hoped by a display of lavish wealth to sell shares.

When the house was let to him furnished for several months at the beginning of this year he took over with it the staff of servants, the chauffeur-butler who drove the car belonging to the owners, and the man's wife, who acted as housekeeper

In this country house he took his mother and father and also his two sisters, pretty girls, one aged about 14, and the other two years older.

Neville had extensive dealings with local tradesmen and they were ordered to supply only the best of goods and of wines. His sisters stayed at the house for a few days until he had arranged for them to enter an exclusive school in a suburb of London.

Neville used to arrange for his mother and father to be driven to the various beauty spots in the country by the chauffeur-butler who used the car taken over with the "let" of the house.

Neville spent his time travelling backwards and forwards to London, and it was only during the week-ends that he actually stayed at the country house.

Feathered Facts And Fancies

On Warm Days you long for Simple Foods

When hot weather weakens the digestive system, you long for simple foods which are easily assimilated. But few simple foods are attractive to the appetite.

As a change from commonplace foods, try Quaker Puffed Wheat or Quaker Puffed Rice. They are just whole grains, but their nutlike flavour is enhanced by the puffing process. Thoroughly cooked, and made easily digestible because every food cell has been broken down.

Serve with fruit, fresh or cooked, on ice cream, or with whole milk or cream. At any meal or between meals when the appetite fancies light refreshment.

U. S. OFFICIALS UNCOVER PLOT

Immigrants, Ostensibly Going To Hamilton, Admit Buying Visas.

ELEVEN TURNED BACK.

NEW YORK, Aug. 24.—What is believed to be an international plot to smuggle immigrants has been broken up, it was learned yesterdy, when it became known Ellis Island was holding eleven aliens whose cases are to be investigated by the Government.

Irregularity in consular visas obtained at Hamburg, and allowing passage through the United States to Canada, resulted in exclusion of the eleven, five of whom are said to have confessed they bought the visas for from $100 to $500 each.

The scheme cropped out last week, when seven Italians arrived on the North German Lloyd steamship Dresden. They were bound ostensibly for Hamilton, Ont.

When the validity of their papers was challenged by Canadian and American inspectors the five admitted having bought the visas. Two stuck to their original stories of having obtained the visas through regular channels at American consulates before embarking. All were excluded, but the two appealed to the Secretary of Labor against deportation.

Higher officials began to take notice when, three days later, four aliens arrived on a steamship of the French Line from Havre, France, with the same consular visas, each bearing "Hamilton, Ont." as the destination. Frederick Tuttle, inspector who heads the special inquiry division at Ellis Island, brought the matter to the attention of Immigration Commissioner Day, who communicated with Washington authorities.

A widespread investigation was begun through the State Department and the Department of Justice.

In the absence of Mr. Day, officials refused to comment Monday, but it is known those who have examined the documents believe an international syndicate is at work, with headquarters at Hamburg. When Washington had passed on the appeals from the deportation order, it was said, United States Attorney Tuttle may be called on by the Department of Justice to undertake an investigation.

Meanwhile, an international search has been begun by the State Department in the hope of arresting the alleged plotters in Germany. All ports of entry to the United States have been notified to be on the alert for aliens with consular visas described by Ellis Island officials as palpably counterfeit.

STILL HAS SLAVES.

SUSPECT HELD AS RING LEADER

Believed Chief of Gang of International Alien Smugglers.

HELD OVER SHOOTING.

NEW YORK, Aug. 24.—(Canadian Press).—A prisoner held at the tombs charged with participating in a shooting in which two men were killed Saturday night, was indentified by a private detective today as a man deported three years ago for smuggling aliens past immigration officials.

His indentification from a newspaper picture as Giuseppe Setio led authorities to attribute the shooting to dissention within a ring of international alien smugglers, of which, they believed, he may have been the leader.

Thirteen Italians held at Ellis Island where they were found to have false passports for Hamilton, Ont., immigration officials believed to be "customers" of the ring.

The identifcation of Setio, affected by Edward Cleary, detective, whose investigation led to the prisoner's deportation three years ago, and the discovery of the thirteen aliens with forged passports, immigration officials believed, have brought to a head continued efforts to break up the ring.

SAINT and SINNER

By ANNE AUSTIN

Faith lay long awake that night after her discovery of Chris Wiley's spying upon her sister and Glenn Andrews. She was obsessed with the premonition of trouble, stark trouble, worse than had yet befallen the ill-fated Lane family. Three times she rose noiselessly from her bed to bend over little Hope's crib, for somehow her fears were bound up inextricably with Cherry's infant, which she had mothered far more than had Cherry.

"What's the matter?" Bob grunted sleepily from his bed after she had made her third trip to the crib just before daylight.

"Nothing, dear," Faith answered in a whisper. "Go on back to sleep. I'm sorry I disturbed you."

She lay down again, and Bob reached sleepily across the short space that divided their beds and cuddled her hand in his. She fell asleep then, comforted but not freed from her dark forebodings.

When she awoke, Bob had bathed, dressed and breakfasted and was bending over her for a good-bye kiss.

"You and Cherry are both sleepyheads this morning," he grinned down at her fondly. "I haven't been able to get her up yet. Tell her I'll fire her if she isn't down to the office by half past nine. And by the way, honey, don't forget that we're to go to the Lyttons for bridge tonight. Fred Lytton's going to build a new country home down on Coon Lake, and I think I'll get the job of planning it and building it for him. Looks like that's what this invitation means. If you and Mrs. Lytton hit it off, it may help a lot. Good-bye, angel," he added, kissing her eyelids and mouth. Then, "Ho! Here's the midget waking up! Look, Faith! The little devil's winking at me! Like your old Uncle Bob, hunh?" he chuckled, poking the laughing baby in the ribs.

Faith threw on a kimono and hurried to the kitchen as soon as her husband had left for work. Mrs. Lundy had the baby's bottle ready, and was grumbling about trying to keep breakfast warm for both lazy women of the household.

"Call Cherry again, won't you, Mrs. Lundy, please? Tell her Mr. Hathaway has already gone to the office and expects her to come right down on the street car. I didn't sleep well last night, or I should have been up long ago," she added placatingly.

Faith took a hasty shower, eager to join her sister at breakfast. But while she was combing her long, dark brown hair she heard Cherry's voice at the hall telephone:

"Randolph Hotel? Mr. Glenn Andrews, please."

Faith's arms dropped suddenly to her sides. Glenn Andrews! After the conversation she and Cherry had had the night before! But maybe she was going to break an engagement for that evening—

"Oh, hello, Glenn!" Cherry's lilting, sweet voice caroled seductively. "unhhunh! Of course! How are you, darling? Of course I'm happy! Say, Glenn, can't you hustle down here in a hurry and drive me to the office? That mean old brother-in-law of mine wouldn't wait for me * * * Yes, I'll be ready when you get here. You're a precious! * * * Of course I haven't forgotten about tonight * * * Good-bye, darling."

When Faith entered the dining room she found Cherry already at the table, looking like a freshly plucked flower in her orchid-colored organdie. Her golden eyes were as wide and candid and innocent as little Hope's, her curl-scalloped brow as calm as if no storms had shaken her the night before.

"Cherry, I want you to tell Glenn when he calls for you this morning that you can't see him tonight," Faith said firmly as she took her seat. "Bob and I are going to play bridge at the Lyttons'—an engagement that can't be broken, for business reasons"—

"I'm not going to stay cooped up here every night!" Cherry blazed.

"You are—until after your divorce is granted," Faith said grimly.

HOROSCOPE

The Stars Incline, but do not Compel.

(Copyright, 1927, McClure Syndicate)

THURSDAY, AUGUST 25, 1927

Good and evil, planetary influences contend today, according to astrology, which finds the rule rather confusing and perplexing.

Women should be especially careful today, which is supposed to make them unusually vulnerable to flattery.

Courtship is read as extremely unlucky, while this configuration prevails and girls who indulge in flirtations should be exceedingly wary of unfortunate misunderstandings.

While the stars may incline theatrical managers to test new plays they are likely to be unfortunate under this direction of the stars.

For the last few years the seers have warned that with the passing of many artists of the past there would be a period of apparent dearth of great men and women.

The new era is now advanced to a place where the master minds of the past have disappeared and this is a time of slow development, astrologers point out.

Merchants and manufacturers should be most cautious in making purchases, while this configuration prevails.

The winter is to bring extraordinary development and expansion, but there are to be surprising conditions for all except the far-seeing.

Great storms accompanied by big winds are to be looked for in weather conditions that have been, as prophesied, most unusual all through the summer.

Africa and Australia will both attract a great deal of attention within a year, the seers prognosticate, and aviation will mean much to them.

Venus will continue to aid the workers all through the autumn when they will prosper greatly.

Crimes in which jealousy is a motive will be many and robberies will increase instead of being reduced, it is foretold.

Persons whose birthdate it is have augury of a year of fair prosperity and good health.

Children born on this day probably will be of exalted ideals and fine minds. They may be vain of their super gifts, however.

HINTS ON ETIQUETTE.

1. If serving a course dinner, can one put the bread and butter plates on when setting the table?

2. How long are they left on during a course dinner?

3. If bouillon is served in cups, can one drink it or must it be taken with a spoon?

The Answers.

1. Yes.
2. Until desset is served.
3. Either.

BLUE POPULARITY

The outstanding color which smart Parisians are wearing is blue. Blues with a purple tinge are the most popular.

DRESS

By MARY MARSHALL

Brilliantly hued feather parrkeet trims this large straw hat, with a ribbon band to match the parakeet.

That's the bird—the parrakeet—a dainty little bright-feathered parrot with a wedge-shaped tail. In his own estimation he has always been a very fine looking bird. You can tell by his expression as he sits on his perch at the bird store that he is troubled with no sort of inferiority complex.

At present Dame Fashion seems to agree entirely with the parrakeet, for she has picked him out for special favor this summer. There has been an unusual demand for parrakeets at the bird stores. Some people, of course, have parrots, for the time has long passed when parrots were considered especially appropriate to the forlorn old maid. But in this day of kitchenettes, dinettes and powder tables that fold up when not in use—small pets are chosen in preference to large ones. Pomeranians are in greater demand than Great Danes and parrakeets leave the parrots on the shelf—literally as well as figuratively.

Now there are parrakeet trimmings on hats, and at one of the smartest of summer resorts I have seen no end of large natural colored straw hats ornamented with little parrakeets on the side, with ribbon bands in colors to match the bright plumage. Of course, I didn't examine the plumage, but even if it was just hen feathers dyed to match this gay little bird of the tropics it doesn't really make any difference to us—and it probably makes a whole lot of difference to the parrakeet.

White slippers with painted flower designs on heels and toes are among the newest things in some of the smart shoe shops. They are rather dear, as such novelties usually are, but it occurred to me that it was a trick that could be copied at home. So I got one of our artists to beg the design from a shoe dealer, and from this design to cut a pattern. With the help of the pattern and a box of paints I decorated an inexpensive pair of white canvas shoes—and, believe me, I'm no artist.

If I could do it surely you could too. Just send me a stamped, self-addressed envelope and I'll let you have the pattern with directions for making use of it.

MARY MARSHALL.

DIAGONAL STYLE

Chic comes by diagonal lines in early autumn styles. Diagonal closings, diagonal tiers, flares, trimmings and tucks abound.

STYLISH CONTRAST.

The device of turning back the edges of a black satin tunic gives a six-inch dull border for front and bottom that is smart.

BLACKHEADS

Blackheads go quickly by a simple method that just dissolves them. Get two ounces of peroxine powder from your druggist, rub this with a hot, wet cloth briskly over the blackheads—and you will wonder where they have gone.

FASHION NOTES.

ABOUT BATHING SUITS

By Hedda Hoyt.

(United Press Fashion Editor)

NEW YORK, Aug. 24 (United Press).—Despite the fact that all shops are sponsoring discreet bathing suits made of silks or cretonnes in dress effects, one glance at fashionable beaches proves that women prefer models which expose or appear to expose the figure.

The Annette Kellerman one-piece suit is entirely too modest for the fashionable woman of today who prefers lighter-weight woolens, almost transparent, with nude-toned shirts and short black trousers. When emerging from the water, the nude-toned shirt causes one to appear entirely bare from the waistline upwards. The trousers, though conservatively pleated, are so short as to almost defy detection. By far the most noticeable part of the costume is the wide belt of white or color which extends through narrow trouser straps. Perhaps the style among sailors of going shirtless has brought about the vogue for bathing suits which to all intents and purposes are shirtless.

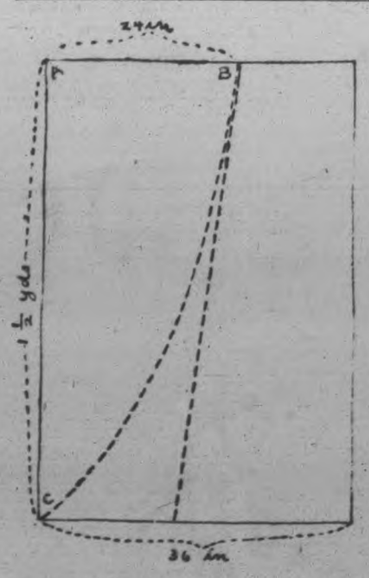
Of course, there are a few discreet women at smart beaches who prefer more modest one-piece suits in gay colors. But even these models are more daring in cut than they were last season since armholes and neck-lines are cut deeper. Entire backless models are occasionally worn by the elite. It must be that the backless vogue for evening wear demands an even sunburn upon the back.

The beach censor may be able to keep shoes and stockings upon the feminine bathers at Coney Island but at the small but restricted beaches of Long Island, a toe is considered a toe among friends. A girl thinks nothing of exposing her toes these days. Stockings and bathing shoes are decidedly minus quantities.

The gay bathing kimona is the one outstanding item depicting modesty this season. Coolie coats in the boldest of patterns and colors are worn by almost everyone. Sitting about in groups upon the sands, women remind one of gayly colored butterflies. Most of them wear large squares of colored taffeta, tied about their heads. These, of course, are replaced by snug rubber swimming caps when one goes in the water.

Wooden sandles with gold or silver leather foot straps, fashioned after the Japanese sandle, are worn over the bare foot upon the sands. And, while fashionable beaches are colorful, they are just a bit shocking to stay-at-home who ventures forth only over the Sundays.

HERE'S THE NEW WING DRAPE



THIS IS A DIAGRAM OF THE WAY YOU CUT THE YARD AND A HALF OF MATERIAL FOR SLEEVE AND CRUSH GIRDLE.

THE body of the frock consists of a straight, slip-like foundation which may be made with any desired neck line from a last season's evening frock. For the belt and drapery you will need georgette or chiffon to match or you may use figured material printed in harmonizing tones.

To get the length needed drop a tape measure from the shoulder at the back and allow it to extend six inches beyond the skirt. Unless you are quite tall you will not need a full yard and a half.

Leave a selvedge from A to C—no other finish is needed. The straight line from A to B and the curved line from B to C should be marked on the material with basting. Cut a half inch outside of this line, and have the material picoted along the basting. The edges of the girdle should be hemmed. When the wing is picotted, trimmed and pressed attach point A securely to the outside of the left shoulder seam, allow the wing to fall at the back of the arm and tack the long edge two or three times along the upper part on the bodice.

Crush the girdle and drape it as indicated, using narrow end beneath at the front. The crushed ends should be bound off and held in place against the frock with snapper fastenings.

MARMORA BOY GIVES SERMON

Rev. Prof. Laycock Preaches in United Church in Old Home.

GOOD CONGREGATION.

MARMORA, Aug. 24.—Professor S. R. Laycock recently returned to Canada after two years at the University of London, England, and who goes to the University of Saskatchewan in September as a member of its staff, conducted divine worship at the United Church on Sunday evening. Electing to speak on religious education, he chose, "I am come that they might have life and that they might have it more abundantly," rather as a motto than as a text.

Professor Laycock at the outset referred to the present-day charge against the church that she had deteriorated. Without the church, he said, the cry was that she was outworn. Within her, the critics lament the absence of the old-time fire and spirit. In the cities one finds a large number of people not going to church. In countries like Russia people are trying to do without the church. If we are in the habit of giving goodwill and exercising tolerance, there is a large chance of our getting it back.

It is time the church took stock of herself. Has she been living and giving her best? There is a living need which only religion can fill. The church may well ask herself if she has been able to satisfy concerning the problems of the wider life. Life in situation and environment has changed radically. Having contrasted life of a hundred years ago in Marmora with that of today, to illustrate development on the whole, the preacher continued: "We are living in a new world. The church as the exponent of religion must take account of this new world. Youth today has new privileges and problems."

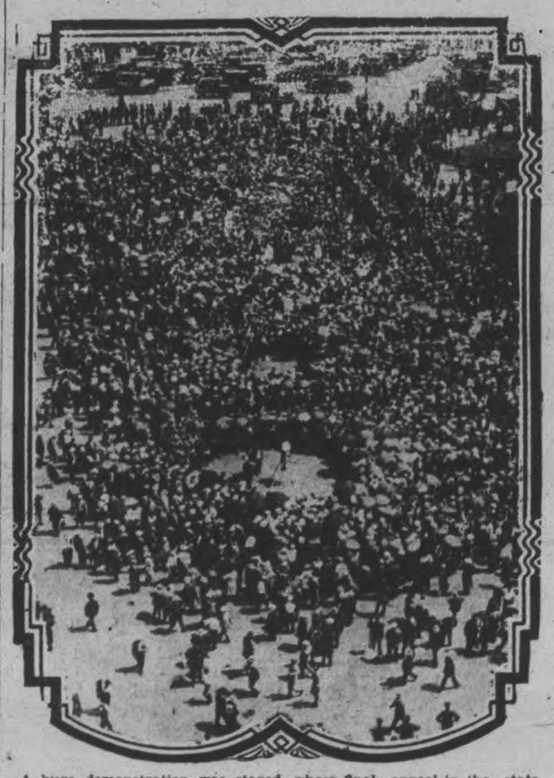
Quoting the old advice, "Lengthen your ropes and strengthen your stakes," Professor Laycock declared that the ropes had been lengthened alright, but the stakes had not been strengthened enough in the moral sense. "The principles Jesus taught are as vital to the needs of the world today as they ever were. We must take all organizations as means and not make them the ends. Only as the church keeps its end in view will it fulfil its mission, and the end served by the vital church is that of living with our fellows in the spirit of Jesus.

"Today we find less emphasis on a negative form of religion, but more on a positive form. Youth recoils as it ever did from any religion that is namby-pamby. We want to think of a religion which challenges us to stand up to the difficulties of life and to be doing. Those 'Thou shalt nots'! Do they matter? Some do and some do not. We need a greater realization that God works through us and by His laws of nature for us. Religion of today is not so reconstructive as it has been. It is more constructive. We build to avoid the wrecks of life if possible. We belong to a church whose task is largely educational, more so than redemptive. We are not to think of children as being born without the kingdom and to be brought within it, but more as being born in the kingdom and not to be let outside. What is the aim of religious education? It is to help us to solve the problems of every-day experience in the Christ-like way and to establish within us the principles of Christ-like character. The Sunday School or the church do not exist to teach the Bible, for the Bible is not an end in itself. It was given to lead us to choose the Christ-like life. That life is rich, full and complete, and when we lay hold on it some of the difficulties which we face today will at the least be partially solved."

A male quartette, comprising Messrs. W. A. Sanderson, R. Hunter, W. Lester and J. F. Baker, were heard to good effect in "Art Thou Weary" and "Saviour, Comfort Me." Miss Lorraine Bell presided at the organ.

As usual, a good congregation was present to hear Professor Laycock, who is Marmora's own contribution to the Christian ministry.

CROWDS PROTEST EXECUTION



A huge demonstration was staged in Union Square, N.Y., recently against the carrying out of the death sentence on Sacco and Vanzetti, whose final appeal in the state of Massachusetts was denied. Sympathizers gathered in force to add their voices to the world-wide protest.

MUSICAL COMEDY AT CAMPBELLFORD

Large Audience Sees "Shufflin' Sam From Alabam."

CAMPBELLFORD, Aug. 24.—The musical comedy, "Shufflin' Sam From Alabam", played to a capacity house at the Regent theatre last night. The plot runs that Uncle Joe Brown's farm is mortgaged to the extent of five thousand dollars. The mortgage is about to be foreclosed when Charlie devises a scheme to raise sufficient funds to enter himself as a jockey in a coming race classic. Uncle Joe secures a second mortgage and consents to allow Charlie to ride. They have placed their bets on Shufflin' Sam, a professional jockey. He wins. Uncle Joe wins enough money to pay the mortgage, and Charlie gets Mandy, the daughter.

Miss Nay as Mandy ably supports Earl Nay as Shufflin' Sam. These are the leading characters and play a perpetually prominent role. Joseph Williams was exceptionally pleasing as he sang several classic and popular numbers in his rich baritone voice. The Ellis Brothers, soft shoe dancers, received several curtain calls. Their interpretations were exceptionally clever. Hyat Jenkins' dancing was of a similar calibre and he was repeatedly encored.

The male quartette consisting of Harry and Earl Nay, Carl Shelton and Lawrence Nay sang some of the old plantation songs that are always acceptable. The only way they were able to elude their audience was by simply refusing to come back. Gladys Nay's dancing was all that it had been advertised to be. The girl literally danced off her feet, and the applause that recalled her to the stage was as sincere as it was loud and prolonged.

Victor Scott, character comedian, won fame for himself. As an extra number he was one of the strong points of the show.

Madam Brannon sings with apparently little effort. She has a clear mezzo soprano voice and while she does her popular numbers rather well, her classic songs were easily the best. She sang "Spain" and, by special request gave as a second number of her group "My Old Kentucky Home". In the latter number she was assisted by the entire cast from back stage. The result was a pleasing melody sung with rare harmony and just enough volume to fill the theatre. The number was encored repeatedly.

The Black Bottom was demonstrated by five of the chorus girls. They also interpreted the Alabama Stomp. Mattie Gunn followed immediately with the Eccentric Black Bottom in which she was assisted by Shufflin' Sam.

An unusually clever and lively extra number was Gladys Nay in "Crying For a Kiss." The commonplace beginning and the unusual ending places it among the headlines of the entire performance.

Concisely, the entire entertainment was well worth seeing. The personal of thirty-five does not include one weak member. Every number was well received. If there was any one player more popular than another, Gladys Nay is easily that one. Her dancing won her the distinction. The management of the Regent is to be duly acclaimed for arranging for the appearance of Shufflin' Sam. It is anticipated that there will be many others equally good appearing here this season.

The baseball fans of the town also appreciate the spirit in which the ball game was played before time for the troupe to appear at the theatre. There was only time for three innings and the score is rather doubtful. The main desire seemed to be amusement rather than ball.

The Shufflin' Sam company, travelling by their own special pullmans, are billed to play in Perth today.

I.O.O.F. HONORS DEAD BRETHREN

Millbrook Lodge and Rebekahs Decorate Many Graves.

GOOD ADDRESS GIVEN.

MILLBROOK, Aug. 24.—The annual Decoration Day service in connection with Millbrook Lodge, I.O.O.F., No. 308, was held on Sunday, August 21, at the soldiers' memorial in the Town Hall square, at 1.30 p.m., and afterward at the Presbyterian Cemetery.

Headed by the Citizens' Band, the parade left the lodge rooms and proceeded to the cenotaph, where Bro. (Rev.) P. C. Howard of Saint Thomas' Church took charge of the service, leading in prayer and announcing hymns. "Nearer My God to Thee" and "Blest Be the Tie That Binds," then calling upon Bro. Fred. Elliott to lay the wreath on the base of the monument in memory of Bro. N. B. Elliott, who lost his life in the Great War.

In his address Mr. Howard referred to the Decoration Day service as being typical of the fraternity, which endures not only in this life but reaches into the life beyond. Let us maintain the high spirit of brotherhood given to us by Jesus Christ, and looking to Him we shall find it easier to carry out the principles distinctive of our order, and which He first laid down."

At the cemetery Bro. W. E. Ball, N.G., and Bro. P. I. Bentley, P.G., conducted the ritual, and Rev. R. J. Stillwell, rector of the parish of Douglas, South Georgia, who is summering in Canada, gave an inspiring address on "Friendship," the highest and most satisfying of possessions. "He that friends must show himself friendly, and there is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother."

Bro. H. A. Fallis, P.G., read the names of those who have passed on both from the Golden Sheaf Rebekah Lodge, No. 176, and from the I.O.O.F. There was a fairly good representation from the local Oddfellows and Rebekah Lodges present on Sunday, the committee in charge of arrangements being Bros. H. A. Fallis, P.G., J. A. Vance, P.G., who filled the office of Marshal for the occasion, and D. Sheppard, V.G.

Have YOU a "Lunch Counter" Husband?

MOST lunch-counter husbands are men who hate to upset home routine by being late for dinner. So when they're delayed at the office or stay overtime at the golf club they eat downtown.

But today such consideration is unnecessary. The up-to-date housewife serves her family meals at the regular time, while the latecomer's meal is kept piping-hot in McClary's

Toronto Hurler Pitches No-Hit, No-Run Game

LEAFS POUND READING 14-0

Alexander and Burke Hit Home Runs in the Onslaught.

BOX WORK FEATURE

TORONTO, Aug. 24—Johnny Prudhomme, the Alabama farmer, entered the hall of baseball fame pitching a no-hit, no-run contest against Reading, winning by the large score of 14-0. Prudhomme was given great support throughout the listless contest and at the start was inclined to be a bit wild, but after the Leafs piled up a runaway lead Prudy bore down.

Prudy's excellent pitching feat was the second perfect game in the International this season. Sy Johnson, of Syracuse, shut out Buffalo on July 31st. Prudy fanned three and walked four. The Leafs pounded Watson freely at the start and took considerable liking to the offerings of Mr. Hansen.

Alexander got his third homer in two games. The ball this time sailing into deep centre field. Burke also went the circuit when Jarrett missed his hit completely. In all the Leafs gathered 14 hits. Vernon Spencer was the leading slugger with four out of five, three of which were of the infield variety. Johnson, Walsh and Alexander had two apiece.

The Buffalo Bisons' winning streak mounted to six straight at Buffalo when the visiting Baltimore Orioles took the short end of a 3 to 1 count. It was Baltimore's seventh straight loss.

The Colts made it two straight over the Newark Bears at Rochester, winning yesterday's game 4 to 3.

Syracuse defeated Jersey City at Syracuse, 15 to 2 and 6 to 3. The Stars pounded out 21 hits in the first game.

No More Fights For Jack Britton

Britton, who was planning a comeback Monday night, is 40 years old.

The limit for boxers is 38 years in New York.

The commission canceled Britton's license.

The ruling also automatically canceled Britton's scheduled fight with Danny Fagan of Newark at Yonkers, September 15.

A demonstration of the region of foul blows and discussion of the advisability of consulting a surgeon before rendering decision on fouls will be discussed Thursday.

JOHNSTON TAKES LEAD IN GOLF PLAY

With 145 by Scoring 71 in National Amateur Championship.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., August 24 (Canadian Press). — With little chance to hold it on account of Bobby Jones, Jimmy Johnston, of Minneapolis, took the lead in the 36-hole qualifying round of the national amateur golf championship yesterday afternoon with 145 by scoring a 71 to equal the best score of the first round.

Jones, the British open champion, got his seventh birdie at the 473 yard 14th and with pars on the 13th and 15th needs only pars on the last three holes for a 67, five under par.

Eugene Homans, New York, and Clarke Corkran, Philadelphia, were behind Johnston with 148 each, and Chick Evans and Art Sweet of Chicago, Dave Martin of Los Angeles, and Arthur Yates of Rochester, were tied with 150.

TIES RECORD.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., August 24 (Canadian Press). — Bobby Jones, champion golfer, shot a 67 here yesterday to tie the Minikhada course record, and to lead the field in the national amateur golf tournament with a card of 142.

Jones showed every sign yesterday of recovering his title as national amateur golf champion from George Von Elm, from whom he kept it in the finals two years ago, and to whom he lost it last year. Von Elm was struggling to get a 76 to qualify with 154.

Seldom in championship play has a 31 been recorded, and never but once before has a golfer qualified with 142 for a major tournament. That was in 1924, when Clarke Corkran of Philadelphia set the same figures at Merion Cricket Club.

Jones' card:
Par out—443, 543, 435 35
Jones out—442, 433, 434 31
Par in—434, 544, 444 37
Jones in—425, 544, 453 36
Total—67.

Soccer Notes

Saturday's soccer bill is the semi-final of the E. A. Peck Cup, when the Quakers and Thistle meet at King Edward Park. Kick-off at three o'clock. Referee, John Ward.

After much deliberation over the question of medals for the winners of the league championship — the Masseys—the association have studied the issue between medals and club bags from every angle, and after a personal opinion from the players involved, they instructed the secretary to obtain prices from local merchants on club bags, which would be serviceable more ways than one.

George Logan is now up to the same standard in goal-scoring percentage as Sid Laidler, who has been the Masseys' most profitable player during the season.

James Sharman and Charlie Griffine are the only two players playing last Saturday who took part in the first Gordon soccer competition.

HOBBS WIELDS BAT FOR 150

Surrey Cricketer Plays One of Best Games of Career.

CRICKET RESULTS

LONDON, England, August 24. — Jack Hobbs, Surrey batsman, yesterday ran an overnight score of 94 to 150, playing for his county against Yorkshire at the Kennington Oval. It was a fine effort, and one of the best innings played by this cricketer in a long career.

The rain of the past three days rendered it impossible to make any real progress in several matches and as a consequence the following games were abandoned: Lancashire versus Glamorgan, at Blackpool; Worcester versus Hampshire at Worcester; Gloucestershire versus Kent, at Bristol.

Some play was possible yesterday in the Middlesex versus Nottinghamshire fixture at Nottingham. Middlesex batted and scored 160 for no wickets, Haig getting 104 and Lee 50. Derbyshire scored 50 runs for three wickets against Leicestershire. Neither of the matches will count in the championship.

Tea time scores in other matches were:

Essex versus Northamptonshire at Northampton: Essex, 239 (Jupp seven wickets for 52 runs); Northants, 128 for three wickets.

FISHER WISHED TO COPY NELSON

Suggested To King Edward, in 1908, Attack on German Fleet.

WITHOUT DECLARATION.

LONDON, Aug. 24.—The old rumor of an Admiralty plan to destroy the German fleet without a declaration of war received semi-official confirmation yesterday. Sir Sidney Lee is writing a life of King Edward, extracts from which are appearing in The Daily Telegraph. King George has placed all his father's private archives in Lee's hands, although at present he disclaims responsibility for what Lee says.

Lee writes in yesterday's instalment about naval rivalry before the war and of the activities of Sir John Fisher, then First Sea Lord and dictator of the British sea policy. He says:

"In the Spring of 1908 Fisher confided to the King a cherished plan of attacking and destroying the German fleet suddenly in the absence of any declaration of war, citing the precedent of his hero, Lord Nelson, who on April 1, 1801, attacked and defeated the Danish fleet in the harbor of Copenhagen. The King promtly refused to countenance any such idea which was utterly opposed to his own views of international relations and Fisher's final comment was a lament "That we possessed neither a Pitt nor a Bismarck to give the order."

WOMAN'S BODY FOUND BURIED IN OWN HOME

Mrs. Hill Lived in Spacious House, Almost a Recluse.

SEARCHING FOR SON.

Police Find Bricks in the Basement Floor Had Been Disturbed.

STREATOR Ill., August 24. — Mrs. Mary Ann Hill, divorced wife of Dr. H. C. Hill, was murdered in her home here some time in the last two weeks and her body buried in the basement. The Hill home, one of the most spacious in the county, contains 15 rooms, and Mrs. Hill lived in it almost a recluse.

Within two hours after the finding of the body, Chief of Police Rodd departed for Chicago to arrest Harry Hill, the 21-year-old son of the doctor and Mrs. Hill. The discovery of the crime came in a search for young Hill on the charge of passing worthless checks. He had driven here from Chicago, and when the police called at the home Mrs. Hill did not respond. They searched the house, and enquired of the neighbors if they had seen her. It developed no one had seen her for two weeks. Dr. Hill was called, and a search of the house resumed. In the basement it was noticed that several bricks in the floor had been disturbed.

"This floor was never like this," said Dr. Hill. A policeman began digging. The body was found face downwards. At the inquest yesterday it was discovered that Mrs. Hill had been shot through the head and had a deep gash in the temple. Peter Busch, a houseman, gave evidence against the son.

"The boy came to me a week ago" said Busch, "and told me there were some bricks loose in basement and the dirt had been removed. He told me to stamp the dirt back in place, and replace the bricks. And come to think of it he cautioned me not to dig down but just put the dirt and bricks back."

The boy was graduated from the Streator high school three years ago and then entered Knox College. He went to Chicago a year ago but visited his parents frequently.

Hill Missing a Week.

Hill has been missing more than a week, according to a statement attributed to Miss Alice Sawyer, a graduate of the Streator high school, who is reported engaged to him.

In Chicago he was employed by a wholesale grocery firm until recently.

Search for the son, who disappeared from Streator about two weeks ago, began over some cheques the youth is said to have cashed. One was for $1200 and the other for $400. Whether they were cashed before or after the death of his mother has not been determined.

She had made good other cheques cashed by him. William Bridges, a Streator boy employed in Chicago, said that Hill slept with him last night.

"Hill slept until noon," Bridges continued, "and went out for a shave —I have not seen him since."

Bridges said Hill's mother "acted queer" and did not treat young Hill like a son. Recently, he said, young Hill and his mother quarrelled when Hill announced he intended to marry Miss Sawyer. Mrs. Hill, the youth said, threatened to disinherit her son.

Young Hill is described by his associates as a tall, slender blond youth, given to gambling heavily. He was ill much of his boyhood and at one time spent several weeks at Rochester, Minn., where he underwent an operation in Mayo Brothers' Hospital.

Dr. Hill said his son was a "spoiled youngster."

DENVER SUSPECTS ARE IDENTIFIED

Trio Wanted in Montreal Also Wanted in Other Cities.

MONTREAL, Aug. 24.—Identification of three suspects held at Denver as the two men and woman wanted in Montreal for the murder and roobery of Adelard Bouchard, taxidriver, was made by authorities here yesterday, police state.

The suspects are known as Mr. and Mrs. George C. McDonald and Fred. Palmer. Mrs. McDonald has been identified by New York police as Julia Palmer, alias Mrs. Frances Clark Allen, with a stage and screen career under the name of Marjorie Anderson.

McDonald is held in Denver as H. J. Carter, and Palmer is said to be the third suspect, Charles Dayton. The three prisoners, say police, left a trail of bad cheques and unpaid hotel bills from Halifax, N.S., to Butte, Mont.

They are wanted for passing bad cheques at Portland, Maine; Pittsburg, Chicago and Kansas City, according to police, who say McDonald is said to have a very bad criminal record in Boston.

Identification of McDonald was made by finger prints and photographs received in Montreal yesterday from Denver. The identification of the woman was made at once by a photograph also sent by Denver police. Preparations to request extradition were started immediately.

The murder was committed on a lonely highway near the border when the occupants of Bouchard's taxi slugged him, shot him and threw him in a ditch to die. After leaving Montreal police believe they went to New York, then to Pittsburg, where Carter is said to have had 1,000 cheques printed, bearing the title "Continental Motors, Incorporated."

Uncle Wiggily

By Howard R. Garis

To-day's Bedtime Story

UNCLE WIGGILY AND THE GRASSHOPPER.

(Copyright, 1927, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Uncle Wiggily was hopping along near the edge of the brook one day looking for an adventure, and the rabbit gentleman was just beginning to think none would happen, when, all of a sudden, he heard a voice calling:

"Help! Help! Help!"

"Well, this is the beginning of an adventure if ever there was one, I'm sure!" exclaimed Mr. Longears. "I only hope it isn't one of the bad chaps," he went on.

But the voice did not seem to be either that of the Wolf, Fox or Bob Cat. It cried again:

"Help! Help! Help!"

Pushing his way through the bushes on the bank of the brook, Mr. Longears looked along the water, thinking perhaps Baby Bunty, or one of his little rabbit boys or girls, might have fallen in while paddling in a boat. For a moment Uncle Wiggily could see no one, though the voice kept on shouting. Then the rabbit noticed a swirling of the water in a deep, quiet eddy beneath the edge of the bank. And right away the bunny saw who was in trouble.

"Why it's Mr. Skip, the grasshopper!" cried the rabbit.

"That's who I am," answered the green bug, kicking as hard as he could with his long hind legs. "But unless I get out of here soon I won't be anybody!"

Not stopping to ask how it happened, as he might have done had he been a reporter on a newspaper, Mr. Longears reached a long stick down into the brook so Mr. Skip could catch hold of it.

"Now you're all right," said the bunny gentleman as he began to lift the stick, with Mr. Skip clinging to it, out of the water. But as he said that, Uncle Wiggily slipped on the steep bank and down he slid into the water. Not all the way, luckily, but far enough to get his paws wet. But he did not let go his stick and a moment later he had scrambled up the bank with Mr. Skip saved from a watery death.

"Oh, I'm so sorry you slipped in!" sang the green grasshopper.

"That's all right," Uncle Wiggily answered, stamping the water off his paws as best he could. "I am not as wet as you, for you fell all the way in. How did it happen?"

"Oh I was foolish and thought I could jump across the brook at the widest part instead of going down where it was narrow," answer Mr. Skip. "But never mind about me. I'm all right. You had better hurry home and get on dry shoes or you may catch the snuffiezoodic."

"I'll be lucky if I don't get a touch of rheumatism," said the rabbit. "But you are right, I must hop home. Are you feeling better?"

Uncle Wiggily slipped on the steep bank.

"Oh, I'm as jolly as an ice-cream cone now that I'm out of the water," answered the grasshopper. "My legs are good for jumping, but not for swimming. You did me a great favor, and I hope, some day, to return it."

"Nonsense!" cried Uncle Wiggily. "Don't speak about it!"

"Oh, you have a cold in your head already! Hurry home!" begged Mr. Skip and the bunny did so.

He had no sooner reached his bungalow than his rheumatism began to pain him so much he could hardly hobble up the porch. And his wife came out and, not noticing how her husband limped, asked:

"Can you hop to the store to get me some sugar? I am just in the middle of baking a cake. I can't leave it and without sugar the cake will spoil."

"I can't walk, led alode hobbing!" murmured Mr. Longears. "I have a gold and de rubadism! Ouch!"

"Oh, dear! I must put you to bed at once!" his wife said. "But what am I going to do about sugar for the cake? Not a child in sight and——"

"Perhaps I can help you," chirped Mr. Skip who, now quite dry, had followed Uncle Wiggily home to see that the bunny safely reached there. "I'll go get your sugar."

"You're kind!" said Mrs. Longears. "But you could only carry a grain of sugar at a time; just a crumb or two, and I need a pound! No, I'll let the cake go and put Uncle Wiggily to bed."

"Yes, you do that and leave the sugar to me! I'll get it for you!" promised Mr. Skip. "Uncle Wiggily caught cold and rheumatism by helping me so it is only fair I should help him. Don't worry about the pound of sugar. I'll get it!" Mrs. Longears thought this could never be. But let us wait and see what happens. Meanwhile Mr. Longears was put in a warm bed to get over his cold and rheumatism.

TOM MIX HAS CRASHING FINISH IN TALE OF TEXAS RANGERS

Fine Cast Supports Ace of Westerners in Screen Version of Gerald Beaumont's Story of the Falcon of the Law.

Tom Mix has given the screen another sensational, crashing finish to his Fox Film dramas. In "The Outlaws of Red River", the most thrilling of his many death defying acts are in the closing scenes.

Mix has the role of a Texas ranger, known as the Phantom Falcon, who is on the trail of a gang of desperadoes who years before raided an emigrant wagon, killed his foster parents and carried away his foster sister. To enable him to get the evidence against the gang, he pretends to be a desperado and holds up a stage just before the Red River gang were ready to loot. He leads the gang a wild chase and eludes them. After he hides the treasure he allows himself to be captured by the bandits and tells them that he would like to join their gang as there is not enough business for two gangs to operate separately.

Mix is taken to the gang's stockade and introduced to the leader. There he finds his foster sister. He recalls memories that make her remember him and they plan to escape, but the plan is overheard and frustrated. Tom gets away and returns with the Texas Rangers in an armored coach. They drag this to the top of the hill above the bandits' lair and climb in. Then they crash down the hill into the stockade just in time to save the girl from the second in command, who has slain the aged leader.

"The Outlaws of Red River", which is based on Gerald Beaumont's magazine story, will have a showing at the Capitol Theatre, commencing tomorrow.

A cast of unsual merit supports Mix in all roles, including Marjorie Daw, Arthur Clayton, Williiam Conklin, Duke Lee, Virginia Marshall, Ellen Woonston and Francis McDonald.

CAMPBELLFORD NEWS.

CAMPBELLFORD, August 24.—Mr. A. MacLean Haig returned to Toronto yesterday. He will be called to the Bar early in September.

Mr. Steven McGuire is confined to his home through serious illness.

Mrs. J. P. Archer and son Stanton motored to Toronto yesterday. They will visit friends there for several days.

Mr. Frank Osborne motored to Weston last night to spend the remainder of his vacation there. Mrs. Osborne expects to accompany her husband as far as Port Hope, where she will spend a few days.

At 3.30 yesterday afternoon an airplane flew over this town and scattered pamphlets advertising dollar day in Peterborough. The mission would have been more successful had the pilot noticed that there was a strong wind blowing and dropped his literature from a lower altitude. As it was, most of the material found a safe resting place in the Trent River or in some farmers' stubble fields. The machine left town headed in the direction of Warkworth. It is presumed here that the place was what overseas men called a G. S. waggon, and belonged to the Peterborough Flying School.

Mr. Ryder is back in town, and takes over his duties at the express office to-day. Mr. Ryder has been in Toronto for the past few weeks. Mrs Ryder is much better after her serious operation, and is expected to return to town about September first.

The local bowling club was represented in Belleville yesterday by Messrs. Glover, skip, Wiggins, vice, Archer, second, and Birmingham, lead. The rink was well up in the play when the tournament was postponed on account of rain.

"Fighting Youth" is the attraction at the Regent Theatre, with a Harry Langdon two-reeler as a suitable introduction to the feature. The big picture, with Pauline Garron and William Fairbanks as stars, is attracting full houses. Many of the town people are consoling themselves for not having heard the clever coloured musical comedy, "Shufflin' Sam From Alabam." They may yet be given the opportunity as the management of the theatre has requested another booking with the same company.

ANEURYSM IS CURABLE

An aneurism is a widening of the walls of an artery and may occur in any part of the body. In many parts of the body these aneurisms are hard to discover as they are often hidden so far underneath the surface of the body.

The most common form of aneurysm is that which occurs in the aorta, which is a large artery issuing from the top of the heart. The enlargement of this artery is sometimes so great that the ribs covering the chest in that section are pushed out of their normal position and protrude as much as two inches.

You are all, doubtless, familiar with varicose veins. When the arterial walls break down a similar condition is created but such a distention of the arteries is more dangerous due to the pressure of the pulsation of blood being pumped from the heart. These waves of blood pound against the weakened artery until it ruptures completely. Most cases of aneurysm are accompanied by high blood-pressure and hardening of the arteries. When the arterial walls have become calcified they loose their elasticity and, sooner or later, at least, a partial break must occur some place in the arterial system. The blood on its way through the body must pass through the arteries through the capillaries into the veins. In some cases the break occurs in the capillaries and the blood then passes directly from the arteries into the veins.

No matter where the aneurysm occurs the real causes are always hardening of the arteries and high blood-pressure. If these causes can be removed, it is possible to bring about a complete recovery. Such a cure can be accomplished only through the most rigid dietary measures.
